

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE PHOENIX AND THE TURTLE.

Lest the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul precursor of the fiend,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near!

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing.
Save the eagle, feather'd king:
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender makeest
With the breath thou givest and takeest,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead;
Phoenix and the turtle fed
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they loved, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none:
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt the turtle and his queen:
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phoenix' sight;
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appall'd,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together,
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded,

That it cried, How true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threne
To the phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love,
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THE END.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclosed in cinders lie.

Death is now the phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity:
'T was not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 't is not she;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair:
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.

Dr. A. B. Kirkpatrick.

And when thou comest thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with fild talk,
Lest she some subtle practice smell,—
A cripple soon can find a halt :—
But plainly say thou lovest her well,
And set thy person forth to sell.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm ere night :
And then too late she will repent
That thus dissembled her delight ;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say,
' Had women been so strong as men,
In faith, you had not had it then.'

And to her will frame all thy ways :
Spare not to spend, and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing in thy lady's ear :
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble true ;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Press never thou to choose anew :
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought ?

Think women still to strive with men,
To sin and never for to saint :
There is no heaven, by holy then,
When time with age doth them attain.
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But, soft ! enough, too much, I fear ;
Lest that my mistress hear my song,
She will not stick to round me !' the ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long :
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

[xx.]

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dates and fields,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs ;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.

[xxi.]

As it fell upon a day
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring ;
Every thing did banish moan,
Save the nightingale alone :
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-til a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty,
That to hear it was great pity :
'Fie, fie, fie,' now would she cry ;
'Tereu, tereu !' by and by ;
That to hear her so complain,
Scarce I could from tears refrain ;
For her griefs, so lively shown,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah, thought I, thou mourn'st in vain !
None takes pity on thy pain :
Senseless trees they cannot hear thee ;
Ruthless beasts they will not cheer thee ;
King Pandion he is dead ;
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead ;
All thy fellow birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.
Whilst as sickle Fortune smiled,
Thou and I were both beguiled.

Every one that flatters thee
Is no friend in misery.
Words are easy, like the wind ;
Faithful friends are hard to find :
Every man will be thy friend
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend ;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call,
And with such-like flattering,
'Pity but he were a king ;'
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice ;
If to women he be bent,
They have at commandment :
But if Fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown ;
They that fawn'd on him before
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need :
If thou sorrow, he will weep ;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep ;
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
There are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

xv.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
 My heart doth charge the watch; the morning
 Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest. [rise
 Not daring turn the office of mine eyes,
 While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and mark,
 And wish her lays were tuned like the lark;
 For she doth welcome daylight with her ditty,
 And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night:
 The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
 Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;

Sorrow changed to solace, solace mixed with sorrow; [morrow.
 For why, she sigh'd and bade me come to-

Were I with her, the night would pass too soon;
 But now are minutes added to the hours;
 To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;
 Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
 Pack night, peep day; good day, of night now borrow:
 Short, night, to-night, and length thyself tomorrow.

SONNETS TO SUNDRY NOTES OF MUSIC.

[xvi.]

It was a lordling's daughter, the fairest one of three, [be,
 That liked of her master as well as well might Till looking on an Englishman, the fair at that
 Her fancy fell a-turning. [eye could see,
 Long was the combat doubtful that love with love did fight, [knight:
 To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant
 To put in practice either, alas, it was a spite Unto the silly damsel! [pain
 But one must be refused; more mickle was the
 That nothing could be used to turn them both to gain, [with disdain:
 For of the two the trusty knight was wounded
 Alas, she could not help it! [day,
 Thus art with arms contending was victor of the
 Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away: [gay
 Then, lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady
 For now my song is ended.

On a day, alack the day!
 Love, whose month was ever May,
 Spied a blossom passing fair,
 Playing in the wanton air:
 Through the velvet leaves the wind,
 All unseen, gan passage find;
 That the lover, sick to death,
 Wish'd himself the heaven's breath,
 'Air,' quoth he, 'thy cheeks may blow;
 Air, would I might triumph so!
 But, alas! my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
 Vow, alack! for youth unmeet:
 Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
 Thou for whom Jove would swear
 Juno but an Ethiope were;
 And deny himself for Jove,
 Turning mortal for thy love.'

[xviii.]

My flocks feed not,
 My ewes breed not,
 My rams speed not,
 All is amiss:
 Love's denying,
 Faith's defying,
 Heart's renying,
 Cause of this.
 All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
 All my lady's love is lost, God wot:

Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
 There a nay is placed without remove.
 One silly cross
 Wrought all my loss:
 O frowning Fortune, cursed, sickle dame!
 For now I see
 Inconstancy
 More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
 All fears scorn I,
 Love hath forlorn me,
 Living in thrall:
 Heart is bleeding,
 All help needing,
 O cruel speeding,
 Frighted with gall.
 My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal;
 My weaver's bell rings doleful knell;
 My curtail dog, that wont to have play'd,
 Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
 My sighs so deep
 Procure to weep,
 In howling wise, to see my doleful plight.
 How sighs resound
 Through heartless ground, [sight!
 Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody

Clear wells spring not,
 Sweet birds sing not,
 Green plants bring not Forth their dye:
 Herds stand weeping,
 Flocks all sleeping,
 Nymphs back peeping
 Fearfully:
 All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
 All our merry meetings on the plains,
 All our evening sport from us is fled,
 All our love is lost, for Love is dead.
 Farewell, sweet lass,
 Thy like ne'er was [moan:
 For a sweet content, the cause of all my Poor Corydon
 Must live alone;
 Other help for him I see that there is none.

xix.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
 And stall'd the deer that thou shouldst strike,
 Let reason rule things worthy blame,
 As well as fancy partial might:
 Take counsel of some wiser head,
 Neither too young nor yet unwed.

Under an oeler growing by a brook,
A brook where Adon used to cool his spleen :
Hot was the day : she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim:
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly as this queen on him.
He, spying her, bounced in, whereas he stood :
'O Jove,' quoth she, 'why was not I a flood!'

VII.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as sickle ;
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty ;
Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is, brittle ;
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty :
A lily pale, with damask dye to grace her,
None fairer, nor none fairer to deface her.

Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing !

How many tales to please me hath she coin'd,
Dreading my love, the loss thereof still fearing !
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.

She burn'd with love, as straw with fire flameth ;
She burn'd out love, as soon as straw out-burneth ;

She framed the love, and yet she foil'd the frame ;
She bade love last, and yet she fell a-turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether ?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VIII.

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me,
Because thou lovest the one, and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense :
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Thou lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phoebus' lute, the queen of music, makes ;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd
When as himself to singing he betakes.

One god is god of both, as poets feign : [main.
One knight loves both, and both in thee re-

IX.

Fair was the morn when the fair queen of love,
Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a younger proud and wild ;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill :
Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds :
She, silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds :
'Once,' quoth she, 'did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth !
See, in my thigh,' quoth she, 'here was the sore.'
She showed hers : he saw more wounds than one.

And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

X.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon
vaded.
Pluck'd in the bud, and vaded in the spring !

Bright orient pearl, alack, too timely shaded !
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting !

Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree, [be.
And falls, through wind, before the fall should

I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have ;
For why thou left'st me nothing in thy will :
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave ;
For why I craved nothing of thee still :
O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee,
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

XI.

Venus, with young Adonis sitting by her
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him : [her,
She told the youngling how god Mars did try
And as he fell to her, so fell she to him.
'Even thus,' quoth she, 'the warlike god embraced me,'
And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms ;
'Even thus,' quoth she, 'the warlike god unlaced
me.'

As if the boy should use like loving charms ;
'Even thus,' quoth she, 'he seized on my lips,'
And with her lips on his did act the seizure ;
And as she fetched breath, away he skips. [ure.
And would not take her meaning nor her pleas-
Ah, that I had my lady at this bay,
To kiss and clipp me till I run away !

XII.

Crabbed age and youth cannot live together :
Youth is full of pleasure, age is full of care : [er ;
Youth like summer morn, age like winter weath-
Youth like summer brave, age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport, age's breath is short ;
Youth is nimble, age is lame ;
Youth is hot and bold, age is weak and cold ;
Youth is wild, and age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee ; youth, I do adore thee ;
O, my love, my love is young !
Age, I do defy thee : O, sweet shepherd, hie thee,
For methinks thou stay'st too long.

XIII.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good ;
A shining glass that vadeth suddenly :
A flower that dies when first it gins to bud ;
A brittle glass that's broken presently :
A doubtful good, a glass, a flower,
Lost, vaded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as goods lost are sold or never found,
As vaded glass no rubbing will refresh,
As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress,
So beauty blemish'd once is for ever lost,
In spite of physic, painting, pain and cost.

XIV.

Good-night, good rest, Ah, neither be my share :
She bade good-night that kept my rest away ;
And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care.
To decant on the doubts of my decay. [morrow :
'Farewell,' quoth she, 'and come again to-
Fare well I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether :
T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
T may be, again to make me wander thither :
'Wander,' a word for shadows like myself,
As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

All melting; though our drops this difference bore,

His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

'In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to caustels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows:

'That not a heart which in his level came
Could 'scape the hail of his all-hurting aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And, well'd in them, did win whom he would maim:

Against the thing he sought he would exclaim;

When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and praised cold chastity.

'Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed send he cover'd;
That th' unexperient gave the tempter place,
Which like a cherubin above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd?
Ay me! I fell; and yet do question make
What I should do again for such a sake.

'O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forced thunder from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion seeming owed,
Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid!'

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies.
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unskilful in the world's false forgeries.

Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although I know my years be past the best,
I smiling credit her false-speaking tongue,
Outfacing faults in love with love's ill rest.
But wherefore says my love that she is young?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is a soothing tongue,
And age, in love, loves not to have years told.

Therefore I'll lie with love, and love with me,
Since that our faults in love thus smother'd be.

II.

Two loves I have, of comfort and despair,
That like two spirits do suggest me still;
My better angel is a man right fair,
My worser spirit a woman colour'd ill.

To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her fair pride.

And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell:
For being both to me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:

The truth I shall not know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out. /

III.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
Gainst whom the world could not hold argu-
Persuade my heart to this false perjury? [ment,
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then, thou fair sun, that on this earth doth shine,
Exhale this vapour vow: in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine.

If you broke, what fool is not so wise
To break an oath, to win a paradise?

IV.

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and
there,

Touchees so soft still conquer chastity.
But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refused to take her figured proffer.
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward:

He rose and ran away; ah, fool too froward!

V.

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?

O never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove:

Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes, [prehend.

Where all those pleasures live that art can com-
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice: [commend;

Well learned is that tongue that well can thee
All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder: [admire:

Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts ad-Thine eye love's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder.

Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O do not love that wrong.
To sing heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.

VI.

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing tarriance for Adonis made

Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew,
Saw how deceit was gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
Thought characters and words merely but art,
And bastards of his foul adulterate heart.

'And long upon these terms I held my city,
Till thus he gan besiege me: "Gentle maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to ye sworn to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never woo.

"All my offences that abroad you see
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not: with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind: [And:
They sought their shame that so their shame did
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproch contains.

"Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen,
Or any of my pleasures ever charm'd:
Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd:
Kept hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
And reign'd, commanding in his monarchy.

"Look here, what tributes wounded fancie sent
Of paled pearls and rubies red as blood; [me,
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood [me
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

"And, lo, behold these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd,
I have received from many a several fair:
Their kind acceptance wearily beseech'd,
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sonnets that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.

"The diamond, — why, 'twas beautiful and hard,
Whereto his invised properties did tend;
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objects manifold: each several stone,
With wit well blason'd, smiled or made some moan.

"Lo, all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensived and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I heard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and ender:
For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you enpatron me.

"O, then, advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these smiles to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise:
What me your minister, for you obey,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distract parcels in combined sums.

"Lo, this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest harings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest cost,

But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

"But, O my sweet, what labour is't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives,
Playing the place which did no form receive,
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyves?
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle 'scape by the flight,
And makes her absence vallant, not her might,

"O, pardon me, in that my boast is true:
The accident which brought me to her eye
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly:
Religious love put out Religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immured,
And now, to tempt, all liberty procured.

"How mighty then you are, O, hear me tell!
The broken booms that to me belong
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all consent,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

"My parts had power to charm a sacred nun,
Who, disciplined, ay, dieted in grace,
Believ'd her eyes when they to assail begun,
All vows and consecrations giving place:
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

"When thou impresses, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame!
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense,
'gainst shame,
And sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The aloes of all forces, shocks, and fears.

"Now all these hearts — that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine;
And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the batters that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft assistance to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath
That shall prefer and undertake my troth."

"This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were level'd on my face:
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow'd apace:
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who glazed with crystal gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue enclooses.

"O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear!
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extirpate hath.

"For, lo, his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolved my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
Shook off my sober guards and civil fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,

Of folded schedules had she many a one, [slood :
Which she perused, sigh'd, tore, and gave the Crack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud ;
Found yet moe letters sadly penn'd in blood,
With sleided silk fast and adjectively
Enswathed, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

Those often bathed she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear ;
Cried 'O false blood, thou register of lies,
What unapproved witness dost thou bear !
Ink would have seem'd more black and damned
here !'

This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that grazed his cattle nigh —
Sometimes a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest horse, observed as they flew —
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew,
And, privileged by age, desires to know,
In brief the grounds and motives of her woe.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,
And comely-distant sits he by her side ;
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide :
If that from him there may be aught applied
Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
'Tis promised in the charity of age.

'Father,' she says, 'though in me you behold
The injury of many a blasting hour,
Let it not tell your judgment I am old ;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power :
I might as yet have been a spreading flower,
Fresh to myself, if I had self-applied
Love to myself and to no love beside.

'But, woe is me ! too early I attended
A youthful suit — it was to gain my grace —
Of one by nature's onwards so commended,
That maidens' eyes stuck over all his face :
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place ;
And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodged and newly defied.

'His brown locks did hang in crooked curls ;
And every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips their silken parcels hurle.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find :
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind,
For on his visage was in little drawn
What largeness thinks in Paradise was sown.

'Small show of man was yet upon his chin ;
His phoenix down began but to appear
Like unshorn velvet on that termless skin [wear :
Whose bare out-brag'd the web it seem'd to
Yet show'd his visage by that cost more dear ;
And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
If best were as it was, or best without.

'His qualities were beauteous as his form.
For maiden-tongued he was, and thereof free ;
Yet, if men moved him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see, (be.
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they
His rudeness so with his authorized youth
Did lively falseness in a pride of truth.

'Well could he ride, and often men would say
"That horse his mettle from his rider takes :

Proud of subjection, noble by the sway,
What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop he makes !"

And controversy hence a question takes,
Whether the horse by him become his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

'But quickly on this side the verdict went :
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament,
Accomplish'd in himself, not in his case :
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions : yet their purposed trim
Pieced not his grace, but were all graced by him.

'So on the tip of his subduing tongue
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All replication prompt, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep :
To make the weeper laugh, the laugher weep,
He had the dialect and different skill,
Catching all passions in his craft of will :

'That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old : and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted ;
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted ;
And dialogued for him what he would say,
Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.

'Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind ;
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, therein thought assign'd :
And labouring in moe pleasures to bestow them
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe
them :

'So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly supposed them mistresses of his heart.
My woeful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, not in part,
What with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserved the stalk and gave him all my flower.

'Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired yielded ;
Finding myself in honour so forbid.
With safest distance I mine honour shielded :
Experience for me many bulwarks build'd
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spot.

'But, ah, who ever shunn'd by precedent
The destined ill she must herself assay ?
Or forced examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-past perils in her way ?
Counsel may stop awhile what will not stay ;
For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

'Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof :
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behoof :
O appetite, from judgment stand aloof !
The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
Though Reason weep, and cry "It is thy last."

'For further I could say "This man's untrue,"
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling :

CL.

O, from what power hast thou this powerful might
 With insufficiency my heart to sway?
 To make me give the lie to my true sight, [day?
 And swear that brightness doth not grace the Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
 That in the very refuse of thy deeds
 There is such strength and warrantless of skill
 That, in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds?
 Who taught thee how to make me love thee more
 The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
 O, though I love what others do abhor,
 With others thou shouldst not abhor my state:
 If thy unworthiness raised love in me,
 More worthy I to be beloved of thee.

CLII.

Love is too young to know what conscience is;
 Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
 Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amies,
 Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove:
 For, thou betraying me, I do betray
 My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
 My soul doth tell my body that he may Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason:
 But, rising at thy name, doth point out thee
 As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
 He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
 To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
 No want of conscience hold it that I call
 Her 'love' for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLIII.

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
 But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing.
 In act thy bed-vow broke and new faith torn
 In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
 But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
 When I break twenty? I am perjured most;
 For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee

And all my honest faith in thee is lost, [ness,
 For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kind-
 Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy,
 And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
 Or made them swear against the thing they see;
 For I have sworn thee fair; more perjured I,
 To swear against the truth so foul a lie!

CLIII.

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep:
 A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
 And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
 In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
 Which borrow'd from this holy fire of Love
 A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
 And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
 But at my mistress' eye Love's brand new-fired,
 The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
 I, sick withal, the help of balm desired,
 And thither hied, a sad temper'd guest,
 But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
 Where Cupid got new fire—my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.

The little Love-god lying once asleep
 Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
 Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand [keep
 The fairest votary took up that fire
 Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
 And so the general of hot desire
 Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
 This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
 Which from Love's fire took heat perpetual,
 Growing a bath and healthful remedy
 For men diseased; but I, my mistress' thrall,
 Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
 Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
 A plaintful story from a sistering vale,
 My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
 And down I laid to list the sad-tuned tale;
 Ere long espied a sickle maid full pale,
 Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
 Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
 Which fortified her visage from the sun,
 Whereon the thought might think sometime it
 The carcass of a beauty spent and done: [saw
 Time had not scorch'd all that youth begun,
 Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fell rage,
 Some beauty peep'd through lattice of fear'd age.

Oh did she heave her napkin to her eye,
 Which on it had conceited characters,
 Laundering the silken figures in the brine
 That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
 And often reading what contents it bears;
 As often shrieking undistinguish'd woe,
 In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her levell'd eyes their carriage ride,
 As they did battery to the spheres intend:
 Sometime diverted their poor balls are tied
 To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
 Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
 To every place at once, and, nowhere fix'd.
 The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose nor tied in formal plait,
 Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride.
 For some, untuck'd, descended her sheaved hat,
 Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
 Some in her threaden fillet still did bide,
 And true to bondage would not break from thence,
 Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew
 Of amber, crystal, and of beaded jet,
 Which one by one she in a river threw,
 Upon whose weeping margin she was set;
 Like usury, applying wet to wet,
 Or monarch's hands that let not bounty fall fall.
 Where want cries come, but where excess begs

But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleased to dote; [ed,
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delight-
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste, nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
Who leaves unsway'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin awards me pain.

CXLI.

Love is my sin and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving:
O, but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving;
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profaned their scarlet ornaments
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine,
Bob'd others' beds' revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lovest those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example mayest thou be denied!

CXLI.

Lo! as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay,
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I thy babe chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou mayest have thy 'Will,
If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXLI.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still:
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worser spirit a woman colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:
Yet this shall I never know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLI.

Those lips that love's own hand did make
Breathed forth the sound that said 'I hate'
To me that languish'd for her sake;
But when she saw my woeful state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue that ever sweet
Was used in giving gentle doom,
And taught it thus anew to greet;
'I hate' she alter'd with an end,
That follow'd it as gentle day

Doth follow night, who like a fiend
From heaven to hell is flown away;
'I hate' from hate away she threw,
And saved my life, saying 'not you.'

CXLI.

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
... these rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within and suffer death,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on men,
And Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLI.

My love is as a fever, longing still
For that which longer nureth the disease,
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve Desire in death, which physician did except.
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic-mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as ma' men's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair and thought thee
bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLI.

O me, what eyes hath Love puf in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
O, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's 'No.'
How can it? O, how can Love's eye be true,
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel then, though I mistake my view;
The sun itself sees not till heaven clears.
O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLI.

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I against myself with thee partake?
Do I not think on thee, when I forget
Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who hateth thee that I do call my friend?
On whom frown'st at thou that I do fawn upon?
Nay, if thou lour'st on me, do I not spend
Revenge upon myself with present moan?
What merit do I in myself respect,
That is so proud thy service to despise,
When all my best doth worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
But, love, hate on, for naught I know thy mind;
Those that can see thou lovest, and I am blind.

Have put on black and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that waters in the even
Doth half that glory to the sober west.
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O, let it then as well besetom thy heart;
Tomorrow for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear beauty herself is black
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.

Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Let's not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweetest friend must be:
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engross'd:
Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken;
A torment thrice threefold thus to be cross'd:
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use ruzour in my gaol;
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

CXXXIV.

So, now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgaged to thy will,
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous and he is kind;
He learn'd but surely-like to write for me
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me:
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy 'Will,'
And 'Will' to boot, and 'Will' in overplus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus:
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in 'Will,' add to thy 'Will'
One will of mine, to make thy large 'Will' more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one 'Will.'

CXXXVI.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy 'Will,'
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love my love-suit, sweet, fulfil.
'Will' will fulfil the treasure of thy love,
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one,
In things of great receipt with ease we prove
Among a number one is reckon'd none:
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy stores account I one must be;
For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee:

Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lovest me, for my name is 'Will.'

CXXXVII.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine
eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is take the worst to be.
If eyes corrupt by over-partial looks
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
Whereto the judgment of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot
Which my heart knows the wide world's common place?
Or mine eyes seeing this, say this is not,
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have erred.
And to this false plague are they now trans-

CXXXVIII.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue:
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd.
But wherefore says she not she is unjust?
And wherefore says not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love loves not to have years told:
Therefore I lie with her and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.

CXXXIX.

O, call not me to justify the wrong
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eyes but with thy tongue;
Use power with power and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lovest elsewhere, but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside:
What need'st thou wound with cunning when thy might
Is more than my o'er-press'd defence can bide?
Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies,
And therefore from my face she turns my foe.
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries:
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me outright with looks and rid my pain.

CXL.

Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain:
Lest sorrow lend me words and woe express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet love, to tell me so;
As teasy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know;
For if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee:
Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be,
That I may not be so, nor thou believ'd,
Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXLI.

In faith, I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;

To me are nothing novel, nothing strange:
They are but dressings of a former sight.
Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old,
And rather make them born to our desire
Than think that we before have heard them told.
Thy registers and thee I both defy,
Not wondering at the present nor the past,
For thy records and what we see doth lie,
Made more or less by thy continual haste.
This I do vow and this shall ever be:
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

CXIV.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for Fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
As subject to Time's love or to Time's hate,
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers
No, it was builded far from accident; [gather'd
It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
Whereto the inviting time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which works on leases of short-number'd hours,
But all alone stands hugely politic, [showers.
That it nor grows with heat nor drowns with
To this I witness call the fools of time, [crime,
Which die for goodness, who have lived for

CXV.

Were't aught to me I bore the canopy,
With my extern the outward honouring,
Or laid great bases for eternity,
Which prove more short than waste or ruining?
Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent,
For compound sweet forgoing simple savour,
Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
No, let me be obsequious in thy heart,
And take that thou my oblation, poor but free,
Which is not mix'd with seconds, knows no art,
But mutual render, only me for thee.
Hence, thou suborn'd informer! a true soul
When most impeach'd stands least in thy controul.

CXVI.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
Dost hold Time's fickle glass, his sickle, hour:
Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
Thy lovers withering as thy sweet self grow'st:
If Nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May time disgrace and wretched minutes kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure!
She may detain, but not still keep, her treasure:
Her audit, though delay'd, answer must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

CXVII.

In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
Fairing the foul with art's false borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,
But is profaned, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore my mistress' brows are raven black,
Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seem

At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Slandering creation with a false esteem:
Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
That every tongue says beauty should look so.

CXVIII.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand, [reap,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest
At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand!
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more bleat than living lips.
Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

CXIX.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjur'd, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust,
Enjoy'd no sooner but despised straight,
Past reason hunted, and no sooner had
Past reason hated, as a swallow'd bait
On purpose laid to make the taker mad;
Mad in pursuit and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof, and proved, a very woe;
Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.
All this the world well knows; yet none knows
well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

CXX.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go;
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground.
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she belied with false compare.

CXXI.

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art, [cruel;
As thou whose beauties proudly make them
For well thou know'st to my dear dotting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan;
To say they err I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear.
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place.
In nothing art thou black as we in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXII.

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart torments me with disdain,

Or whether shall I say, mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchemy,
To make of monsters and things indigest,
Such cherubims as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O, 'tis the first: 'tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is 'gree-
And to his palate doth prepare the cup: [ing,
If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it and doth first begin.

CXV.

Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer:
Yet then my judgment knew no reason why [er,
My most full flame should afterwards burn clear.
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in'twixt vows and change decrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'th intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering
Alas, why, fearing of time's tyranny, [things;
Might I not then say 'Now I love you best,'
When I was certain o'er incertainty,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?
Love is a babe: then might I not say so, [grow?
To give full growth to that which still doth

CXVI.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O, no! it is an ever-fixed mark
That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height
be taken. [cheeks
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

CXVII.

Accuse me thus: that I have scanted all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay,
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day:
That I have frequent been with unknown minds
And given to time your own dear-purchased
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds [right;
Which should transport me farthest from your Book both my wilfulness and errors down [sight.
And on just proof surmise accumulate;
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate;
Since my appeal says I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXVIII.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge,
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness when we purge,
Even so, being full of your ne'er-cloying sweet-
ness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meetness
To be diseased ere that there was true needing.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The life that were not, grew to faults assured

And brought to medicine a healthful state
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured:
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

CXIX.

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distill'd from limbeck's fowl as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been
In the distraction of this madding fever! [stet
O benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return rebuked to my content
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXX.

That you were once unkind befriends me now,
And for that sorrow which I then did feel
Needs must I under my transgression bow,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
For if you were by my unkindness slucken
As I by yours, you've pass'd a hell of time,
And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime.
O, that our night of woe might have remember'd
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits,
And soon to you, as you to me, then tender'd
The humble salve which wounded bosoms fit!
But that your trespass now becomes a fee: [me,
Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom

CXXI.

'Tis better to be vile than vile esteem'd,
When not to be receives reproach of being,
And the just pleasure lost which is so deem'd
Not by our feeling but by others' seeing:
For why should others' false adulterate eyes
Give salutation to my sportive blood?
Or on my frailties why are frailer spies,
Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
No, I am that I am, and they that level
At my abuses reckon up their own.
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel; [shown;
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be Unless this general evil they maintain,
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXXII.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory,
Which shall above that idle rank remain
Beyond all date, even to eternity:
Or at the least, so long as brain and heart
Have faculty by nature to substat;
Till each to razed oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd.
That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tallies thy dear love to score:
Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more:
To keep an adjunct to remember thee
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXXIII.

No, Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change:
Thy pyramids built up with newer might

Since all alike my songs and praises be
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse to constancy confined,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
'Fair, kind, and true' is all my argument,
'Fair, kind, and true' varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
'Fair, kind, and true,' have often lived alone,
Which three till now never kept seat in one.

CVI.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Supposed as forfeit to a confined doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;
Incertainties now crown themselves assured
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes;
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.

What's in the brain that ink may character
Which hath not figured to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what new to register,
That may express my love or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same,
Counting no old thing odd, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's fresh case
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page,
Finding the first conceit of love there bred
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CIX.

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my faith to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love; if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,

That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CX.

Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view, Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new;
Most true it is that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely: but, by all above,
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays proved thee my best of love.
Now all is done, have what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confined. [best,
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

CXI.

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide [breeds.
Than public means which public manners
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand:
Pity me then and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eisel 'gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow?
You are my all the world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your
None else to me, nor I to none alive, [tongue;
That my steel'd sense or changes right or wrong.
In so profound abyss I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic and to flatterer stopp'd are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense:
You are so strongly in my purpose bred
That all the world besides methinks are dead.

CXIII.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind;
And that which governs me to go about
Doth part his function and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out;
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch:
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rudest or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour or deform'd creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The rock or dove, it shapes them to your feature:
Incapable of more, repete with you, [true.
My most true mind thus makes mine eye un-

CXIV.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with
you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery?

Both grace and faults are loved of more and less;
 Thou makest faults graces that to thee resort.
 As on the finger of a throned queen
 The basest jewel will be well esteem'd,
 So are those errors that in thee are seen
 To truths translated and for true things deem'd.
 How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
 If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
 How many gazers might thou lead away,
 If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state!
 But do not so; I love thee in such sort
 As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

xcvii.

How like a winter hath my absence been
 From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
 What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
 What old December's bareness every where!
 And yet this time removed was summer's time,
 The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
 Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
 Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:
 Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
 But hope of orphans and unfather'd fruit;
 For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
 And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
 Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer
 That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

xcviii.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
 When proud-pied April dress'd in all his trim
 Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing,
 That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him.
 Yet nor the lays of birds nor the sweet smell
 Of different flowers in odour and in hue
 Could make me any summer's story tell,
 Or from their proud lap pluck them where they
 Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
 Nor praise the deep vermillion in the rose;
 They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
 Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
 Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
 As with your shadow I with these did play:

xcix.

The forward violet thus did I chide: [that smelt,
 Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet
 If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
 Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells
 In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dyed.
 The lily I condemned for thy hand,
 And buds of marjoram had stol'n thy hair:
 The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
 One blushing shame, another white despair:
 A third, not red nor white, had stol'n of both
 And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
 But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
 A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
 More flowers I noted, yet I none could see
 But sweet or colour it had stol'n from thee!

c.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
 To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
 Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
 Darkening thy power to lend base subjects light?
 Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
 In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
 Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem
 And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
 Else, refty Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
 If Time have any wrinkle graven there;

If any, be a satire to decay,
 And make Time's spoils despised every where.
 Give my love fame faster than Time wastes life;
 So thou prevent'st his piracy and crook'd knife.

ci.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends
 For thy neglect of truth in beauty dyed?
 Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
 So dost thou too, and therein dignified.
 Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not laply say 'Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
 Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
 But best is best, if never intermix'd?'
 Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
 Excuse not silence so; for 't lies in thee
 To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
 And to be praised of ages yet to be.
 Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
 To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seeming;
 I love not less, though less the show appear:
 That love is merchandized whose rich esteeming
 The owner's tongue doth publish every where.
 Our love was new and then but in the spring
 When I was wont to greet it with my lays,
 As Philomel in summer's front doth sing
 And stops her pipe in growth of ripper days:
 Not that the summer is less pleasant now [light,
 Than when her mournful hymns did hush the
 But that wild music burthens every bough [light.
 And sweets grown common lose their dear de-
 Therefore like her I sometime hold my tongue,
 Because I would not dull you with my song.

ciii.

Alack, what poverty my Muse brings forth,
 That having such a scope to show her pride,
 The argument all bare is of more worth
 Than when it hath my added praise beside!
 O, blame me not, if I no more can write!
 Look in your glass, and there appears a face
 That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
 Dulling my lines and doing me disgrace,
 Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
 To mar the subject that before was well?
 For to no other pass my verses tend
 Than of your graces and your gifts to tell; [ait
 And more, much more, than in my verse can
 Your own glass shows you when you look in it.

civ.

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
 For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
 Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
 Have from the forest shook three summers' pride,
 Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
 In process of the seasons have I seen,
 Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
 Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
 Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial-hand,
 Steal from his figure and no pace perceived;
 So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth
 stand,
 Hath motion and mine eye may be deceived:
 For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred;
 Ere you were born was beauty's summer dead.

cv.

Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
 Nor my beloved as an idol show,

The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gavest, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gavest it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprielion growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

When thou shalt be disposed to set me light
And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight [sworn].
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art for-
With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted,
That thou in loving me shalt win much glory:
And I by this will be a gainer too:
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.
Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence;
Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt,
Against thy reasons making no defence.
Thou canst not love, disgrace me half so ill,
To set a form upon desired change,
As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strange and look strange,
Be absent from thy walks, and in my tongue
Thy sweet beloved name no more shall dwell,
Lest I, too much profane, should do it wrong
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
For thee against myself I'll vow debate,
For I must never love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss: [row,
Ah, do not, when my heart hath 'scaped this sor-
Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe;
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purposed overthrow.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might,
And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
Compared with loss of thee will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their bodies' force,
Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill,
Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horses;
And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
Wherein it finds a joy above the rest:
But these particulars are not my measure;
All these I better in one general best.
Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,

Of more delight than hawks or horses be;
And having thee, of all men's pride I boast:
Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take
All this away and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
For term of life thou art assured mine,
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
When in the least of them my life hath end.
I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend;
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
O, what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?
Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not.

XCIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:
For there can live no natter in thine eye,
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange,
But heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be, [tell,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness
How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

XCIV.

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow,
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:
For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

XCV.

How sweet and lovely doth thou make the shame
Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name!
O, in what sweets doth thou thine sins enclose!
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot dispraise but in a kind of praise;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a mansion have those vices got
Which for thy habitation chose out thee,
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things turn to fair that eyes can see!
Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege;
The hardest knife ill-used doth lose his edge.

XCVI.

Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say thy grace is youth and gentle sport;

As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poetry disperses,
Thine eyes that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
But thou art all my art and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXXII.

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace,
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd
And my sick Muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen,
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent
He robs thee of and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue and he stole that word
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give
And found it in thy cheek; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!
But since your worth, wide as the ocean is,
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark inferior far to his
On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
Your shallower help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building and of goodly pride:
Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
The worst was this; my love was my decay.

LXXXI.

Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten;
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read,
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live — such virtues hath my tongue — [mouths of men.]
Where breath most breathe, even in the

LXXXII.

I grant thou wert not married to my Muse
And therefore mayst without attaint o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise,
And therefore art enforced to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devised
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,

Thou truly fair wert truly sympathized
In true plain words by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better used
Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abused.

LXXXIII.

I never saw that you did painting need
And therefore to your fair no painting set;
I found, or thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt;
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you yourself being extant well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short.
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow,
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I impair not beauty being mute.
When others would give life and bring a tomb,
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXIV.

Who is it that says most? which can say more
Than this rich praise, that you alone are you?
In whose confine immured is the store
Which should example where your equal grew.
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired every where.
You to your beauties blessings add a curse,
Being found on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.

My tongue-tied Muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly compiled,
Reserve their character with golden quill
And precious phrase by all the Muses filed.
I think good thoughts whilst other write good
words,
And like unletter'd clerk still cry 'Amen'
To every hymn that able spirit affords
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you praised, I say 'Tis so, 'tis true,'
And to the most of praise add something more;
But that in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.
Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all too precious you,
That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhearse,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that truck me dead?
No, neither he, nor his compassers by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost,
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence,
As victors of my silence cannot boast;
I was not sick of any fear from thence;
But when your countenance fill'd up his line,
Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVII.

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:

All tongues, the voice of souls, give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend;
Thy outward thus with outward praise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine
In other accents do this praise confound [own
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then, churl, thy thoughts, although their eyes were kind,

To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The solve is this, that thou dost common grow.

LXX.

That thou art blamed shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being woo'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast pass'd by the ambush of young days,
Either not assail'd or victor being charged;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy evermore enlarged:

If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

LXXI.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it: for I love you so
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O, if I say, you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compound am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay.
Lest the wise world should look into your moan
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit lived in me, that you should love
After my death, dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I
Than biggard truth would willingly impart:
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
For I am shamed by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds
In me thou see'st the twilight of such day [saw.
As after sunset fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest,
In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,

As the death-bed whereon it must expire
Consumed with that which it was nourish'd by.
This thou perceivest, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere

LXXIV.

But be contented: when that fall arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee:
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead,
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.

So are you to my thoughts as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground;
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer and anon
Doubting the flitching age will steal his treasure,
Now counting best to be with you alone, [sure;
Then better'd that the world may see my pleas-
Sometime all full with feasting on your sight
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is had or must from you be took.
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.

Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
So far from variation or quick change?
Why with the time do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Showing their birth and where they did proceed?
O, know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent:
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love still telling what is told.

LXXVII.

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning mayst thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show
Of mouthed graves will give thee memory:
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth mayst know
Time's thievish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory can not contain [and Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt
Those children nursed, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee and much enrich thy book.

LXXVIII.

So oft have I invoked thee for my Muse,
And found such fair assistance in thy Muse,

Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crouk'd eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transax the fourish set on youth
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow,
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow:
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.

Is it thy will thy image should keep open
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows like to thee do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home into my deeds to pry,
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenour of thy jealousy?
O, no! thy love, though much, is not so great:
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake:
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake: [where,
For thee watch I whilst thou dost wake else-
From me far off, with others all too near.

LXII.

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye
And all my soul and all my very part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worths surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
Self so self-loving were iniquity.
Tis thee, myself, that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

LXIII.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With Time's injurious hand crush'd and o'er-worn;
When hours have drain'd his blood and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night, [morn
And all those beauties whereof now he's king
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life:
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them still green.

LXIV.

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-rased
And brass eternal slat to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;

Rain hath taught me thus to raminate,
That Time will come and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless
And sad mortality o'er-ways their power, [see,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower,
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest he hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O, none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXVI.

Tired with all these, for restless death I cry,
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
And strength by limping awe disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly doctor-like controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill: [gone,
Tired with all these, from these would I be Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVII.

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his provence grace impetly,
That sin by him advantage should achieve
And lace itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek
And steal dead seeming of the living hue?
Why should poor beauty ludicrously seek
Excess of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now Nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVIII.

Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn,
When beauty lived and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were born,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head:
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth Nature store,
To show false Art what beauty was of yore.

LXIX.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view [mend;
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can

From where thou art why should I haste me
Till I return, or posting be no need. [thence?
O, what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the
In winged speed no motion shall I know: [wind;
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace;
Therefore desire, of perfect love being made,
Shall neigh — no dull flesh — in his fiery race;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade;
Since from thee going he went wilful-slow,
Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure.
Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare,
Since, seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special best,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.

What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you:
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian ties are painted new:
Speak of the spring and fobion of the year;
The one doth shadow of your beauty show,
The other as your bounty doth appear;
And you in every blessed shape we know.
In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.

O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye
As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds dis-
But, for their virtue only is their show, [closes:
They live unwood'd and unrespectful fade.
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distills your truth.

LV.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme:
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone besom'd with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall
The living record of your memory. [burn
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity [room
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find

Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.

Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes even till they wink with full-
To-morrow see again, and do not kill [ness,
The spirit of love with a perpetual dullness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be [new
Which parts the shore, where two contracted Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view;
Else call it winter, which being full of care
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

LVII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour
When you have bid your servant once adieu;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought
Save, where you are, how happy you make those.
So true a fool is love that in your will,
Though you do any thing, he thinks no ill.

LVIII.

That god forbid that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure!
O, let me suffer, being at your beck,
The imprison'd absence of your liberty; [check,
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list, your charter is so strong
That you yourself may privilege your time
To what you will; to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
Which, labouring for invention, bear smiles
The second burden of a former child?
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are mendred, or whether better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O, sure I am, the wife of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

LX.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled
So do our minutes hasten to their end; [shore,

That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly;
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye: her;
Thou dost love her, because thou know'st I love
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

XLIII.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unrespected;
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And darkly bright are bright in dark directed.
Then thou, whose shadow shadows doth make
bright,
How would thy shadow's form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so!
How would, I say, mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day,
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay!
All days are nights to see till I see thee,
And nights bright days when dreams do show thee me.

XLIV.

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injurious distance should not stop my way;
For then despite of space I would be brought,
From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
No matter then although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth removed from thee;
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land
As soon as think the place where he would be.
But, ah! that think kills me that I am not thought,
To leap large lengths of miles when thou art gone,
But that so much of earth and water wrought
I must attend time's leisure with my moan,
Receiving nought by elements so slow,
But heavy tears, badges of either's woe.

XLV.

The other two, slight air and purging fire,
Are both with thee, wherever I abide:
The first my thought, the other my desire,
These present-absent with swift motion alide.
For when these quicker elements are gone
In tender embassy of love to thee,
My life, being made of four, with two alone
Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;
Until life's composition be recur'd
By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
Who even but now come back again, assur'd
Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
I send them back again and straight grow sad.

XLVI.

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war
How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie,—
A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes—
But the defendant doth that plea deny
And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
To 'cide this title is impaneled
A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart,

And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moiety and the dear heart's part:
As thus: mine eye's due is thy outward part,
And my heart's right thy inward love of heart.

XLVII.

Between mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns now unto the other:
When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother,
With my love's picture then my eye doth feast
And to the painted banquet bids my heart;
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
So, either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away art present still with me; [move,
For thou not farther than my thoughts canst
And I am still with them and they with thee;
Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.

How careful was I, when I took my way,
Each trifle under truest bars to thrust,
That to my use it might unused stay
From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
Thou, best of dearest and mine only care,
Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
Within the gentle cloure of my breast, [part;
From whence at pleasure thou mayest come and
And even thence thou wilt be stol'n, I fear,
For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
When as thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advised respects;
Against that time when thou shalt strangely pass
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye,
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity,—
Against that time do I ensoothe me here
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part: [laws,
To leave poor me thou hast the strength of Since why to love I can allege no cause.

L.

How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek, my weary travel's end,
Doth teach that end and that reprieve to say
"Thus far the miles are measured from thy friend!"
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider loved not speed, being made from thee:
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide;
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side;
For that same groan doth put this in my mind;
My grief lies onward and my joy behind.

LI.

Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer when from thee I speed:

Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all-triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out, alack! he was but one hour mine;
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Suns of the world may stain when heaven's sun staineth.

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
'Tis not enough that through the cloud thou
To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face, (break,
For no man well of such a salve can speak
That heals the wound and cures not the disgrace:
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.
Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love
sheds,
And they are rich and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be grieved at that which thou hast done;
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are;
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense —
Thy adverse party is thy advocate —
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence:
Such civil war is in my love and hate
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

XXXVI.

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blots that do with me remain
Without thy help by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite,
Which though it alter not love's soft effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame,
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth.
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store:
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despised,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give

That I in thy abundance am sufficed
And by a part of all thy glory live.
Look, what is best, that best I wish in thee:
This wish I have; then ten times happy me!

XXXVIII.

How can my Muse want subject to invent, (verse
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth Muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old nine which rhymers invocate;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
If my slight Muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is't but mine own when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divided live,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee which thou dost desert alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
Which time and thoughts as sweetly doth deceive,
And that thou teachest how to make one wain,
By praising him here who doth hence remain!

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all:
What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call;
All mine was thine before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee for my love thou ushest;
But yet be blamed, if thou thyself deceavest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
Although thou steal thee all my poverty;
And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong than hate's known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those petty wrongs that liberty commit,
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well besit,
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art and therefore to be won,
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;
And when a woman wooes, what woman's son
Will sourly leave her till she have prevailed?
Ay me! but yet thou mightest my seat forbear,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lead thee in their riot even there,
Where thou art forced to break a twofold truth,
Here, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I loved her dearly;

Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done:
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me
Are windows to my breast, where-through the Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee; [sun
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art;
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

XIV.

Let those who are in favour with their stars
Of public honour and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.
Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread
But as the marigold at the sun's eye,
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.
The painful warrior famoused for fight,
After a thousand victories once foil'd,
Is from the book of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd:
Then happy I, that love and am beloved
Where I may not remove nor be removed.

XV.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,
To thee I send this written embassage,
To witness duty, not to show my wit:
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine [it,
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it:
Till whatsoever star that guides my moving
Points on me graciously with fair aspect
And puts apparel on my tatter'd loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect:
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee;
Till then not show my heart where thou mayst prove me.

XVI.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tired;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expired:
For then my thoughts, from far where I abide,
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see:
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghastly night, [new,
Makes black night beautiful and her old face
Lo! thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee and for myself no quiet find.

XVII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debar'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not eased by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me:
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him thou art bright
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven:
So faster I the swart-complexion'd night,
When sparkling stars twine not thou gild'st the even.

But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer
And night doth nightly make grief's strength seem stronger.

XVIII.

When, in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate:
For thy sweet love remember'd such wealth brings [kings,
That then I scorn to change my state with

XIX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wall my dear time's waste:
Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long since cancell'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanished sight:
Then can I grieve at grievances forgone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restored and sorrows end.

XX.

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead,
And there reigns love and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stol'n from mine eye
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things removed that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth lie,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give;
That due of many now is thine alone:
Their images I loved I view in thee,
And thou, all they, hast all the all of me.

XXI.

If thou survive my well-contented day, [cover,
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
O, then vouchsafe me but this loving thought:
'Had my friend's Muse grown with this growing
age,

A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage;
But since he died and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.

XXII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain-top with sovereign eye,

Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful Time debateth with Decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And all in war with Time for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engrait you new.

XVI.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours,
And many maiden gardens yet unset
With virtuous wish would bear your living flow-
Much liker than your painted counterfeit: [ere,
So should the lines of life that live repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth nor outward fair,
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
To give away yourself keeps yourself still,
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

XVII.

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high desires?
Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say 'This poet lies;
Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.'
So should my papers yellow'd with their age
Become'd like old men of less truth than tongue,
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage
And stretched metre of an antique song;
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice; in it and in my rhyme.

XVIII.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance or Nature's changing course untrim-
But thy eternal summer shall not fade [nd;
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest:
So long as men can breathe or eyes can see,
So long lives this and this gives life to thee.

XIX.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-lived phoenix in her blood;
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleets,
And do what'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world and all her fading sweets;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:
O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

XX.

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion;
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in roll-
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth: [ung,
A man in hue, all 'hues' in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amaz-
And for a woman wert thou first created; [eth.
Till Nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
And by addition me of thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.
But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love and thy love's use their treas-

XXI.

So is it not with me as with that Muse
Starr'd by a painted beauty to his verse,
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse;
Making a couplement of proud compare, [gema,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in this huge roundure hems.
O, let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air:
Let them say more that like of hearsay well;
I will not praise that purpose not to sell.

XXII.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date;
But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee
Is but the seemingly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me:
How can I then be elder than thou art?
O, therefore, love, be of thyself so wary
As I, not for myself, but for thee will;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain;
Thou gavest me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.

As an unperfect actor on the stage
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say [heart,
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
O'ercharged with burden of mine own love's
O, let my books be then the eloquence [might,
And dumb preachers of my speaking breast,
Who plead for love and look for recompense
More than that tongue that more hath more ex-press'd.
O, learn to read what silent love hath writ:
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

XXIV.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath stall'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart;
My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
And perspective it is best painter's art.
For through the painter must you see his skill,
To find where your true image pictured lies;

Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest and make worms thine bear.

VII.

Lo! in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having climb'd the steep-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage;
But when from highmost pitch, with weary car,
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
The eyes, 'fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract and look another way:
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not; joy delights in joy.
Why lovest thou that which thou receivest not gladly,
Or else receivest with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering.
Resembling sire and child and happy mother
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing: 'Oue, Whose speechless song, being many, seeming Sings this to thee: 'thou single wilt prove none.'

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consumest thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
The world will wall thee, like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow and still weep
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep
By children's eyes her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrif in the world doth spend Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unused, the user so destroys it.
No love to toward others in that bosom sits [mits
That on himself such murderous shame com-

X.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant, if thou wilt, thou art beloved of many,
But that thou none lovest is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st at not to conspire,
Seeking that beautiful roof to ruinate
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O, change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodged than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself at least kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou growest
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;

And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestowest ^{convertest}

Thou mayst call thine when thou from youth
Herein lives wisdom, beauty and increase;
Without this, folly, age and cold decay:
If all were minded so, the times should cease
And threescore year would make the world away.
Let those whom Nature hath not made for store,
Harsh featureless and rude, barrenly perish:
Look, whom she best endow'd she gave the more;
Which bounteous gift thou shouldst in bounty cherish:
She carved thee for her seal, and meant
Thou shouldst print more, not let that copy die.

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard,
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake
And die as fast as they see others grow:
And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defence ^{hence}
Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee

XIII.

O, that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty which you hold in lease
Find no determination; then you were Yourself again after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay, [bear.
Which husbandry in honour might uphold
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
O, none but unthrif! Dear my love, you know
You had a father: let your son say so.

XIV.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good or evil luck,
Of plagues, of dearths, or seasons' quality;
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain and wind,
Or say with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that I in heaven find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And, constant star, in them I read such art
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If from thyself to store thou wouldst convert;
Or else of thee this I prognosticate:
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.

When I consider everything that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men no plants increase,
Cherished and check'd even by the self-same sky,
Vault in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;

I.

From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's roe might never die,
But as the ripper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial Making a famine where abundance lies, (fuel,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament
And only herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own bud buriest thy content
And, tender churl, makest waste in niggarding.
Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II.

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gazed on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held:
Then being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days,
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserved thy beauty's use,
If thou couldst answer 'This fair child of mine
Shall sum my count and make my old excuse,'
Proving his beauty by succession thine!
This were to be new made when thou art old,
And see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.

III.

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou wilt renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unbless some moth-
For where is she so fair whose unear'd womb [er.
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see
Despite of wrinkles this golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing but doth lend,
And being frank she lends to those are free.
Then, bounteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give?
Prodigious usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
Thy unused beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives th' executor to be.

V.

Those hours, that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same
And that unfair which fairly doth excel;
For never-resting time leads summer on
To hideous winter and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'er-snow'd and bareness everywhere:
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it nor no remembrance what it was:
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet, (sweet,
Leave but their show; their substance still lives

VI.

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be distill'd:
Make sweet some vial; treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury
Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times refigured thee:
Then what could death do, if thou shouldst de-
Leaving thee living in posterity? [part

Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger
And leave the faltering feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again and see
Thy father die, and not thy father thee!

By this, starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold Lucrece's bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfeit to die with her a space:
Till manly shame bids him possess his breath
And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath served a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
Who, mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng Weak words, so thick come in his poor heart's aid,

That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime 'Tarquin' was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
Then son and father weep with equal strife
Who should weep most, for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says, 'She's mine.' 'O, mine she is,
Replies her husband: 'do not take away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatine.'

'O,' quoth Lucretius, 'I did give that life
Which she too early and too late hath spill'd.'
'Woe, woe,' quoth Collatine, 'she was my wife,
I owed her, and 'tis mine that she hath kill'd.'
'My daughter' and 'my wife' with clamours fill'd
The dispersed air, who, holding Lucrece's life, Answer'd their cries, 'my daughter' and 'my wife.'

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece
Seeing such emulation in their woe, [side,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece's wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so

As silly-jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words and uttering foolish things:

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
And arm'd his long-hid wits advis'dly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
'Thou wronged lord of Rome,' quoth he, 'arise:
Let my unsounded self, supposed a fool,
Now set thy long-experienced wit to school.'

'Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woe?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow [deed?
For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds:

Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

'Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentation;
But kneel with me and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
Since Rome herself in them doth stand digraced, [clashed.
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets

'Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain'd,
By heaven's fair sun that breeds the fat earth's store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintain'd,
And by chaste Lucrece's soul that late complain'd
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.'

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife, to end his vow;
And to his protestation urged the rest,
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow:
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow, which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word;
So should my shame still rest upon record,
And never be forgot in mighty Rome
Th' adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

'Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear:
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there:
His scarlet just came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes:
And when the judge is robb'd the prisoner dies.

'O, teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or at the least this refuge let me find:
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind:
That was not forced; that never was inclined
To accessory yieldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.'

Lo, here, the hopeless merchant of this loss, [woe,
With head declined, and voice damm'd up with
With and set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow
The grief away that stops his answer so:
But, wretched as he is, he strives in vain; [again.
What he breathes out his breath drinks up

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste,
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forced him on so fast;
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past:
Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw,
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh:
'Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
Another power: no flood by raining slaketh.
My woe too sensible thy passion maketh
More feeling-painful: let it then suffice
To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

'And for my sake, when I might charm thee so
For she that was thy Lucrece, now attend me:
Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own: suppose thou dost defend me [me
From what is past: the help that thou shalt lend Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die;
For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

'But ere I name him, you fair lords,' quoth she,
Speaking to those that came with Collatine,
'Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine;
For 'tis a meritorious fair design
To chase injustice with revengeful arms:
Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms.'

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
But she, that yet her aid task hath not said,
The protestation stops. 'O, speak,' quoth she,
'How may this forced stain be wiped from me?

'What is the quality of mine offence,
Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?

May my pure mind with the foul act dispense,
My low-declined honour to advance?
May any terms acquit me from this chance?
The poison'd fountain clears itself again:
And why not I from this compell'd stain?

With this, they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind unstain'd of scars;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that map which deep impression bears
Of hard misfortune, carved in it with tears.
'No, no,' quoth she, 'no dame, hereafter living,
By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving.'

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name: 'He, he,' she says, [speaks;
But more than 'he' her poor tongue could not
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
She utters this, 'He, he, fair lords, 'tis he, [mae,
That guides this hand to give this wound to

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheathed:
That blow did ball it from the deep unrest
Of that polluted prison where it breathed:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeath'd
Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's lasting date from cancell'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew:
Till Lucrece' father, that beholds her bleed,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
The murderous knife, and, as it left the place,
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who, like a late-sack'd island, vastly stood
Bare and unpeopled in this fearful flood.
Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood a watery rigol goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood untainted still doth red abide,
Blushing at that which is so putrified.

'Daughter, dear daughter,' old Lucretius cries,
'That life was mine which thou hast here de-if in the child the father's image lies, [prived.
Where shall I live now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wast not to this end from me derived.
If children pre-decease progenitors,
We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

'Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new born;
But now that fresh fair mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a bare-boned death by time outworn:
O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn,
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
That I no more can see what once I was!

'O time, cease thou thy course and last no longer,
If they succeed to be that should survive.

And therein so enanooned his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-faced storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image drew
For perjured Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew: [glory
Whose words like wildfire burnt the shining
Of rich-built Ilium, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.

This picture she advisedly perused,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill,
Saying, some shape in Sinon's was abused;
So fair a form lodged not a mind so ill:
And still on him she gazed; and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

'It cannot be,' quoth she, 'that so much guile'—
She would have said 'can lurk in such a look';
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while;
And from her tongue 'can lurk' from 'cannot':
'It cannot be' she in that sense forsook, [look:
And turn'd it thus, 'It cannot be, I find:
But such a face should bear a wicked mind:

'For even as subtle Sinon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
As if with grief or travail he had fainted,
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguiled
With outward honesty, but yet defiled
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

'Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those borrow'd tears that Sinon sheds!
Priam, why art thou old and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds:
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his, that move thy pity,
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

'Such devils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Sinon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold,
Only to flatter fools and make them bold:
So Priam's trust false Sinon's tears doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water.'

Here, all enraged, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Sinon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest
Whose deed hath made herself herself detest:
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er:
'Fool, fool!' quoth she, 'his wounds will not be sore.'

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow, [ing:
And both she thinks too long with her remain-
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining:

Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps;
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath overlapp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others' detriment;
Losing her woes in shows of discontent.
It easeth some, though none it ever cures,
To think their dolor others have endured.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Bring home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black:
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky:
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazedly in her sad face he stares:
Her eyes, though sad in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares:
Both stood, like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: 'What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befall'n, that thou dost trembling
stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attired in discontent?
Unmake, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.'

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe:
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is ta'en prisoner by the foe;
While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dinge of her certain ending;
'Few words,' quoth she, 'shall fit the trespass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending:
In me none woe than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

'Then be this all the task it hath to say:
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas, thy Lucrece is not free.

'For in the dreadful deed of dark midnight,
With shining falchion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cried 'Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love: else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

'For some hard-favour'd groom of thine,' quoth
"Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will, [he,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee
And swear I found you where you did fulfil
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill
The lechers in their deed: this act will be My fame and thy perpetual infamy."

'With this, I did begin to start and cry:
And then against my heart he sets his sword,

In youth, quick bearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O, what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 't were encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguiled attention, charm'd the sight:
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which pur'd up to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly listening, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice,
Some high, some low, the painter was so nice;
The sculps of many, almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one being through'd bears back, all boll'n and red;
Another smother'd seems to pelt and swear:
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry words.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Grip'd in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind:
A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong-besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy [field,
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
That through their light joy seemed to appear,
Like bright things stain'd, a kind of heavy fear.

And from the strand of Dardan, where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and than Retire again, till, meeting greater ranks,
They join and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is tell'd.
Many she sees where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and dolour dwell'd,
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld,
Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatomized [reign:
Time's ruin, beauty's wreck, and grim care's

Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguised;
Of what she was no semblance did remain:
Her blue blood changed to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes
had fed,
Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the beldam's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,
And bitter words to ban her cruel foes:
The painter was no god to lend her those;
And therefore Lucrece wears her grief wrong,
To give her so much grief and not a tongue.

'Poor instrument,' quoth she, 'without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue;
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong;
And with my tears quench Troy that burns so long;
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

'Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear,
Thy heat of lust, foud Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear:
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here;
And here in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter die.

'Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many more?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

'Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swounds,
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds,
And one man's lust threes many lives confounds:
Had dotting Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame and not with fire.'

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell:
So Lucrece, set a-work, and takes dole tell
To pencil'd peniveness and colour'd sorrow;
She lends them words, and she their looks doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the painting round,
And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament.
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent:
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content;
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes wailing still,
A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome woe;
Cheeks neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashly pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,

That dying fear through all her body spread:
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining:
'My girl,' quoth she, 'on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?

If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood:
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

'But tell me, girl, when went'—and there she stay'd

Till after a deep groan—'Tarquin from hence'
'Madam, ere I was up,' replied the maid,
'The more to blame my sluggish negligence:
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

'But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.'
'O, peace!' quoth Lucrece: 'if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less:
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

'Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen:
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say? One of my husband's men
Bid thou be ready, hy and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear:
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it; [writ.
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill:
Concise and grief an eager combat fight:
What wit sets down is blotted straight with will:
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill:
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins: 'Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
Health to thy person! next vouchsafe t' afford—
If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see—
Some present speed to come and visit me.
No, I commend me from our house in grief:
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief:

Here folds she up the tenour of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality:
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;
When sighs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her [her.
From that suspicion which the world might bear
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see and sights moves more than hear them
For then the eye interprets to the ear [told:

The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woe doth bear.
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear:
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords, [words.
And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ
'At Ardea to my lord with more than haste.'
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-faced groom to hie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast:
Speed more than speed but dull and slow she Extremity still urgeth such extremes. [deems:

The homely villain courtsies to her low;
And, blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll without or yes or no.
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie
Imagine every eye beholds their blame;
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her
shame:

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
Even so this pattern of the worn-out age
Fawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blazed;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's
lust,
And, blushing with him, wistly on him gazed;
Her earnest eye did make him more amazed:
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish, [blemlish,
The more she thought he spied in her some

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So woe hath wearied woe, moan tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Pausing for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy:
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy:
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heaven, it seem'd, to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of nature, art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Stain'd for the slaughter'd husband by the wife:
The red blood reek'd, to show the painter's strife;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their rash lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrimed with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;

'And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That knows not parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds: [minds.]

Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly,
Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twain were better,
When life is shamed, and death reproach's debtor.

'To kill myself,' quoth she, 'alack, what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution?
They that lose half with greater patience bear it
Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion [one,
Who, having two sweet babes, when death takes
Will slay the other and be nurse to none.

'My body or my soul, which was the dearer,
When the one pure, the other made divine?
Whose love of either to myself was near-r,
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine?
Ay me! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
His leaves will wither and his sap decay:
So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

'Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Her sacred temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grossly engirt with daring infamy:
Then let it not be call'd impiety,

If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole
Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

'Yet die I will not till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him taluted shall for him be spent,
And as his due writ in my testament.

'My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonoured.
'Tis honour to deprive dishonour'd life;
The one will live, the other being dead;
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred:
For in my death I murder shameful scorn:
My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

'Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?
My resolution, love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou revenged mayst be.
How Tarquin must be used, read it in me:
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And for my sake serve thou false Tarquin so.

'This brief abridgment of my will I make:
My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, husband, do thou take; [wound;
Mine honour be the knife's that makes my
My shame be his that did my fame confound;
And all my fame that lives disbursed be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

'Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will;
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it!

My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say "So be it!"
Yield to my hand; my hand shall conquer thee:
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.'

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wiped the british pearl from her bright eyes,
With untuned tongue she hoarsely calls her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies:
For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers
flies.

Poor Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so As winter meads when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-morrow,
With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty,
And sorts a and look to her lady's sorrow,
For why her face wore sorrow's livery;
But durst not ask of her audaciously
Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with woe.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye:
Even so the maid with swelling drops can wet
Her circled eyne, enforced by sympathy
Of those fair suns set in her mistress' sky.
Who in a salt-waved ocean quench their light,
Which makes the maid weep like the dewy
night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling:
One justly weeps; the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling:
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing;
Grieving themselves to guess at others' smart,
And then they drown their eyes or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will:
The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill:
Then call them not the authors of their ill.
No more than wax shall be accounted evil
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep:
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep:
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep:
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath
kill'd:
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be hid
Poor women's faults, that they are so full!
With men's abuses: those proud lords, to blame, [shame.]
Make weak-made women tenants to their

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong:
Such danger to resistance did belong.

'Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Buy yourselves in skill-contending schools;
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters;
To trembling clients be you mediators:
For me, I force not argument a straw,
Since that my case is past the help of law.

'In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful Night;
In vain I cavil with mine infamy,
In vain I spurn at my confirm'd despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
The remedy indeed to do me good
Is to let forth my foul-defiled blood.

'Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die, my honour lives in thee:
But if I live, thou livest in my shame:
Since thou wilt not defend thy loyal dame,
And wast afraid to scratch her wicked foe,
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so.'

This said, from her be-tumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But this no slaughterhouse no tool imparteth
To make more vent for passage of her breath;
Which, thronging through her lips, so vanisheth
As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

'In vain,' quoth she, 'I live, and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hapless life.
I fear'd by Tarquin's fashion to be slain,
Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd I was a loyal wife:
So am I now: O no, that cannot be;
Of that true type hath Tarquin rifed me.

'O, that is gone for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's livery:
A dying life to living infamy:
Poor helpless help, the treasure stol'n away,
To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

'Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
The stained taste of violated troth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so,
To flatter these with an infringed oath;
This bastard graft shall never come to growth:
He shall not boast who did thy stock pollute
That thou art dotting father of his fruit.

'Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state:
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought
Baseely with gold, but stol'n from forth thy gate.
For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
And with my trespass never will dispence,
Till life to death acquit my forced offence.

'I will not poison thee with my attaint,
Nor fold my fault in cleanly-coin'd excuses;
My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses:
My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes, like sluices,
As from a mountain-spring that feeds a dale,
Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale.

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-tuned warble of her nightly sorrow,

And solemn night with slow sad gait descended
To ugly hell; when, lo, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow:
But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranny spies, [ing;
And seems to peep out where she sits weep-
To whom she sobbing speaks: 'O eye of eyes, Why pry'st thou through my window? leave thy peeping: [sleeping.
Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are
Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
For day hath nought to do what's done by
night.'

Thus cavs she with every thing she sees:
True grief is fond and testy as a child, [agrees;
Who wayward once, his mood with nought
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild;
Continuance tames the one; the other wild,
Like an unpractised swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare;
No object but her passion's strength renews;
And as one shifts, another straight enues:
Sometime her grief is dumb and hath no words;
Sometime 't is mad and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
Make her moans mad with their sweet melody:
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy;
Sad souls are slain in merry company:
Grief best is pleased with grief's society:
True sorrow then is feelingly sufficed
When with like semblance it is sympathized.

'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore:
He ten times pines that pines beholding food;
To see the salve doth make the wound ache more;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good;
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood, [flows;
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'er-
Grief dallied with nor law nor limit knows.

'You mocking birds,' quoth she, 'your tunes en-tomb
Within your hollow-swellings feather'd breasts,
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb:
My restless discord loves no stops nor rests;
A woeful hostess brooks not merry guests:
Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears;
Distress likes dumps when time is kept with tears.

'Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my disvevell'd hair:
As the dark earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the diapason bear;
For burden-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st better skill.

'And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife to affright mine eye:
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
Thence means, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languish-
ment.

'Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public fast,
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name,
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste:
Thy violent vanities can never last.
How comes it then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

'When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's
friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to end?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chained?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain'd?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for
thee;
But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

'The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds:
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds:
Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

'When Truth and Virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid:
They buy thy help; but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes; and thou art well appaid.
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.
My Collatine would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

'Guilty thou art of murder and of theft,
Guilty of perjury and subornation,
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift,
Guilty of incest, that abomination;
An accessory by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

'Mis-shapen Time, cooesmate of ugly Night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care,
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's
snare;
Thou nursest all and murder'st all that are:
O, hear me then, injurious, shifting Time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

'Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gavest me to repose,
Cancelld my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is to fine the hate of foes;
To eat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

'Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wronger till he render right,
To rulate proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden towers;

'To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books and alter their contents,
To pluck the gulls from ancient ravens' wings,
To dry the old oak's sap and cherish springs,
To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel,
And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel;

'To show the beldam daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild,
To mock the subtle in themselves beguiled,
To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

'Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age [friends,
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends:
O, this dread night, wouldst thou one hour
come back,
I could prevent this storm and shun thy wrack!

'Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some mischance cross Tarquin in his flight:
Devise extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this cursed criminal night:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright;
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

'Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him moan; but pity not his moans:
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones;
And let mild women to him lose their mild-
Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.

'Let him have time to tear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave,
And time to see one that by alms doth live
Disdain to him disdained scraps to give.

'Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort:
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport;
And ever let his unrecalling crime
Have time to wait th' abusing of his time.

'O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad, [ill!
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st at this
At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
Himself himself seek every hour to kill!
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should spill;
For who so base would such an office have
As slanderous death's-man to so base a slave!

'The baser is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate:
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is mis'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

'The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in
And unperceived fly with the flith away; [emire,
But if he like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay. [dar:
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious
Gnats are unnoted whereoe'er they fly,
But eagles gazed upon with every eye.

Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her
Against the unseen secrecy of night: [spite

'O comfort-killing Night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing chaos! nurse of blame!
Blind muffled bay! dark harbour for defame!
Grim cave of death! whispering conspirator
With close-tongued treason and the ravisher:

'O hateful, vaporous, and foggy Night!
Since thou art guilty of my cureless crime,
Must'ry thy mist to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time;
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

'With rotten damps ravish the morning air:
Let their exhaled unwholesome breaths make
The life of purity, the supreme fair, [sick.
Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prick;
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
That in their smoky ranks his smother'd light
May set at noon and make perpetual night.

'Were Tarquin Night, as he is but Night's child,
The silver-shining queen he would disdain;
Her twinkling handmaids too, by him defiled,
Through Night's black bosom should not peep
Bosom'd have co-partners in my pain: [again:
And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage,
As palmers' chat makes short their pilgrimage.

'Where now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms and hang their heads with
mine,
To mask their brows and hide their infamy:
But I alone alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine, Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans.
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.

'O Night, thou furnace of foul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous Day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made
May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade!

'Make me not object to the tell-tale Day!
The light will show character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay.
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loathsome trespass in my looks.

'The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story.
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name:
The orator, to deck his oratory
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame;
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
Will lie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

'Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserved reproach to him allotted
That is as clear from this attain of mine
As I, &c. this, was pure to Collatine.

'O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatinus' face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
Alas, how many bear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves, but he that gives them knows!

'If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

'Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wrack;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides, of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue: O unlook'd-for evil,
When virtue is profaned in such a devil!

'Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud?
Or hateful cuckoos hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair founts with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

'The aged man that coffers-up his gold
Is plagued with cramps and gout and painful fits;
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless burns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

'So then he hath it when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young;
Who in their pride do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sour
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

'Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers;
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing;
What virtue breeds iniquity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill-annexed Opportunity
Or kills his life or else his quality.

'O Opportunity, thy guilt is great!
'Tis thou that executest the traitor's treason:
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou 'point'st the season;
'Tis thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

'Thou makest the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is law'd;
Thou smother'st honesty, thou murder'st troth;
Thou foul abettor! thou notorious lawd!
Thou plantest scandal and displaced laud:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!

O, how are they wrapp'd in with infamies
That from their own misdeeds aakance their eyes!

'To thee, to thee, my heaved-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash relier:
I sue for exiled majesty's repeal;
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire:
His true respect will prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy dotting eyne,
That thou shalt see thy state and pity mine.'

'Have done,' quoth he: 'my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret:
The petty streams that pay a daily debt [haste
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls
Add to his flow, but alter not his taste.'

'Thou art,' quoth she, 'a sea, a sovereign king;
And, lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is hearsed,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispersed.'

'So shall these slaves be king, and thou their Thou nobly base, they basely dignified; [slave;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave:
Thou loathed in their shame, they in thy pride:
The lesser thing should not the greater hide:
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.'

'So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state'—
'No more,' quoth he; 'by heaven, I will not hear thee:

Yield to my love; if not, enforce hate, [thee;
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear
That done, despitefully I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.'

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies:
Shame folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seized his prey, the poor lamb cries: [troll'd
Till with her own white fleece her voice con-
Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears
He pens her piteous clamours in her head;
'Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!
The spots whereof could weeping purify.
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again:
This forced league doth force a further strife;
This momentary joy breeds months of pain;
This hot desire converts to cold disdain:
Pure Chastity is rifled of her store,
And Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
The prey wherein by nature they delight;
So surfeit-taking Tarquin tares this night:

His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will, that lived by foul devouring.

O, deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Drunk with Desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While Lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat or rein his rash desire,
Till like a jade Self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble Desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar waits his case: [Grace,
The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faithful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chased:
For now against himself he sounds this doom,
That through the length of times he stands disgraced:

Besides, his soul's fair temple is defaced:
To whose weak ruins muster troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death and pain perpetual:
Which in her precedence she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.

Even in this thought through the dark night he
A captive victor that hath lost in gain; [fasceth,
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain;
Leaving his spall perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the burden of lust he left behind,
And he the burden of a guilty mind.

He like a thievish dog creeps sadly thence;
She like a wearied lamb lies panting there;
He scowls and hates himself for his offence;
She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays, exclaiming on the direful night;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loathed delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertite;
She there remains a hopeless castaway;
He in his speed looks for the morning light;
She prays she never may behold the day, [lay,
'For day,' quoth she, 'night's escapes doth open
And my true eyes have never practised how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

'They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water that doth eat in steel,
Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel.'

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind,
She wakes her heart by heating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer clime to close so pure a mind.

Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

'Lucretia,' quoth he, 'this night I must enjoy thee:

If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee: [slay
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

'So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy:
And thou, the author of thy obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

'But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend:
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;
A little harm done to a great good end
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound; and being so applied,
His venom in effect is purged.

'Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit; bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot:
Worse than a slavish wipe or birth-hour's blot:
For marks descried in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.'

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye
He rouseth up himself and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the gripe's sharp claws,
Pleads, in a wilderness where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite.

But when a black-faced cloud the world doth
threat,
In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth
get, [biding,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their
Hindering their present fall by this dividing;
So his unshallow'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse pant-
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly, [eth.
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth:
He hear her prayers admit, but he heari granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with
raining.

Nor pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face,
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place;
And midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove, [oath,
By knighthood, country, and sweet friendship's
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,

That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, 'Reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim before thy shoot be ended;
He is no woodman that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

'My husband is thy friend; for his sake spare me:
Thyself art mighty; for thine own sake leave me:
Myself a weakling; do not then ensnare me:
Thou look'st not like deceit; do not deceive me.
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to leave
thee:

If ever man were moved with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

'All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart,
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolved to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears, and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

'In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee:
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me,
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely
name.
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

'How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring!
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What darest thou not when once thou art a king?
O, be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wiped away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

'This deed will make thee only loved for fear;
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this, thy will remove:
For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

'And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name? [land,
Thou back'st reproach against long-living
And make'st fair reputation but a bawd.

'Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way?

'Think but how vile a spectacle it were,
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.

Then Collatine again, by Lucrece's side,
In his clear bed might have reposed still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cosening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss;
Between whose hills her head entombed is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admird of lewd unhallow'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet: whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheathed their
And canopied in darkness sweetly lay, [light,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her
O modest wanton! wanton modesty! [breath;
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality:
Each in herself themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life lived in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
And him by oath they truly honoured.
These wounds in Tarquin new ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see but mightily he noted?
What did he note but strongly he desired?
What he beheld, on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tired.
With more than admiration he admird
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazing qualified:
Black'd, not suppress'd; for standing by herself,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fight-
Obdurate vassals fell exploits effecting. [ing.
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children's tears nor mothers' groans respect-
ing,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarm striking,
Gives the hot charge and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land:
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,

Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She, much amazed, breaks ope her lock'd-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and controul'd.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a-shaking;
What terror 'tis! but she, in worse taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies;
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shitting antics, ugly in her eyes.
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries:
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,—
Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall! —
May feel her heart — poor citizen! — distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
This moves in him more rage and lesser pity,
To make the breach and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe:
Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers ureth still
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: 'The colour in thy face,
That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace,
Shall plead for me and tell my loving tale:
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd fort: the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

'Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:
Thy beauty hath ensnared thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide:
My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might;
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

'I see what crowns my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends;
I think the honey guarded with a sting;
All this beforehand counsel comprehends:
But will is deaf and hears no heedful friends;
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, gainst law or duty.

'I have debated, even in my soul, [breed;
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall
But nothing can affection's course control,
Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed;
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.'

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade,
Whose crooked beak threats if he mount he dies:
So under his insulting falchion lies

Fearing some hard news from the warlike band,
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.

O, how her fear did make her colour rise!

First red as roses that on lawns we lay,

Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

'And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
Forced it to tremble with her loyal fear!
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

'Why hunt I then for colour or excuses?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses:
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows
dreadeth:

Affection is my captain, and he leadeth;
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights and will not be dismay'd.

'Then, childish fear, avaunt! debating, die!
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never countermand mine eye:
Sad pause and deep regard beseech the sage;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage:
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize: [lies!
Then who fears sinking where such treasure

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost choked by unresisted lust.
As he steals with open listening ear,
Full of fond hope and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wit;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline:
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worse part;

And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by their leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforced, retire his ward;
But, as they open, they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard:
The threshold grates the door to have him heard:
Night-wandering weasels shriek to see him
there:
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case: [scorch.
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth
Puff forth another wind that fires the torch:

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks:

He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And gripping it, the needle his finger pricks;
As who should say 'This glove to wanton tricks
Is not insured; Return again in haste;
Thou seest our mistress' ornaments are chaste.'

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove, that did delay
He takes for accidental things of trial; [him,
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

'So, so,' quoth he, 'these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threaten the spring.
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snaped birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing:
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves
and sands,
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands.'

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he
So from himself implyeth hath wrought. [sought.

Rolling his greedy eyeballs in his head:
By their high treason is his heart misled; [soon
Which gives the watch-word to his hand full
To drag the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;

O, had they in that darksome prison died!
Then had they seen the period of their ill:

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining:

Despair to gain doth traffic oft for gaining;
And when great treasure is the meed proposed,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death supposed.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond,
For what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and unclose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain, [gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age;
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage;
As life for honour in fell battle's rage; [cost
Honour for wealth; and oft that wealth doth
The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in venturing ill we leave to be
The things we are for that which we expect;
And this ambitious soul infirmity,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have: so then we do neglect
The thing we have; and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust;
And for himself himself he must forsake:
Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
To slanderous tongues and wretched hateful days?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had closed up mortal eyes:
No comfortable star did lend his light, [cries:
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs: pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wave to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm;
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm;
But honest fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charm,
Doth too too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude desire.

His falchion on a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly;
Whereat a waken torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be lodg'd in his lustful eye;
And to the flame thus speaks advisedly,
'As from this cold flint I enforced this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.'

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise:
Then looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armour of still-slaught'ring lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust:

'Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excellet thine:
And die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine;
Offer pure license to so poor a shrine:
Let fair humanity abhor the deed [weed.
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white

'O shame to knighthood and to shining arms!
O foul dishonour to my household's grave!
O impious act, including all foul harms!
A martial man to be so soft fancy's slave!
True valour still a true respect should have;
Then my digression is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

'Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat:
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,
To cipher me how fondly I did dote;
That my posterity, shamed with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not bin.

'What win I, if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth to wait a week?
Or sells eternity to get a toy?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy?
Or what loud beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would wish the sceptre straight be stricken down?

'If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent?
This sieve that hath enight his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame?

'O, what excuse may my invention make,
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints
shake, [bleed?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

'Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife,
As in revenge or quital of such strife:
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

'Shameful it is; ay, if the fact be known:
Hateful it is; there is no hate in loving:
I'll beg her love; but she is not her own:
The worst is but denial and reproving.
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing.
Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.'

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
Tween frozen conscience and hot-burning will,
And with good thoughts makes disposition,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still:
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, 'She took me kindly by the hand,
And gazed for tidings in my eager eyes,

Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

'Lucretia,' quoth he, 'this night I must enjoy thee:

If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee: [alay
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

'So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this diadain,
Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy:
And thou, the author of thy obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

'But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend:
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;
A little harm done to a great good end
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound; being so applied,
His venom in effect is purified.

'Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit; bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot:
Worse than a slavish wipe or birth-hour's blot:
For marks, decreed in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.'

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye
He rouseth up himself and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the gripe's sharp claws,
Fleeds in a wilder waste where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite.

But when a black-faced cloud the world doth
threat,
In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their
Hindering their present fall by this dividing;
So his unhallo'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse pants:
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly, [esh
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth:
He hear her prayers admit, but his heart granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with
raining.

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face.
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place:
And midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove, [oath,
By knighthood, gentility, and sweet friendship's
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,

That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, 'Reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Nad not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Nad not the thing that cannot be amended;
Ead thy ill aim before thy shoot be ended;
He is no woodman that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

'My husband is thy friend; for his sake spare me:
Thyself art mighty; for thine own sake leave me:
Myself a weakling; do not then ensnare me:
Thou look'st not like deceit; do not deceive me.
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to leave
thee:
If ever man were moved with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

'All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart,
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolved to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears, and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

'In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee:
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me,
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely
name.
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

'How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring!
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dost thou not when once thou art a king?
O, be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vulgar actors can be wiped away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

'This deed will make thee only loved for fear;
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With foul offenders thou performest must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this, thy will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

'And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name? [laud,
Thou back'st reproach against long-living
And makest fair reputation but a bawd.

'Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way?

'Think but how vile a spectacle it were,
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.

Then Collatine again, by Lucrece's side,
In his clear bed might have reposed still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cotening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss:
Between whose hills her head entombed is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admired of lewd unballow'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet: whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheathed their
And canopied in darkness sweetly lay, [light,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her
O modest wantons! wanton modesty! [breath;
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality:
Each in herself themselves so beauty,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life lived in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
And him by oath they truly honoured.
These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see but mightily he noted?
What did he note but strongly he desired?
What he beheld, on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tired.
With more than admiration he admired
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazing qualified:
Black'd, not suppress'd: for standing by herself,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fight-
Obdurate vassals sell exploits effecting, [ing.
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children's tears nor mothers' groans respect-
ing,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarm striking,
Gives the hot charge and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,

Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She, much amazed, broke ope her lock'd-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torcs dimm'd and controull'd.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghostly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a-shaking:
What terror 'tis! but she, in worse taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies:
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shitting antics, ugly in her eyes:
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries:
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful
sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,—
Rude rain, to batter such an ivory wall!—
May feel her heart—poor citizen!—distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall.
Beating her bulk, that his haunts makes withal.
This moves in him more rage and lesser pity,
To make the breach and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe:
Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers ungeth still
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: 'The colour in thy face,
That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace,
Shall plead for me and tell my loving tale:
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd fort: the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

'Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:
Thy beauty hath censured thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide:
My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might:
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

'I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends;
I think the honey guarded with a sting:
All this beforehand counsel comprehends:
But will is deaf and hears no heedful friends;
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, gains't law or duty.

'I have debated, even in my soul, [breed;
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall
But nothing can affection's course control,
Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed,
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wing's shade,
Whose crooked beak threatens if he mount he dies.
So under his insulting fashion lies

Fearing some hard news from the warlike band,
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.

O, how her fear did make her colour rise!

First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

'And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
Forced it to tremble with her loyal fear!
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

'Why hunt I then for colour or excuses?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses:
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows
dreadeth:

'Affection is my captain, and he leadeth;
And when his gudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights and will not be dismay'd.

'Then, childish fear, avaunt! debating, die!
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never countermand mine eye:
Sad pause and deep regard besewm the sage;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage:
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize: [lies?]
Then who fears sinking where such treasure

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost choked by unresisted lust.
A way he seeks with open listening ear,
Full of high hope and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wife;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worse part;

And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, fasten'd by their leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforced, retire his ward:
But, as they open, they all rate him ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard:
The threshold grates the door to have him heard:
Night-wandering weasels shriek to see him
there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case; [scorch,
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth
Puff forth another wind that fires the torch:

And being lighted, by the light he spies

He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And gripping it, the needle his finger pricks;
As who should say 'This glove to wanton tricks

A martial man to be so soft fancy's slave!
True valour still a true respect should have;
Then my digression is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

'Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat;
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,
To cipher me how fondly I did dote:
That my posterity, shamed with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not bin.

'What win I, if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth to wail a week?
Or sells eternally to get a toy?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy?
Or what loud beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down?

'If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent?
This siege that hath engirt his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame?

'O, what excuse can my invention make,
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints
shake, [bleed?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

'Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife,
As in revenge or quital of such strife:
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

'Shameful it is; ay, if the fact be known:
Hateful it is; there is no hate in loving:
I'll beg her love; but she is not her own:
The worst is but denial and reproving:
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing.
Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.'

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
Tween frozen conscience and hot-burning will,
And with good thoughts makes disputation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, 'She took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes,

From the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears the lightless fire
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of 'chaste' unhappily set
This tasteless edge on his keen appetite;
When Collatine unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unmatched red and white
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight, (ties,
Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beau-
With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beautiful mate;
Beckoning his fortune at such high-proud rate,
That kings might be espoused to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun!
An expired date, cancell'd ere well begun:
Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortres'd from a world of harmes.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apologies be made,
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From thievish ears, because it is his own?

Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king:
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be:
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting
His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men
Should vaunt
That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the cool which in his liver glows,
O rash false heat, wrapp'd in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old!

When at Collatium this false lord arrived,
Well was he welcomed by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue strived
Which of them both should underprop her fame:
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for
shame;
When beauty boasted bluncheon, in despite
Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.

But beauty, in that white intitled,
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field:
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,
When shame assail'd, the red should fence
the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red and virtue's white:
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right:
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight;
The sovereignty of either being so great,
That oft they interchange each other's seat.

Their silent war of lilies and of roses,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be
kill'd,

The coward captive vanquished doth yield
To those two armies that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow
tongue, —

The niggard prodigal that praised her so, —
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show:
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil;
Birds never timed no secret bushes fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer
And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd;

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in platts of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
That, cloy'd with much, he pineth still for more.

But she, that never coped with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their prating looks,
Nor read the subtle-shining secrecies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books:
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no
books;

Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory:
Her joy with heaved-up hand she doth express,
And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming hither,
He makes excuses for his being there:
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear:
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vaulty prison stows the Day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending weariness with heavy spright;
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night:
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight;

And every one to rest themselves betake.
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds,
that wake.

'It shall suspect where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust;
It shall be merciful and too severe,
And most deceiving when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be where it shows most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

'It shall be cause of war and dire events,
And set discension 'twixt the son and sire;
Subject and servile to all discounts,
As dry combustion matter is to fire:
Sith in his prime Death doth my love destroy,
They that love best their loves shall not enjoy.'

By this, the boy that by her side lay kill'd
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white,
Remembering well his pale cheeks and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She hears her head, the new-sprung flower to Comparing it to her Adonis' breath, [smell,
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is rest from her by death:

She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

'Poor flower,' quoth she, 'this was thy father's guise —
Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire —
For every little grief to wet his eyes:
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 'tis thine; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast as in his blood.

'Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right:
Lo, in this hollow cradle take thy rest, [night:
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and
There shall not be one minute in an hour
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.'

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift aid
Their mistress mounted through the empty skies
In her light chariot quickly convey'd; [queen
Holding their course to Paphos, where their Means to immure herself and not be seen.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

THE love I dedicate to your lordship is without end: whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours; what I have to do is yours: being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater: meantime, as it is, it is bound to your lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE ARGUMENT.

LUCIUS T. QUINTUS, for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus, after he had caused his own father-in-law Servius Tullius to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one commended the virtues of his own wife: among whom Collatinus extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome: and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatinus finds his wife, though it were late in the night, sleeping amongst her maids: the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disorders. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatinus the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius being inflamed with Lucretia's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp: from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was, according to his estate, royally entertained and lodged by Lucretia at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealth into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucretia, in this lamentable plight, hastily dispatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius: and finding Lucretia attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins: and bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king: wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

And there, all smother'd up, in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep dark cabins of her head:

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain;
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes:
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound.

This mutiny each part doth so surprise [eyes;
That from their dark beds once more leap her

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd: [weed,
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or But stole his blood and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she pines, frantically she dotheth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead:
Her voice is stop'd, her joints forget to bow;
Her eyes are mad, that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly, [three:
That her sight dazling makes the wound seem
And then she reprehends her mangleing eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be: [doubled:

His face seems twain, each several limb is
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

'My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet,' quoth she, 'behold two Adons dead:
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead:
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire!
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

'Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost!
What fate remains alive that's worth the viewing? [boast
Whose tongue is music now? what canst thou
Of things long since, or any thing ensuing?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim; [him,
But true-sweet beauty lived and died with

'Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you:
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear:
The sun doth scorn you and the wind doth kiss
you:

But when Adonis lived, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair:

'And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off and, being gone,
Play with his locks: then would Adonis weep;
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

'To see his face the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear
To recreate himself, when he hath sung, [him;
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

'When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took,
That some would slug, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries and ripe-red cherries; [berries.
He fed them with his sight, they him with

'But this foul, grim, and urchin-snooted boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Witness the entertainment that he gave:
If he did see his face, why then I know
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'Tis true, 'tis true: thus was Adonis slain:
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheathed unaware the tusk in his soft groin.

'Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his; the more am I accurst.
With this, she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whippers in his ears a livery tale,
As if they heard the woeful words she told;
She lifts the cover-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo, two lamps, burnt out, in darkness
lie;

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd;
And every beauty robb'd of his effect:
'Wonder of time,' quoth she, 'this is my spite,
That, thou being dead, the day should yet be light.

'Since thou art dead, lo, here I prophesy:
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend:
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end,
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low,
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

'It shall be sickle, false and full of fraud,
Bud and be blasted in a breathing-while;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets that shall the truest sight beguile:
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb and teach the fool to speak.

'It shall be sparing and too full of riot,
Teaching decrept age to tread the measures;
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures:
It shall be raging-mad and silly-mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

THE VENUS OF THE VATICAN.

[From "Preservation of Beauty."]

Here kennell'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary catiff for his master,
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster;
And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceased his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin volleys out his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gazed,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath
And sighing it again, exclaims on Death.

'Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love,—thus chides she Death,— [thou mean
'Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost
To stifle beauty and to steal his breath,
Who when he lived, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

'If he be dead,—O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it:—
O yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age, but thy false dart
Mistakes that arm and cleaves an infant's heart.

'Hast thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And, hearing him, thy power had lost his power.
The Destinies will cure thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not Death's ebon dart, to strike him dead.

'Dost thou drink tears, that thou provokest such weeping?
What may a heavy groan advantage thee?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.'

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She vall'd her eyelids, who, like sluices, stopt
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropt; [rain,
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver
And with his strong course opens them again.

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow,
Borrow that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet
again.

Variable passions throng her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
But none is best: then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntman holler:
A nurse's song ne'er pleased her babe so well:
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside, [pass,
Which her cheek melts, as scorching it should
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken when she seemeth drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes;
Despair and hope makes thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unweaves the web that she hath wrought;
Adonis' lives, and Death is not to blame:
It was not she that call'd him all-to-naught:
Now she adds honour to his hateful name:
She cleaves him king of graves and grave for kings.
Impetuous supreme of all mortal things.

'No, no,' quoth she, 'sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me I felt a kind of fear
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then, gentle shadow,—truth I must confess,—
I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

'Tis not my fault: the boar provoked my tongue;
Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong:
I did but act, he's author of thy slander:
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet Could rule them both without ten women's wit.'

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With Death she humbly doth insinuate: [rice,
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and sto-
His victories, his triumphs and his glories.

'O Jove,' quoth she, 'how much a fool was I
To be of such a weak and silly mind
To wait his death who lives and must not die
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaces comes again.

'Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves;
Trifles, unwithessed with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking grieves.'
Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure, away she flies:
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight:
Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view, [drew;

Like stars ashamed of day, themselves with-
Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,

'What have you urged that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger:
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embraces unto every stranger.
You do it for increase: O strange excuse,
When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse!

'Call it not love, for Love to heaven is fled,
Since sweating Lust on earth usurp'd his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame:
Which the hot tyrant statue and soon bereaves,
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

'Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But Lust's effect is tempest after sun;
Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done;
Love surfeits not, Lust like a glutton dies;
Love is all truth, Lust full of forged lies.

'More I could tell, but more I dare not say;
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in silence, now I will away;
My face is full of shame, my heart of teen:
Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended.'

With this, he breaketh from the sweet embrace,
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast, [space]
And homeward through the dark laund runs
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more.
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend:
So did the merciless and pitchy night
Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amazed, as one that unaware
Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood,
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour caves, as seeming trouble,
Make verbal repetition of her moans: [led,
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled: 'woe!
'Ay me!' she cries, and twenty times 'Woe,
And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She marking them begins a wailing note
And sings extemporally a woful ditty: [dote:
How love makes young men thrall and old men
How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty:
Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
And still the choir of echoes answer so.

Her song was tedious and outwore the night,
For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short:
If pleased themselves, others, they think, delight
In such-like circumstances, with such-like sport:
Their copious stories oftentimes begun
End without audience and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal
But idle comrades resembling parasites,
Like shrill-tongued tapsters answering every Soothing the humour of fantastic wits? [call.

She says 'T is so:' they answer all 'T is so,
And would say after her, if she said 'No.'

Lo, here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver
The sun ariseth in his majesty: [breast
Who doth the world so gloriously behold
That cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
'O thou clear god, and patron of all light, [row
From whom each lamp and shining star doth bor-
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other.'

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'erworn,
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds and for his horn:
Anon she hears them chant it lustily,
And all in haste she cometh to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twine about her thigh to make her stay:
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

By this, she hears the hounds are at a bay:
Whereat she starts, like one that spies an adder
Wreathed up in fatal folds just in his way, [der:
The fear whereof doth make him shake and shud-
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appals her senses and her spirit confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
Finding their enemy to be so curst, [first,
They all strain courtesy who shall cope him

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart:
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part: [yield,
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth
They basely fly and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstasy:
Till, cheering up her senses all dismay'd,
She tells them 'tis a causeless fantasy,
And childish error, that they are afraid:
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no
more:
And with that word she spies the hunted boar,

Whose frothy mouth, bespainted all with red,
Likemilk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not wither: [ther,
This way she runs, and now she will no fur-
But back retires to rate the boar for murder.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she untreads again;
Her more than haste is mated with delay,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain.
Full of respect, yet nought at all respecting;
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.

Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore;
Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed
Doth make them droop with grief and hang the head.

'What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble at the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

'But if thou needs wilt hunt, be ruled by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox which lives by subtlety,
Or at the roe which no encounter dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
And on thy well-breathed horse keep with thy hounds.

'And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot his troubles
How he outruns the wind and with what care
He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles:
The many mazes through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

'Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell,
And sometime where earth-delving conies
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell,
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer:
Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear:

'For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot scent-sauffling hounds are driven to doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have sin-
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out:
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo re-
As if another chase were in the skies. [plea,

'By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still:
Anon their loud alarms he doth hear;
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick that hears the passing-bell.

'Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
Turn, and return, indenting with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur
For misery is trodden on by many, [stay:
And being low never relieved by any.

'Lie quietly, and hear a little more:
Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise:
To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize,
Applying this to that, and so to so;
For love can comment upon every woe.

'Where did I leave?' 'No matter where,' quoth
'Leave me, and then the story aptly ends: [he,
The night is spent.' 'Why, what of that?' quoth
'I am,' quoth he, 'expected of my friends: [she.
And now 'tis dark, and going I shall fall.'
'In night,' quoth she, 'desire sees best of all.

'But if thou fall, O, then imagine this,
The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss. [lips
Rich preys make true men thieves: so do thy

Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
Lest she should steal a kiss and die forsworn.

'Now of this dark night I perceive the reason:
Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
Till forging Nature be condemn'd of treason,
For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine; [despite,
Wherein she framed thee in high heaven's
To shame the sun by day and her by night.

'And therefore hath she bribed the Destinies
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
To mingle beauty with infirmities,
And pure perfection with impure defeature,
Making it subject to the tyranny
Of mad mischances and much misery;

'As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence and frenzies wood,
The marrow-eating sickness, whose attain't
Disorder breeds by heating of the blood: [spair, Surfeits, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd de-
Swear Nature's death for framing thee so fair.

'And not the least of all these maladies
But in one minute's fight brings beauty under:
Both favour, savour, hue and qualities,
Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd and done,
As mountain-snow melts with the midday sun.

'Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-lacking vestals and self-loving nuns,
That on the earth would breed a scarcity
And barren dearth of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night
Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

'What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity [have,
Which by the rights of time thou needs must
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity?
If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

'So in thyself thyself art made away;
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do
Or butcher-sire that reaves his son of life. [stay,
Foul-cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that's put to use more gold begets.'

'Nay, then,' quoth Adon, 'you will fall again
Into your idle over-handled theme:
The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream:
For, by this black-faced night, desire's soul
nurse, [worse,
Your treatise makes me like you worse and

'If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown;
For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there;

'Lest the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast:
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bedchamber to be barr'd of rest.
No, lady, no: my heart longs not to groan,
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

Now quick desire hath caught the yielding prey,
And glutton-like she feeds, yet never filleth;
Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
Paying what ransom the insulter willet; [high,
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so
That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry:

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
With blindfold fury she begins to forage: [boil,
Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth
And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
Forgetting shame's pure blush and honour's wrack.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tamed with too much handling,
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tired with chasing,
Or like the froward infant still'd with dandling,
He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What was so frozen but dissolves with tempering,
And yields at last to every light impression?
Things out of hope are compass'd off with venturing,
Chiefly in love, whose leave exceeds commission:
Affection faints not like a pale-faced coward,
But then woos best when meet his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd;
Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover:
What though the rose have prickles, yet 'tis pluck'd:
Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him:
The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
She is resolved no longer to restrain him:
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart,
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence incaged in his breast.

'Sweet boy,' she says, 'this night I'll waste in sorrow,
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
Tell me, Love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we? shall we? wilt thou make the match?'
He tells her, no: to-morrow he intends
To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

'The boar?' quoth she: whereat a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blushing rose,
Campa her cheek: she trembles at his tale,
And on his neck her yoking arms she throws:
She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
He will not manage her, although he mount her;
That worse than Tantalus is her annoy,
To clip Elysium and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceived with painted grapes,
Do surfeit by the eye and pine the maw,
Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
As those poor birds that helpless berries saw.

The warm effects which she in him finds missing
She seeks to kindle with continual kissing.

But all in vain: good queen, it will not be:
She hath assay'd as much as may be proved;
Her pleading hath deserved a greater fee:
She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not loved.
'Fie, fie,' he says, 'you crush me; let me go;
'You have no reason to withhold me so.'

[Thou hadst been gone,' quoth she, 'sweet boy, ere this, [boar.
But that thou told'st me thou wouldst hunt the
O. be advis'd! thou know'st not what it is
With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
Whose tusks never sheathed he whetted
Like to a mortal butcher bent to kill. [still,

'On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes: [fret;
His eyes, like glow-worms, shine when he doth
His snout digs sepulchres where'er he goes;
Being moved, he strikes where'er is his way,
And whom he strikes his cruel tusks slay.

'His brawny sides, with hairy bristles arm'd,
Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter;
His short thick neck cannot be easily harm'd;
Being ireful, on the lion he will venture:
The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
As fearful of him, part, through whom he rushes.

'Alas, he nought esteems that face of thine,
To which Love's eyes pay tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips and crystal eyes,
Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
But having thee at vantage, — wondrous dread! —
Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

'O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still;
Beauty hath nought to do with such foul fiends:
Come not within his danger by thy will;
They that thrive well take counsel of their friends, [semble,
When thou didst name the boar, not to dis-
I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

'Didst thou not mark my face? was it not white?
Sawst thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? and fell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no rest. [breast,
But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my

'For where Love reigns, disturbing Jealousy
Doth call himself Affection's sentinel;
Gives false alarms, rugges-tooth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry "Kill, kill!"
Discomfiting gentle Love in his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

'This sour informer, this hate-breeding spy,
This canker that eats up Love's tender spring,
This carry-tale, discentious Jealousy,
That sometime true news, sometime false doth bring,
Knocks at my heart and whispers in mine ear
That if I love thee, I thy death should fear:

'And more than so, presenteth to mine eye
The picture of an angry-chafing boar,

He looks upon his love and neighs unto her;
She answers him as if she knew his mind:
Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind,
Spurns at his love and scorns the heat he feels,
Beating his kind embracements with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malcontent,
He veils his tail that, like a falling plume,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent:
He stamps and bites the poor flies in his fume.
His love, perceiving how he is enraged,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuaged.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When, lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad, unto the wood they hie them, [them].
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly

All swoln with chafing, down Adonis sits,
Banning his boisterous and unruly beast:
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blest:
For lovers' sake, the heart hath treble wrong
When it is barr'd the aidance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage:
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love's fire dothassage;
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind,
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all askance he holds her in his eye.

O, what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue,
How white and red each other did destroy!
But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels:
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels:
His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's
print,
As apt as new-fall'n snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes petitioners to his eyes ailing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them;
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the woo-
ing:
And all this dumb play had his acts made plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a jail of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
This beautiful combat, wilful and unwilling,
Shew'd like two silver doves that sit a-billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began:
'O fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound:
For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee, [cure thee].
Though nothing but my body's lane would 'Give me my hand,' saith he, 'why dost thou feel it?' [have it];

'Give me my heart,' saith she, 'and thou shalt
O, give it me, lest thy hard heart do steel it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.'

'For shame,' he cries, 'let go, and let me go:
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so:
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.'

Thus she replies: 'Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire:
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath
none;
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

'How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain: [ferest,
Throwing the base thong from his bending
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

'Who sees his true-love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

'Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy: [thee;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach
O, learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And once made perfect, never lost again.'

'I know not love,' quoth he, 'nor will not know it,
Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it;
'Tis much to borrow, and I will not owe it:
My love to love is love but to disgrace it:
For I have heard it is a life in death, [breath.
That laughs and weeps, and all but with a

'Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinished?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth: [young
The colt that's back'd and burden'd being Loath his pride and never waxeth strong.

'You hurt my hand with wringing: let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat:
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart:
To love's alarms it will not open the gate:
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery: [hatery.
For where a heart is hard they make no

I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears.

'The sun that shines from heaven shines but warm,
And, lo, I lie between that sun and thee:
The heat I have from thence doth little harm,
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me:
And were I not immortal, life were done
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

'Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel,
Nay, more than flint, for stone at rain relenteth?
Art thou a woman's son, and canst not feel?
What 'tis to love? how want of love tormenteth?
O, had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

'What am I, that thou shouldst condemn me this?
Or what great danger dwells upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak, fair; but speak fair words, or else be mute:
Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again,
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

'Pie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-painted idol, image dull and dead,
Statue contenting but the eye alone,
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred! [Jon,
Thou art no man, though of a man's complex-
For men will kiss even by their own direction.'

This said, impatience chokes her pleading tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong:
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause:
And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
And now her sobs do her intendments break.

Sometimes she shakes her head and then his hand,
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms infold him like a band:
She would, he will not in her arms be bound;
And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
She locks her lily fingers one in one.

'Fondling,' she saith, 'since I have hemm'd thee here
Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer:
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale;
Grazed on my lips; and if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

'Within this limit is relief enough.
Sweet bottom-grass and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain:
Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark.'

At this Adonis smiles as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple:
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Foreknowing well, if there he came to lie,
Why, there Love lived and there he could not die.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking.
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second striking?

Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
[ing:
Her words are done, her woes the more increase-
The time is spent, her object will away,
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing.
'Pity,' she cries, 'some favor, some remorse!'
Away he springs and hasteth to his horse.

But, lo, from forth a copse that neighbors by,
A breeding jeunet, lusty, young and proud,
Adonis' trampling courier doth espy,
And forth she rushes, snorts and neighs aloud:
The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder:
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thunder;
The iron bit he crusheth 'tween his teeth,
Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up-prick'd; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapors doth he send:
His eye, which scornfully glisters like fire,
Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty and modest pride;
Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps,
As who should say 'Lo, thus my strength is tried,
And this I do to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.'

What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering 'Holla,' or his 'Stand, I say'?
What cares he now for curb or pricking spur?
For rich caparisons or trapping gay?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In limning out a well-proportion'd steed,
His art with nature's workmanship at strife,
As if the dead the living should exceed;
So did this horse excel a common one
In shape, in courage, color, pace and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long, [wide,
Broad breast, full eye, small head and nostril
High crest, short ears, straight legs and passing strong, [hide:
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender Look, what a horse should have he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometimes he scuds far off, and there he stares;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather:
To bid the wind a base he now prepares,
And whether he run or fly they know not whether:
[sings,
For through his mane and tail the high wind
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

Pure shame and awed resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:
Rain added to a river that is rank
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he lours and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame and anger ashy-pale:
Being red, she loves him best: and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears,
From his soft bosom never to remove.
Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks
all wet; [debt.
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive-dipper peering through a wave,
Who, being look'd on, ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave:
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat
More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn:
'O, pity,' gan she cry, 'flint-hearted boy!
'Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?

'I have been woo'd, as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and dreadful god of war,
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes in every jar;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

'Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His batter'd shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learn'd to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, dally, smile and jest,
Scorning his churlish drum and ensign red,
Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

'Thus he that overruled I overway'd,
Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain:
Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain. [obey'd.
O, be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foil'd the god of fight:

'Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,—
Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red—
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine.
What sees't thou in the ground? hold up thy head:
Look in mine eyeballs, there thy beauty lies;
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?

'Art thou ashamed to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink; so shall the day seem night;
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain;
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean
Never can blush, nor know not what we mean.

'The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee unripe; yet mayst thou well be fast—
Make use of time, let not advantage slip: [ed:
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime Rot and consume themselves in little time.

'Were I hard-favor'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-nurtured, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
O'erworn, displeas'd, rheumatic and cold,
Thick-lighted, barren, lean and lacking juice,
Then mightst thou pause, for then I were not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

'Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are gray and bright and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

'Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishevell'd hair,
Dance on the mounds, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.

'Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie:
These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me; [the sky,
Two strengthless doves will draw me through
From morn till night, even where I list to sport
me:
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee?

'Is thine own heart to thine own pace affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steal thine own freedom and complain on theft.
Narcissus so himself himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

'Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear:
Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse: [beauty;
Seeds spring from seeds and beauty breedeth
Thou wast begot; to get it is thy duty.

'Upon the earth's increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless the earth with thy increase be fed?
By law of nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live when thou thyself art dead;
And so, in spite of death, thou dost survive,
In that thy likeness still is left alive.'

By this the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For where they lay the shadow had forsook them,
And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him and by Venus' side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His lowering brows o'erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapors when they blot the sky,
Souring his cheeks cries 'Fie, no more of love!
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove.'

'Ay me,' quoth Venus, 'young, and so unkind?
What bare excuses makest thou to be gone!
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun:

VENUS AND ADONIS.

'Villia miretur vulgus: mihi flavus Apollo
Pocula Castalia plena ministret aqua.'

RIGHT HONORABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

RIGHT HONORABLE,

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the censorious censure for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden: only, if your honor seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honored you with some graver labor. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a god-father, and never after ear so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honorable survey, and your honor to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your honor's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Even as the sun with purple-color'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Hunting he loved, but love he laugh'd to scorn;
Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a bold-faced sutor 'gins to woo him.

'Thrice-fairer than myself,' thus she began,
'The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are:
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith that the world hath ending with thy life.'

'Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
If thou wilt deign this favor, for thy meed
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know:
Here come and sit, where never serpent hisses,
And being set, I'll smother thee with kisses;

'And yet not cloy thy lips with loathed satiety,
But rather furnish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety.
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty:
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.'

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And trembling in her passion, calls it balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good:
Being so enrapt, desire doth lend her force
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
She red and hot as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimble she fastens: — O, how quick is love! —
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove: [thrust, Backward she push'd him, as she would be
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips:
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he
frown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips;
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
'If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open.'

He burns with bashful shame: she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs and golden hairs
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
He saith she is immodest, blames her 'mises;
What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd or prey be gone:
Even so she kissed his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Forced to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies and breatheth in her face;
She feedeth on the steam as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace;
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers, [etc.
So they were dew'd with such distilling show-

Look, how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befallen, [letter, Which, as I think, you know not: Here is a Found in his pocket of the slain Roderigo; And here, another: the one of them imports The death of Cassio to be undertook By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain!

Cas. Most heathenish, and most gross!

Lod. Now here's another discontented paper, Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems, Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain; But that, helike, Iago in the interim Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O the pernicious catiff!— How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber: And he himself confess'd, but even now, That there he dropp'd it, for a special purpose, Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O fool! fool! fool!

Cas. There is, besides, in Roderigo's letter,— How he upbraids Iago, that he made him Brave me upon the watch: wherein it came That I was cast: And even but now he spake, After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him, Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us:

Your power and your command is taken off, And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,— If there be any cunning cruelty,

That can torment him much, and hold him long, It shall be his: You shall close prisoner rest, Till that the nature of your fault be known To the Venetian state:—Come, bring him away.

Oth. Soft you: a word or two, before you go. I have done the state some service, and they know it;

No more of that:—I pray you, in your letters, When you shall these unlucky deeds relate, Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate, Nor set down aught in malice: then must you speak

Of one, that lov'd not wisely, but too well; Of one, not easily jealous, but, being wrought, Perplex'd in the extreme: of one, whose hand, Like the base Judean, threw a pearl away, Richer than all his tribe; of one, whose subdu'd eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood, Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees Their medicinal gum: Set you down this: And say, besides,—that in Aleppo once, Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk Beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state, I took by the throat the circumcised dog, And smote him—thus. [Stabs himself.

Lod. O bloody period!

Gr. All, that's spoke, is marr'd.

Oth. I kiss'd thee, ere I kill'd thee:—No way but this, [Falling upon Desdemona. Killing myself, to die upon a kiss [Dies.

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon;

For he was great of heart.

Lod. O Spartan dog, More fall than anguish, hunger, or the sea! Look on the tragick loading of this bed!

[To Iago. This is thy work: the object poisons sight:— Let it be hid.—Gratiano, keep the house, And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor, For they succeed to you.—To you, lord governor, Remains the censure of this hellish villain: The time, the place, the torture.—O enforce it! Myself will straight aboard: and, to the state, This heavy act with heavy heart relate [Dies.

Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak.

'Tis proper I obey him, but not now:
Remember, I beg I will not go home.

Oth. O! O! O! [Hanging over his wife.]

Emil. Nay, lay thee down, and roar:
For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye.

Oth. O, she was foul!—
[Rising.]

I scarce did know you, uncle: There lies your niece, [stopp'd:]

Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly
I know this act shows horrible and grim.

Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's
dead:

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now,
This sight would make him do a desperate turn.
Yea, curse his better angel from his side,
And fall to reprobation.

Oth. 'Tis pitiful; but yet Iago knows.
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame

A thousand times committed; Cassio confess'd it:
And she did gratify his amorous works.

With that revenges and pledge of love
Which I first gave her: I saw it in his hand;

It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.

Emil. O heaven! O heavenly powers!
Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out:—I hold my peace,
sir?

No, I will speak as liberal as the air;
Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all,

All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.
Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not.
[Iago offers to stab his wife.]

Gra. [Iago offers to stab his wife.]
Your sword upon a woman!

Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of,

I found by fortune, and did give my husband:
For often with a solemn earnestness,
(More than, indeed, belongeth to such a trifle,)

He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. Villainous whore!

Emil. She gave it Cassio! no, alas; I found it,
And I did give't my husband.

Iago. Fifth, thou liest.

Emil. By heaven, I do not; I do not, gentlemen:
O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool
Do with so good a wife?

[Iago snubs Emilia, then runs out.]
Oth. Are there no stones in heaven,

But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!

Gra. The woman falls; sure he has kill'd his Emil. Ay, ay: O, lay me by my mistress' side!

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this weapon.

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:
Come, guard the door without; let him not pass,
But kill him rather; I'll after that same villain,
For 'tis a damned slave.

[Exeunt Montano and Gratiano.]
Oth. I am not valiant neither,
But every puny whipster gets my sword:—
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
And die in music:—Willow, willow, willow.—

Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel Moor;
So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;

So speaking as I think, I die.—[Dies.]

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber,
It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper;

O, here it is:—Uncle, I must come forth.
Gra. [Within.] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear;

Thou hast no weapon, and perform'st must suffer.
Oth. Look in upon me then, and speak with me,
Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter Gratiano.

Gra. What is the matter?

Oth. Behold! I have a weapon:

A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day,

That with this little arm, and this good sword,
I have made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop:—But, O vain boast!

Who can control his fate! 'tis not so now.—
Be not afraid though you do see me weapon'd;

Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.

Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear;
Man but a rush against Othello's breast.

And he retires:—Where should Othello go?—
Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-star'd wretch!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurt my soul from heaven.

And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl!
Even like thy chastity.—

O cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!

Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep down gouts of liquid fire!

O Desdemona! Desdemona! I dead!
Dead! O! O! O!

Enter Lodovico, Montano, Cassio, carried in a chair, and Officers, with Iago, prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

Oth. That's he, that was Othello; here I am.

Lod. Where is that viper! bring the villain forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet:—but that's
If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[Othello wounds Iago.]
Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Iago. I bleed, sir; but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry neither; I'd have thee
live;

For, in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.

Lod. O thou Othello, that was once so good,
Fall'n in the practice of a cursed slave

What shall be said to thee? Why, any thing:
An honourable murderer, if you will;

For aught I did in hate, but all in honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villainy:

Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.

Cos. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.

Will you, I pray you, demand that demi-devil,
Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body?

Iago. Demand me nothing: What you know,
you know:

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What? not to pray?

Gra. Torments will use your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Oth. What noise is this?—Not dead! not yet quite dead!

I. that am cruel, am yet merciful.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—
So, so.

Emil. [Within.] What ho, my lord! my lord!

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. [Within.] O, good my lord, I would speak a word with you.

Oth. Yes,—tis Emilia:—by and by:—She's dead.

'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death;
The noise was high.—Ha! no more moving!
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? Were't good?

I think, she stirs again:—No.—What's the best?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:
My wife! my wife! what wife!—I have no wife:
O, insupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon; and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.

Emil. [Within.] I do beseech you I may speak with you.

O, good my lord!
Oth. I had forgot thee: O, come in, Emilia:—
Soft,—by and by:—Let me the curtains draw.—
Where art thou! What's the matter with thee now!

[Unlocks the door.]

Enter Emilia.

Emil. O, good my lord, yonder's foul murder done.

Oth. What! now? But now, my lord!
Emil. It is the very error of the moon;
She comes more near the earth than she was wont;

And makes men mad.
Emil. Cassio, my lord, has kill'd a young Venetian, Call'd—Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd!

And Cassio kill'd!

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd! Then murder's out of tune.

And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!

Emil. Alas; what cry is that!

Oth. That! what?

Emil. Out, and alas! that was my lady's voice:—

Help! help, ho! help!—O lady, speak again!

Sweet Desdemona! O, sweet mistress, speak!

Des. A guiltless death I die.

Emil. O, who hath done this deed?

Des. Nobody; I myself; farewell!

Commend me to my kind lord; O, farewell.

[Des.]

Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd!

Emil. Alas, who knows!

Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.

Emil. She said so: I must needs report the truth.

Oth. She's, like a liar, gone to burning hell;

'Twas I that kill'd her.

Emil. O, the more angel she,

And you the blacker devil!

Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.

Oth. She was false as water.

Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false; O, she was heavenly true!

Oth. Cassio did tip her: ask thy husband else
O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,
But that I did proceed upon just grounds
To this extremity; Thy husband knew it all.

Emil. My husband!

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to wedlock!

Oth. Ay, with Cassio.

Nay, had she been true,
If heaven would make me such another world
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for it.

Emil. My husband!

Oth. Ay, 'twas he that told me first;
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.

Emil. My husband!

Oth. What needs this iteration, woman? I say thy husband.

Emil. O, mistress, villainy hath made mocks with love!—

My husband say, that she was false!

Oth. He, woman;

I say, thy husband: Dost understand the word?

My friend, thy husband, honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day! he lies to the heart:

She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha!

Emil. Do thy worst;

This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not half the power to do me harm.

As I have to be hurt. O gull! O dolt!

As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed.—
I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee know
Though I lost twenty lives:—Help! help! ho!

help! [des.]

The Moor has kill'd my mistress; Murder! murder!

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter!—How now, general?

Emil. O, are you come, Iago! you have done
well.

That men must lay their murders on your neck.

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou be't a man!

He says, thou told'st him that his wife was false:

I know, thou didst not, thou'rt not such a villain:

Speak, for my heart is full. [more]

Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no
Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him she was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a lie; an odious, damned lie;

Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie!

She false with Cassio!—Did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, mistress; Go to, charm your tongue.

Emil. I will not charm my tongue: I am bound to speak;

My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed.

All. O heavens forefend!

Emil. And your reports have set the murder on.

Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed.

Gra. 'Tis a strange truth.

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil. Villainy, villainy, villainy!—

I think upon't.—I think,—I smell't:—O villainy!—

I thought so then:—I'll kill myself for grief.—

O villainy, villainy!

Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you home.

Othello.—Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.

OTHELLO, Act V., Scene II.

965

Do you see, gentlemen! nay, guiltiness will Though tongues were out of use. (speak,

Enter Emilia.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter; what's the matter, husband?

Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark,
By Roderigo, and fellows that are scap'd;
He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio!

Iago. This is the fruit of whoring. — Pr'ythee,
Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night: —
What, do you shake at that?

Emil. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with me.

Emil. Fye, fye upon thee, strumpet!

Emil. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest,
As you that thus abuse me.

Iago. As I? foh! fye upon thee!

Emil. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dread'd: —

Come, mistress, you must tell us another tale. —

Emilia. run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what has happ'd. —

Will you go on, I pray I! This is the night.

(Aside.) That either makes me, or fordoes me quite.

(Exit Emilia.)

SCENE II. — A Bedchamber: Desdemona in bed asleep. A Lucht burning.

Enter Othello.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul, —
Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars! —
It is the cause. — Yet I'll not shed her blood;
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. —

(Takes off his sword.)
Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then put out the light;
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me: — but once put out thine,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excellency nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat,
That can thy light relume. When I have pluck'd thy ruse,

I cannot give it vital growth again,
It needs must wither: — I'll smell it on the tree. —

(Kissing her.)
O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! — One more, one
more —

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,
And love thee after: — One more, and this the last: —

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,
But they are cruel tears: This sorrow's heavenly;

It strikes, where it doth love. — She wakes —

Des. Who's there? Othello!

Oth. Ay, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des. Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you bethink yourself of any crime
Unreconcil'd as yet to heaven and grace,
Solicit for it straight. (that)

Des. Alas, my lord, what may you mean by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by:
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit:
No. — Heaven forefend. — I would not kill thy soul.

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth. Ay, I do. Then, heaven

Have mercy on me!

Oth. Amen, with all my heart!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Humph!

Des. And yet I fear you; for you are fatal then.

When your eyes roll so: Why I should fear, I know not; (fear)

Since guiltiness I know not; but yet, I feel, I

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des. They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest. (ing.)

Des. That death's unnatural, that kills for love.

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?

Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:

These are portents; but yet, I hope, I hope,

They do not point on me. Peace, and be still!

Oth. Des. I will so: What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief, which I so lov'd, and gave thee,

Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul;

Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed.

Take heed of perjury; thou'rt on thy death-bed.

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth. Yes, presently:

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;

For to deny each article with oath,

Cannot remove, nor choke, the strong conception,

That I do groin withal. Thou art to die.

Des. Then, Lord, have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too! — I never did

Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio,

Not with such general warranty of heaven

As I might love: I never gave him token

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in his hand.

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,

And mak'st me call, what I intend to do, —

A murder, which I thought a sacrifice:

I saw the handkerchief.

Des. He found it then;

I never gave it him: — Send for him hither,

And let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath — us'd thee.

Des. How! unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He'll not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.

Des. My tear interprets then. — What, is he deaf? (venge)

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great re-had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet! Weep'st thou for him to my face?

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow, let me live to-night.

Oth. Nay, if you strive, —

Des. But half an hour.

Oth. Being done,

There is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late (He smother's her.)

Emil. (Within) My lord, my lord! what ha!

my lord! my lord!

Iago. Here, at thy hand: be bold, and take thy sword.

Retires to a little distance.
Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed:
And yet he has given me satisfying reasons:—
'Tis but a man gone;—forth, my sword; he dies!

[Goes to his sword]
Iago. I have rubb'd this young quat almost to the sense.

[Sic.]
And he grows angry. Now whether he kill Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my gain: Live Roderigo,
He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold, and jewels, that I bobb'd from him,
As gifts to Desdemona;
It must not be: if Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril:
No, he must die:—But on, I hear him coming.

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gait: 'tis he:—Villain, thou diest.
[Rushes from his post, and makes a pass at Cassio]

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,
But that my crest is better than thou think'st;
I will make proof of thine.

[Draws, and wounds Roderigo.]
Rod. O, I am slain!

[Iago rushes from his post, cuts Cassio behind in the leg, and exits.]

Cas. I am maim'd for ever:—Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter Othello, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. Hark! 'tis even so.

Cas. O, help! ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he:—O brave Iago, honest, and just,
That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!
Thou teachest me.—Minion, your dear lies dead,
And your false hies apace:—Strumpet, I come:
Forth of my heart those charms, those eyes, are blotted;
Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted.

[Exit Othello.]

Enter Lodovico and Gratiano, at a distance.

Cas. What ho! no watch! no passage! murder! murder!

Gra. 'Tis some mischance; the cry is very O, help!

Lod. Hark!

Rod. O wretched villain!

Rod. Two or three groans:—it is a heavy night;
These may be counterfeits: let's think't unsafe
To come in to the cry, without more help.

Rod. No body come! then shall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago, with a light.

Lod. Hark!

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Who's there? whose noise is this, that

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did you not hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here; for heaven's sake, help me.

Iago. What's the matter?

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same, indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here, that cry so grievously?

Cas. Iago! O, I am spoil'd, undone by villains!
Give me some help!

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done

Cas. I think, that one of them is herabout,

And cannot make away

Iago. O treacherous villain!—

What are you there? come in, and give some help

Rod. O, help me here!

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O murderous slave! O villain!

[Iago stabs Roderigo.]

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!

O! O! O!

Iago. Kill men i'the dark!—Where be these

How silent is this town! Ho! murder! murder!

What may you be? are you of good, or evil?

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico!

Lod. He, sir.

Iago. I cry you merry: Here's Cassio hurt

By villains!

Gra. Cassio!

Iago. How is it, brother?

Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!

Light, gentlemen! I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter, ho! who is't that Iago. Who is't that cry'd!

Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio!

O Cassio! Cassio! Cassio!

Iago. O notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be, that have thus mangled

Cas. No.

Gra. I am sorry, to find you thus: I have been

Iago. Lend me a sarter: So—O, for a chair,

To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints:—O Cassio! Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash

To be a party in this injury—

Patience a while, good Cassio.—Come, come;

Lend me a light.—Know we this face, or no?

Alas! my friend, and my dear countryman,

Roderigo! no:—Yes, sure; O heaven! Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he, sir; did you know him?

Gra. Know him? ay.

Iago. Signior Gratiano! I cry you gentle pardon:

These bloody accidents must excuse my man-

That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio!—O, a chair, a chair!

Rod. Roderigo!

Iago. He, he, 'tis he:—O, that's well said:—

the chair:—

Some good man bear him carefully from hence;

I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—For you, mis-

treous,

Save you your labour.—He that lies slain here,

Cassio,

Was my dear friend: What malice was between

you?

Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the Iago. [To Bian.] What, look you pale?—O, bear him out o'the air.—

[Cassio and Rod. are borne off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen.—Look you pale, mis-

treous!

Do you perceive the greatness of her eye?—

Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon:—

Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her;

Oth. Will you walk, sir!—
O.—Desdemona.—

Des. My lord!
Oth. Get you to bed on the instant; I will be returned forthwith; dismiss your attendant there; look, it be done.

Des. I will, my lord.
[Exeunt Othello, Lodovico, and Attendants.]
Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says, he will return incontinent; He hath commanded me to go to bed, And bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!
Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia, Give me my nightgown, and adieu: We must not now dispense him.

Emil. I would, you had never seen him!
Des. So would not I; my love doth so approve him,

That even his stubbornness, his checks, and Prythee, unpin me,—have grace and favour in thee.

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on
Des. All's one:—Good father! how foolish are our minds!—

If I do die before thee, prythee, shroud me in one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.
Des. My mother had a maid call'd—Barbara; She was in love; and he, she lov'd, prov'd mad, And did forsake her: she had a song of—willow, An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune, And she died singing it: That song, to-night, Will not go from my mind; I have much to do, But to go hang my head all at one side,

And sing it, like poor Barbara. Prythee, despatch.
Emil. Shall I go fetch your nightgown?

Des. No, unpin me here.—
This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.
Des. And he speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice, who would have walked barefoot to Palestine, for a touch of his mother lip.

I.

Des. The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow; [Singing.
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow; [Mourning;
The fresh streams run by her, and murmur'd her
Sing willow, &c.
Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones:

Lay by these:

Sing willow, willow, willow;
Prythee, lie thee; he'll come anon.—
Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

II.

Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve,— Nay, that's not next.—Hark! who is it that Emil. It is the wind. [Knocks]

Des. I call'd my love, false love; but what said he then?
Sing willow, &c.
If I court no women, you'll couch with me men.

So get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do Doubt that bode weeping! [Exit]

Emil. 'Tis neither here nor there.
Des. I have heard it said so.—O, these men, these men!

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,—That there be women do abuse their husbands In such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.
Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. Why, would not you?
Des. No, by this heavenly light!

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light; I might do't as well i'the dark.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?
Emil. The world is a huge thing: 'Tis a great For a small vice.

Des. Good troth, I think thou would'st not.
Emil. By my troth, I think I should; and undon't, when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring; nor for measures of lawn; nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any pretty exhibition; but, for the whole world,—Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'the world; and, having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.
Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many To the vantage, as would store the world they play'd for.

But, I do think, it is their husbands' faults, If wives do fall: Say, that they slack their duties, And pour out treasures into foreign laps; Or else break out in peevish jealousies, [as, Throwing restraint upon us; or, say, they strike Or scant our former having in despite; [grace, Why, we have galls; and, though we have some Yet we have some revenge. Let husbands know, Their wives have sense like them; they see, and smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour, As husbands have. What is it that they do, When they change us for others? Is it sport? I think, it is; And doth affection breed it? I think, it doth; Is't frailty, that thus errs? It is so too: And have not we affections? Desires for sport? and frailty, as men have? Then, let them use us well: else, let them know, The ills we do, their ills instruct us to.

Des. Good night, good night: Heaven me such usage send, Not to pick bad from bad; but, by bad, mend! [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter Iago and Roderigo.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come: Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home: Quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow: It makes us, or it maims us; think on that, And fix most firm thy resolution.
Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

To be called—where? would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Bestrew him for it!
How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain,
Some busy and insinuating rascal,

Some crowding concealing slave, to get some office,
Have not deval'd this slander; I'll be hang'd, else.

Iago. Eye, there is no such man; it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him!

Emil. A halter pardon him! and hell gaw his bones!

Why should he call her, where? who keeps her company?

What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?

The Moor's sin'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow:—

O heaven, that such companions thou'dst unfold;
And put in every honest hand a whip.

To lash the rascal naked through the world,
Even from the east to the west!

Iago. Speak within door.

Emil. O, ye upon him! some such squire he was,
That turn'd your wit the seamy side without.

And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. O good Iago.

What shall I do to win my lord again?
Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven,

I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:—
If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,

Either in discourse of thought, or actual deed;
Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,

Delighted them in any other form;
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,

And ever will,—though he do shake me off
To beggary divorcement,—love him dearly,

Comfort forward me! Unkindness may do much;
And his unkindness may defeat my life,

But never taint my love. I cannot say, where;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word;

To do the act that might the addition earn,
Nor the world's mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, be content; 'tis but his humour;
The business of the state does him offence,

And he does chide with you.

Des. If 'twere no other,—

Iago. It is but so, I warrant you. (Trumpets.
Mark, how these instruments summon to supper!

And the great messengers of Venice stay:
Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

(Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.)

Enter Roderigo.

How now, Roderigo?

Rod. I do not find, that thou dost justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?

Rod. Every day thou dost at me with some device, Iago; and rather (as it seems to me now,) keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will, indeed, so longer endure it: Nor am I yet persuaded, to put up in peace what already I have justly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo?

Rod. Faith, I have heard too much: for your words, and performances, are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rod. With ought but truth. I have wasted myself out of all means. The jewels you have led from me, to deliver to Desdemona, would half have corrupted a votarist:—You have told me—she has received them, and returned me expressions and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance; but I did none.

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor 'tis not very well: By this hand, I say, it is very scurvy; and begin to find myself fobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you, 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona; if she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself, I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee; and even from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo. Thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet, I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant, indeed, it hath not appeared; and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that within thee, indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean, purgess, courage, and valour,—this night show it: if thou the next night following enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and devise engines for my life.

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, so; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his shade be lingered here by some accident; where-in none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean—removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me do?

Iago. Ay; if you dare do yourself a profit, and a right. He sups to-night with a harlot, and thither will I go to him:—he knows not yet of his honourable fortune: if you will watch his going thence, (which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one,) you may take him at your pleasure; I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste; about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. (Exeunt.)

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Castle.

Enter (Roderigo, Lodovico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.)

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. O, pardon me; 'twill do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good night. I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy: the purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—go—

[Exit Emilia.]
She says enough—yet she's a simple hawk.
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle whore,
A closet-luck-and-key of villainous secrets:
And yet she'll kneel, and pray: I have seen her do't.

Re-enter Emilia, with Desdemona.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes:

I look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. Some of your function, mistress:

[To Emilia.]

I leave procurements alone, and shut the door;

(ough, or cry—hem, if any lady come:

Your mystery, your mystery:—nay, despatch.

[Exit Emilia.]

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech import?

I understand a fury in your words,

But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true

And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;

Last, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves

[damn't.]

Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double-

Swear—thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows, that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? How am I false?

Oth. O Desdemona!—away! away! away!

Des. Alas, the heavy day!—Why do you weep?

Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord?

If, haply, you my father do suspect,

An instrument of this your calling back,

Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost him,

Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd heaven

To try me with affliction; had he ruin'd

All kinds of sures, and shames, on my bare head;

Steed'd me in poverty to the very lips;

Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes;

I should have found in some part of my soul

A drop of patience: but (alas!) to make me

A fixed figure, for the time of scorn

To point his slow unmoving finger at,—

O! O!

Yet could I hear that too: well, very well:

But there, where I have garner'd up my heart;

Where either I must live, or bear no life;

The fountain from the which my current runs,

Or else dries up; to be discarded thence!

Or keep it as a cistern, for foul toads

To knot and gender in!—turn thy complexion

there!

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin;

Ay, there, look grim as hell!

Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest.

Oth. O, ay; as summer flies are in the sables,

That quicken even with blowing. O thou weed,

Whose art as lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet,

That the senses ache at thee.—'Would, thou

hadst as ne'er been born!

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?

Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,

Made to write where upon? What committed!

Committed!—O thou public commoner

I should make very forces of my cheeks,

That would to cinders burn up modesty

Did I but speak thy deeds.—What committed!

Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks

The heavy wind, that kisses all it meets,

Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,

And will not hear it: What committed!

Impudent strumpet!

Des. By heaven, you do me wrong

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a christian:

If to preserve this vessel for my lord,

From any other foul unlawful touch,

Be—not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be saved.

Oth. Is it possible?

Des. O, heaven forgive us!

Oth. I cry you mercy, then:

I took you for that cunning whore of Venice,

That married with Othello.—You, mistress,

Re-enter Emilia.

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,

And keep the gate of hell: You! you! ay, you!

We have done our course; there's money for your pains;

I pray you, turn the key, and keep our counsel.

[Exit.]

Emil. Alas, what does this gentleman comceive!—

How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?

Des. Faith, half asleep

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?

Des. With who?

Emil. Why, with my lord, madam.

Des. Who is this lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.

Des. I have none: Do not talk to me, Emilia;

I cannot weep; nor answer I have none,

But what should go by water. Prythee, to-night

Lay on my bed my wedding sheets,—remember,—

And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Here is a change, indeed!

[Exit.]

Des. 'Tis meet I should be us'd so, very meet.

How have I been behav'd, that he might stick

The small'st opinion on my great'st abuse!

Re-enter Emilia, with Iago.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is it with you?

Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young hopes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks:

He might have chid me so; for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?

Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so beword'd her,

Thru such deep spite and heavy terms upon her,

As true hearts cannot bear.

Iago. Am I that name, Iago?

Des. What name, fair lady?

Des. Such as, she says, my lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her, whore; a beggar, in his drink,

Could not have laid such terms upon his caller.

Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know; I am sure, I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep: Alas the day!

Emil. Has she forsook so many noble matches,

Her father, and her country, and her friends,

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is:—So delicate with her needle!—An admirable musician! O, she will sing the savageness out of a bear!—Of so high and plenteous wit and invention!

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. O, a thousand, a thousand times:—And then, of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle!

Oth. Nay, that's certain: But yet the pity of it, Iago!—O, Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend: for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into messes:—Cuckold me!

Iago. O, 'tis foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's Fowler!

Oth. Get some poison, Iago: this night:—I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide my mind again:—this night, Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good: the justice of it pleases; very good.

Iago. And, for Cassio,—let me be his undertaker: You shall hear more by and by.

[A trumpet within.]

Oth. Excellent good:—What trumpet is that mine?

Iago. So nothing from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico.

[Within.]

Come from the duke: and, see, your wife is with

Enter Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Lod. 'Save you, worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you.

[Gives him a packet.]

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

[Opens the packet and reads.]

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you: how does lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fallen between him and

An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord!

Oth. This fail you not to do, as you will—

[Rings.]

Lod. He did not call: he's busy in the paper. Is there division 'twixt thy lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one: I would do much

To atone them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone!

Des. My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. 'May be, the letter mov'd him; for, as I think, they do command him home,

Depositing Cassio in his government.

Des. By my troth, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed?

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. How, sweet Othello?

Oth. Devil!

Des. I have not deserv'd this.

Lod. My lord, this would not be believ'd in Venice.

Though I should swear I saw it: 'Tis very much; Make her amends, she weeps.

Oth. O devil, devil!

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,

Each drop she falls would prove a crucible:—

Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you.

[Goes.]

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:—

I do beseech your lordship, call her back.

Oth. Mistress—

Des. My lord?

Oth. What would you with her, sir?

Lod. Who I, my lord?

Oth. Ay: you did wish, that I would make her

Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on,

And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep;

And she's obedient, as you say,—obedient,—

Very obedient:—Fenced you in your tears—

Concerning this, sir,—O well painted passion!

I am commanded home:—Get you away:—

'I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate,

And will return to Venice;—Hence, avaunt!

[Exit Desdemona.]

Cassio shall have my place. And,—sir, to-night,

I do entreat that we may sup together.

You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus. Goats and monkies! [Exit.]

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full senate

Call—all-in-all sufficient!—This the noble nature

Whom passion could not shake? whose wild virtue

'The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,

Could neither graze, nor pierce!

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?

Iago. He is that he is; I may not breathe my censure.

What he might be,—if, what he might be, is not,—

I would to heaven, he were.

Lod. What, strike his wife!

Iago. 'Faith, that was not so well; yet 'would I

That stroke would prove the worst.

[Knows.]

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the letters work upon his blood,

And new-create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me, to speak [him];

What I have seen and known. You shall observe

And his own courses will denote him so,

That I may save my speech: Do but go after,

And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry, that I am deceiv'd in him.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?

Emil. Nor ever heard; nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together,

Emil. But then I saw no harm; and then I heard

Each syllable, that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

Emil. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,

Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,

Remove your thought; it doth abuse your honesty,

If any wretch hath put this in your head,

Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!

Oth. Did he confess it?
Iago. Good sir, he a man;
 Think, every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
 May draw with you: there's millions now alive,
 That nightly lie in those unproper beds,
 Which they dare swear peculiar: your case is
 better:

O. 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
 To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
 And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;
 And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall
Oth. O, thou art wise; 'tis certain.

Iago. Stand you awhile apart;
 Confine yourself but in a patient list. [cries]
 Whilst you were here, ere while mind with your
 (A passion most unsetting such a man.)
Cassio came hither: I shifted him away.
 And laid round 'house upon your ecstasy:
 Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;
 The which he promis'd. Do but ensue yourself.

Iago. And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable
 'That dwell in every region of his face:
 For I will make him tell the tale anew,—
 Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
 He hath, and is again to cope your wife;
 I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;
 Or, I shall say, you are all in all in spleen,
 And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?
 I will be found most cunning in my patience;
 But (dost thou hear?) must be bloody.

Iago. 'That's not amiss;
 But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?
 [Othello withdraws.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
 A housewife, that, by selling her desires,
 Buys herself bread and clothes: it is a creature. [plagues]
 That does on Cassio,—as 'tis the strumpet's
 To beguile many, and be beguil'd by none;
 He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
 From the excess of laughter:—Here he comes:—

Re-enter Cassio

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
 And his unbookish jealousy must construe Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, [sings]
 Quite in the wrong. — How do you now, lieutenant?

Cas. The worse, that you give me the advance want even kills me. [sings]
Iago. Fly Devilishness well, and you are sure
 Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power, [sings]
 How quickly should you speed!

Cas. Alas, poor captain!
Oth. Look, how he laughs already! [sings]
Iago. I never knew a woman love man so.

Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think I faith, she loves me.

Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out. [sings]
Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Oth. He importunes him
 To tell it o'er: Go to; well said, well said.

Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry
 Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha!
Oth. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph? [sings]

Cas. I marry her!—what? a customer! I prythee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. So, so, so, so: They laugh that win.

Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes, that you shall marry
 her. [sings]

Cas. Prythee, say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Oth. Have you scored me? Well. [sings]

Cas. 'This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story. [sings]

Cas. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians: and thither comes this haubie; by this hand, she falls thus about my neck;

Oth. Crying, O dear Cassio! as it were: her gesture imports it. [sings]

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me;
 so hules, and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!

Oth. Now he tells, how she plucked him to my chamber: O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to. [sings]

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look, where she comes.

Enter Bianca

Cas. 'Tis such another scutcheon! marry, a performed one.—What do you mean by this laughing of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you!
 What did you mean by that same handkerchief, you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the whole work!

Cas. A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! 'Tis some minx's token, and I must take out the work! There,—give it your hobby horse: where-soever you laid it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca! how now!
 how now!

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief! [sings]

Bian. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may: an you will not, come when you are next prepared for. [sings]

Iago. After her, after her.
Cas. 'Faith, I must, she'll rail in the street else.

Iago. Will you sap there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Prythee, come; Will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more. [sings]

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice?

Oth. O, Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand: and to see how he prizes the foolish woman, your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it her whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a killing:—
 A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damned to night; for she shall not live: No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand.
 O, the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster
Begot upon itself, Born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen. (about:
Des. I will go seek him. — Cassio, walk here-if I do find him st. I'll move your suit,
And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.
(Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.)

Enter Bianca.

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?
How is it with you, my most fair Bianca?

Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.
What I keep a week away! seven days and nights!

Eight score eight hours! and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the diat eight score times!
O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca;
I have this while with leaden thoughts been
press'd.

But I shall, in a more continuant time,
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

(Giving her Desdemona's handkerchief.)
Take me this work out.

Bian. O, Cassio, whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend.

To the felt absence now I feel a cause:
Is it come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Woman, go to!
Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth.

From whence you have them. You are jealous
now.

That this is from some mistress, some remember, in good troth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whence is it?
Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber.

I like the work well; ere it be demanded,
(As like enough, it will,) I'll have it copied.

Take it, and do't; and leave me for this time.
Bian. Leave you? wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;
And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?
Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.
I pray you, bring me on the way a little;

And say, if I shall see you soon at night.
Cas. 'Tis but a little way, that I can bring you,
For I attend here: but I'll see you soon.

Bian. 'Tis very good; I must be circumstanc'd.
(Exeunt.)

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Othello and Iago.

Iago. Will you think so?
Oth. Think so, Iago? What,

To kiss in private?
Oth. An unauthor'd kiss.

Iago. Or to be naked with her friend abed,
An hour, or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth. Naked abed, Iago, and not mean harm?

It is hypocrisy against the devil:
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt
heaven.

Iago. So they do nothing 'tis a venial slip:
But if I give my wife a handkerchief,—

Oth. What then?
Iago. Why, then 'tis here, my lord; and, being
She may, I think, bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too;
May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;
They have it very oft, that have it not.

But, for the handkerchief.— (not it:—
Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have fur-
Thou saw'st,—O, it comes o'er my memory,
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boding to all,—he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?
Oth. That's not so good, now.

Iago. What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say,—As knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary doteage of some mistress,
Convinced or supplied them, cannot choose
But they must blab—

Oth. Hath he said any thing?
Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well as-
No more than he'll unswear. (sne'd:
Oth. Faith, that he did,—I know not what he Oth. What? what? (sld.
Iago. Lie—
Oth. With her!

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.
Oth. Lie with her! he on her!—We say, he on her, when they belie her: Lie with her! that's felsome.—Handkerchief,—confessions,—handkerchief.—To confess, and be hanged for his labour,
—First, to be hanged, and then to confess:—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction. It is not words that shake me thus:
—Push!—Noses, ears, and lips:—Is it possible I—Confess!—Handkerchief!—O devil!

(Falls in a trance.) Iago. Work on,
My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are
And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus,
All guiltless meet reproach.—What, ho! my
lord!

Enter Cassio.

My lord, I say! Othello!—How now, Cassio?
Cas. What is the matter?

Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsy;
This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the temples.
Iago. No, forbear:

The lethargy must have his quiet course:
If not, he falls at mouth; and, by and by,
Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:

Do you withdraw yourself a little while,
He will recover straight; when he is gone,
I would on great occasion speak with you—

(Exit Cassio.)
How is it, general? have you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mock me?
Iago. I mock you! no, by heaven:

'Would, you would bear your fortunes like a
man.

Oth. A horned man's a monster, and a beast.
Iago. There's many a beast thou in a populous
And many a civil monster. (city,

Oth. Give me your hand: This hand is moist,
My lady.
Des. It yet has felt no age, nor known no sor-
Oth. This argues fruitfulness, and liberal heart;
Hot, hot, and moist: This hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer,
Much castigation, exercise devout,
For here's a young and sweating devil here,
That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,
A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;
For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.
Oth. A liberal hand: The hearts, of old, gave hands:

But our new heraldry is—hands, not hearts.
Des. I cannot speak of that. Come now, your promise.

Oth. What promise, chuck? [you].
Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with
Oth. I have a salt and sulfer rheum offends me;
Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.
Oth. That which I gave you.
Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?
Des. No, indeed, my lord.
Oth. That is a fault:

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people: she told her, while she kept it,

'Twould make her amiable, and subdue my father
Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eyes [hunt
Should hold her keenly, and his spirits should
After new fancies: She, dying, gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wive,
To give it her. I did so: and take heed of't,
Make it a darling like your precious eye;
To lose or give't away, were such perdition,
As nothing else could match.

Des. Is it possible?
Oth. 'Tis true: There's magic in the web of
A sibil, that had number'd in the world [it:
The sun to make two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;
The worms were hallow'd, that did breed the silk;
And it was dy'd in mummy, which the skillful
Conserv'd of maktens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is't true?
Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to't well.
Des. Then 'twould to heaven, that I had never seen it.

Oth. Ha! wherefore?
Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash?
Oth. Is't lost? is't gone? I speak, as it out of the way?

Des. Heaven bless us!
Oth. Say you?
Des. It is not lost; But what an if it were?
Oth. Ha!

Des. I say, it is not lost.
Oth. Fetch't, let me see it.

Des. Why, as I can, sir, but I will not now;
This is a trick, to put me from my suit;
I pray, let Cassio be receiv'd again.

Oth. Fetch me that handkerchief: my mind misgives.

Des. Come, come;
You'll never meet a more sufficient man.
Oth. The handkerchief, I pray.

Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.
Oth. The handkerchief.
Des. A man that, all his time,

Has founded his good fortune on your love,
Shard dangers with you;—
Oth. The handkerchief;—

Des. In sooth,
You are to blame.
Oth. Away! [Exit Othello.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?
Des. I ne'er saw this before.
Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief;
I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man:
They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,
They belch us. Look you! Cassio, and my husband.

Enter Iago and Cassio.

Iago. There is no other way: 'tis she must do't;
And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.
Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news
with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech you,
That, by your virtuous means, I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love.

Whom I, with all the duty of my heart,
Entirely honour: I would not be delay'd:
If my offences be of such mortal kind,
That neither service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpose'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content,
And shut myself up in some other course,
To fortune's aims.

Des. Alas! thrice-gentle Cassio,
My advocacy is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd.
So help me, every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blank of his displeasure,
For my free speech! You must a while be patient: What I can do, I will; and more I will, [tend:
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?
Emil. He went hence but now,
And, certainly, in strange uneasiness. [now,

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the candour: When it blows his rank into the air:
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother:—And can he be angry?
Something of moment, then: I will go meet him;
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I prythee, do so.—Something, sure, of state,— [Exit Iago.
Either from Venice; or some unhatch'd practice,
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,—
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things.
Though great ones are their objects. 'Tis even so:
For let our finer senses, and it induces
Our other healthful members ev'n to that sense
Of pain: Nay, we must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observances.

As fit the bridal.—Besirew me much, Emilia,
I was (unhandsome warrior as I am)
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find, I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indicted falsely. [think:
Emil. Pray heaven, it be state matters, as you
And no conception, nor no jealous toy,
Concerning you.

Des. Alas, the day! I never gave him cause.
Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But ever jealous for the cause,

Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion: I do repent me that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would I say, I will.

Iago. And may: But, how I how satisfied, my lord?
Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on?
Behold her tupp'd!

Oth. Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think, To bring them to that prospect: Damn them then, If ever mortal eyes do see them blotter, More than their own! What then? how then? What shall I say? Where's satisfaction? It is impossible, you should see this, Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys, As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say, If impatience, and strong circumstanced, Which lead directly to the door of truth,— Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.

Oth. Give me a living reason she's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office:

But, with I am enter'd in this cause so far,— Frick'd to it by foolish honesty and love,— I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately; And, being troubled with a raging tooth, I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul, That in their sleeps will murther their affairs: One of this kind is Cassio:

In sleep I heard him say,—Sweet Desdemona,

Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand,

Cry,—O, sweet creature! and then kiss me hard,

As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots,

That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg

O'er my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then

Cry'd,—Sweet girl! that gave thee to the Moor.

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this dream'd a foregone conclusion;

'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs,

That do demonstrate thine.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we have nothing done:

See may be honest yet. Tell me but this—

Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief,

Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one: 'twas my first gift.

Iago. I know not that: but such a handkerchief,

(I am sure it was your wife's) did I to-day

See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Iago. If it be that, or any that was her's,

It speaks against her, with the other proofs.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives!

One is too poor, too weak for my revenge!

Now do I see 'tis true.—Look here, Iago:

All my fond love thus I do blow to heaven:

The hand.

Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell!

Yield up, O love, thy crown and hearted throne,

To tyrannous hate! swell, bosom, with thy fraught,

For 'tis of aspics' tongues!

Iago. Pray, be content.

Oth. O, blood, Iago, blood!

Iago. Patience, I say: your mind, perhaps, may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontick sea,

Whose icy current and compulsive course

Ne'er fails returning ebb, but keeps due on

To the Propontick, and the Hellespont;

Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,

Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,
Till that capable and wide revenge
Swallow them up.—Now, by yond' marble heaven,
In the due reverence of a sacred vow
I here engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet—

[Kneels.] Witness, you ever-burning lights above!

You elements that clip us round about!

Witness, that here Iago doth give up

The execution of his wit, hands, heart,

To wrong'd Othello's service! let him command

And to obey shall be in me remorse,

What bloody work soever.

Oth. I greet thy love,

Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance hunteous.

And will upon the instant put thee to't:

Within three hours days let me hear thee say,

That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead: 'tis done, at your request: But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn her!

Come, go with me up: I will withdraw.

To furnish me with some swift means of death

For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.

Iago. I am your own for ever.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where lieutenant

Cassio lies?

Clow. I dare not say, he lies any where.

Des. Why, man?

Clow. He is a soldier; and for me to say a soldier lies, is staining.

Des. Go in: Where lodges he?

Clow. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clow. I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say—he lies here, or he lies there, were to be in my own throat.

Des. Can you enquire him out, and he be edified by report?

Clow. I will caterchise the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither: tell him,

I have nursed my lord in his behalf, and hope, all will be well.

Clow. To do this, is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it.

[Exit.] Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief,

Emilia?

Emil. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my

Fall of crusellous. And, but my noble Moor is true of mind, and made of no such humours

As jealous creatures are, it were enough

To put him to ill thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think, the sun, where he was born,

Drew all such humours from him.

Emil. Look, where he comes.

Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio

Be call'd to him.—How is't with you, my lord?

Enter Othello.

Oth. Well, my good lady:—[Aside] O, hardness to discern!—

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord

Into the vale of years:—yet that's not mock;—
She's gone; I am abus'd; and my relief
Must be—to loath her O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love.
For others' uses. Yet 'tis the plague of great ones;
Promotiv's they are less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death;
Even then this forked plague is fated to us,
When we do quicken. Desdemona comes:

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!—
I'll not believe it.

Des. How now, my dear Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame. [Well?]
Des. Why is your speech so faint? I am not
Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.
Des. Faith, that's with watching; 'twill away.
Let me but bind it hard, within this hour [again]:
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little;
[He puts the handkerchief from him, and it drops.]
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.
[Exeunt Oth. and Des.]

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Wood'd me to steal it; but she so loves the token,
[For he conjur'd her, she would ever keep it.]
That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kiss, and talk to. I'll have the work 't'en out,
And give it lago;
What he'll do with it, heaven knows, not I;
I nothing, but to please his fantasy.

Enter lago.

lago. How now! what do you here alone?
Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
lago. A thing for me?—it is a common thing.
Emil. Ha!

lago. To have a foolish wife.
Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

lago. What handkerchief?
Emil. What the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

lago. Hast stolen it from her?
Emil. No, faith; she let it drop by negligence;
And, to the advantage, I, being there, took't up.
Look, here it is.

lago. A good wench; give it me.
Emil. What will you do with it, that you have been so earnest
To have me fetch it?

lago. Why, what's that to you?
[Snatching it.]
Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Give it me again: Poor lady! she'll run mad,
When she shall lack it.

lago. Be not you known oft; I have use for it.
Go, leave me.
I will in Cassio's lodging see this napkin,
And let him find it: Trifles, light as air,
Are, to the jealous, confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison:—
Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons,

Which, at the first, are scarce found to distaste;
But, with a little set upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so:—

Enter Othello.

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandra-
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'st yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me!
To me!

lago. Why, how now, general! no more of that.
Oth. Avaunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the rack:—

I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Than but to know't a little.

lago. How now, my lord?
Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?
I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:
I slept the next night well, was free and merry;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.

lago. I am sorry to hear this.
Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioneers and all, had tasted her sweet body.
So I had nothing known: O now, for ever,
Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!
And O you mortal engines, whose rude throats
The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit, Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

lago. Is it possible?—My lord, —
Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore;
Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof;

[Taking him by the throat.]
Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog,
Than answer my weak'd wrath.

lago. Is it come to this?
Oth. Make me to see it; or (at the least) so prove it.

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on: or, woe upon thy life!
lago. My noble lord, —

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate;
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd,
For nothing comes to thee to damnation add,
Greater than that.

lago. O grace! O heaven defend me!
Are you a man? have you a soul, or sense?
God be wi' you; take mine office.—O wretched fool,
That liv'st to make thine honesty a vice! —
O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world,
To be direct and honest, is not safe. —

I thank you for this profit; and from hence,
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.
Oth. Nay, stay:—Thou should'st be honest.
lago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool,
And loses that it works for.

By the world,
I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not;
I'll have some proof: Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrinn'd and black
As mine own face — If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or sufficing streams,
I'll not endure it — Would, I were satisfied!

Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess,
As I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses: and oft my jealous
Shapes faults that are not,—I entreat you then,
From one that so imperfectly conceits,
You'd take no notice: nor build yourself a trouble

Out of his scattering and unsure observance:—
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name, in man and woman, dear
Is the immediate jewel of their souls:

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing; [sands;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thou-
But he, that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed!

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thought.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand:

Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha!

Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
The meat it feeds on: That cuckold lives in hiss.

Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger:
But, O, what damned minutes tell he o'er,
Who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly
Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor, and content, is rich, and rich enough:

But riches, ifless, is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor:—
Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

Oth. Why? why is this?

Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No: to be once in doubt,
Is—once to be resolv'd: Exchange me for a son.

When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exordium, and blown surmises,
Matching his inference. 'Tis not to make me jealous.

To say—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves con-is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well;
Where virtue is, there are more virtues:
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt:
For she had eyes, and chose me: No, Iago;
I'll see, before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And, on the proof, there is no more but this,—
Away at once with love, or jealousy.

Iago. I am glad of this; for now I shall have reason

To show the love and duty that I bear you
With franker spirit; therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me:—I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio:

Wear your eye—thus, not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abused; look to't:
I know our country's disposition well;
In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience

—not to leave undone, but keep unknown.

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying
you;
And, when she seem'd to shake, and fear your
She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then;
She that so young, could give out such a seem-
To seal her father's eyes up, close as oak, [ing,
He thought, 'twas witchcraft;—But I am much to blame;

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon,
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see, this hath a little dash'd your

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot. [spirits.

Iago. Trust me, I fear it has.

I hope, you will consider, what is spoke Comes from my love:—But, I do see you are mov'd:—

I am to pray you, not to strain my speech

To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,

Than to suspicion

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,

My speech should fall into such vile success
As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend:—

My lord, I see you are mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd:—

I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to think so!

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,—

Iago. Ay, there's the point:—As,—to be bold

with you,—

Not to affect many proposed matches,
Of her own climate, complexion, and degree;
Wherein, we see, in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.—

But, pardon me: I do not in position,
Distinctly speak of her: though I may fear,
Her will, revolting to her better judgment,
May fall to match you with her country forms,
And (happily) repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;
Set on thy wife to observe: Leave me, Iago.

Iago. My lord, I take my leave. [Goes.

Oth. Why did I marry!—This honest creature, doubtless,

Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. My lord, I would, I might entreat your honour

To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:
And though it be fit that Cassio have his place,
(For, sure, he fills it up with great ability.)

Yet, if you please to hold him off awhile,
You shall by that perceive him and his means:

Note, if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity:

Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my fears.

(As worthy cause I have, to fear—I am.)

And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,

And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,

Of human dealings: If I do prove her hazzard,

Though that her senses were her dear heart-strings

I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,

To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black;

And have not those soft parts of conversation

That chamberers have: Or, for I am declin'd

Cas. Madam, not now; I am very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.

Des. Well, well.
Do your discretion. Ha! I like not that.

Jago. What dost thou say? (what.)

Jago. Nothing, my lord; or if—I know not.

Oth. Was not that Cassio, parted from my wife?

Jago. Cassio, my lord? No, sure, I cannot think

That he would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing you coming.

Oth. I do believe 'twas he.

Des. How now, my lord?

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is't you mean?

Des. Why, your lieutenant Cassio. Good my lord, I have any grace, or power to move you,

His present reconciliation take;

For, if he be not one that truly loves you,
That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,

I have no judgment in an honest face:
I pry thee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. Ay, sooth; so humbled,
That he hath left part of his grief with me;

I suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other

Des. But shall't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall't be to-night at supper?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home;

I meet the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday

Or Tuesday noon, or night; or Wednesday

I pray thee, name the time; but let it not Exceed three days: in faith he's penitent;

And yet his trespass in our common reason, (Save that, they say, the wars must make examples

Out of their best,) is not almost a fault

To incur a private check: When shall he come?

Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul,

What you could ask me, that I should deny,

Or stand so mummuring on. What! Michael

Cassio,
That came a wooing with you; and many a time,

When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part; to have so much to do

To bring him in! Trust me, I could do much.—
Oth. Prythee, no more: let him come when

I will deny thee nothing. (he will.)

Des. Why, this is not a boon;

'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm;

Or sue to you to do peculiar profit
To your own person: Nay, when I have a suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of penze and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing:

Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

Des. Shall I deny you I go: Farewell, my lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I will come to thee straight. (teach you.)

Des. Emilia, come:—Be it as your fancies

Whate'er you be, I am obedient.

(Exit, with Emilia.)

Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,

But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Jago. My noble lord.

Oth. What dost thou say, Jago?

Jago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my

Know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last: Why dost thou ask?

Jago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;

No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Jago?

Jago. I did not think, he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes; and went between us very oft.

Jago. Indeed?

Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed:—Discreet at that?

Jago. He is not honest.

Oth. Honest, my lord?

Jago. My lord, for ought I know.

Oth. What dost thou think?

Jago. Think, my lord?

Oth. I think, my lord.

By heaven, he echoes me,
As if there were some monster in his thought

To hideous to be shown.—Thou dost mean something:

I heard thee say but now,—Thou lik'st not that

When Cassio left my wife; What did'st not like?

And, when I told thee—he was of my counsel

In my whole course of wooing, thou cry'st,

indeed!

And did'st contract and purse thy brow together,

As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain

Some horrible conceit: If thou dost love me,

Show me thy thought.

Jago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost;

And,—for I know thou art full of love and honesty,

And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them

Therefore these stops of thine fright me the

more:

For such things in a false display kneave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,

They are close denunciations, working from the

That passion cannot rule. (heart.)

Jago. For Michael Cassio,—

I dare he sworn, I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Jago. Men should be what they seem;

Or, those that be not, 'would they might seem some!

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Jago. Why then,

I think that Cassio is an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this:

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings.

As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of

The worst of words. (thoughts)

Jago. Good my lord, pardon me;

Though I am bound to every act of duty,

I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.

Utter my thoughts? Why, say, they are vile and false,—

As where's that palace, whereunto foul thoughts

Sometimes intrude not! who has a treasure as

But some uncleanly apprehensions? (pure

Keep leets, and law-days, and in session sit

With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend,

Jago,

If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his

A stranger to thy thoughts.

Jago. I do beseech you,—

Retire thee: go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say, thou shalt know more hereafter:
Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Rod.] Two things are to be done.—

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress;
I'll see her on;
Myself, the while, to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump when he may Cassio find
Solacing his wife:—Ay, that's the way;
Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before the Castle.

Enter Cassio, and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here, I will content your pains, [General]
Something that's brief; and bid—good-morrow. [Musick.]

Enter Clown.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instrument's been at Naples, that they speak i'th nose thus!

1 Mus. How, sir, how!

Clo. Are these, I pray you, called wind instruments?

1 Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clo. O, thereby hangs a tale!

1 Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir?

Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you: and the general so likes your musick, that he desires you, of all loves, to make no more noise with it.

1 Mus. Well, sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any musick that may not be heard, to't again: but, as they say, to hear musick, the general does not greatly care.

1 Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away: Go; vanish into air; away!

[Exit Musicians.]

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend; I hear
you.

Cas. Prythee, keep up thy quillies. There's a poor piece of gold for thee: if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife, be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech: Wilt thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring, sir; if she will stir hither,
I shall seem to notify unto her. [Exit.]

Enter Iago.

Cas. Do, good my friend.—In happy time, Iago.
Iago. You have not been a-bed then?

Cas. Why, no: the day had broke

Before we parted. I have mudd bold, Iago,

To send in to your wife: My suit to her

Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona

Procure me some access.

Iago. I'll send her to you presently;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor

Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. [Exit.]

Cas. I humbly thank you for't. I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant: I am sorry

For your displeasure; but all will soon be well.
The general, and his wife, are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly: The Moor replies,
That he, you hurt, is of great fame in Cyprus,
And great affinity; and that, in wholesome wisdom, [Loves you;
He might not but refuse you: but, he protests, he
And needs no other suitor, but his likings,
To take the safe occasion by the front,
To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—

If you think fit, or that it may be done,—

Give me advantage of some brief discourse

With Desdemona alone.

Emil.

Pray you, come in:

I will bestow you where you shall have time

To speak your bosom freely.

Cas.

I am much bound to you.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot;

And, by him, do my duties to the state:

That done, I will be walking on the works,

Repair there to me.

Iago.

Well, my good lord, I'll do't.

Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see't?

Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Before the Castle.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do

All my abilities in thy behalf

Emil. Good madam; do; I know, it grieves my husband,

As if the cause were his.

[Cassio.]

Des. O, that's an honest fellow.—Do not doubt,

But I will have my lord and you again

As friendly as you were.

Cas.

Bounteous madam,

Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,

He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. O, sir, I thank you: You do love my lord:

You have known him long; and be you well as-sur'd,

He shall in strangeness stand no further off

Than in a pulchick distance.

Cas.

Ay, but, lady,

That policy may either last so long,

Or feed upon such nice and watrish diet,

Or breed itself so out of circumstance,

That, I being absent, and my place supplied,

My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that: before Emilia here,

I give thee warrant of thy place: assure thee

If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it

To the last article: my lord shall never rest;

I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience:

His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift;

I'll intermingle every thing he does

With Cassio's suit: The refore be merry, Cassio,

For thy solicitor shall rather die,

Than give thy cause away

Enter Othello and Iago, at a distance.

Emil.

Madam, here comes

My lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.

Des.

Why, stay,

And hear me speak.

Enter Desdemona, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up;—
I'll make thee an example.

Des. What's the matter, dear?
Sir, for your hurts.
Myself will be your surgeon: Lead him off.

(To Montano, who is led off.)
Iago, look with care about the town; [ed—
And silence those whom this vile brawl distract—
Come, Desdemona: 'tis the soldier's life.
To have their balm's slanders wak'd with strife.

(Exeunt all but Iago and Cassio.)
Iago. What are you hurt, lieutenant?
Cas. Ay, past all surgery.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!
Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part, sir, of myself, and what remains is best-tal.—My reputation, Iago, my reputation

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound: there is more offence in that, than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition: oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: You have lost no reputation at all, unless you repulse yourself such a fool. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again: You are but now cast in his need, a punishment more in policy than in malice;
even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an impetuous lion: sue to him again, and he is yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to be despised, than to deceive as good a commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk?
and speak parrot! and aquabill! I swear!
and discourse fustian with one's own shadow!—
O those invincible spirits of wine, if there last no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil!

Iago. What was he that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.
Iago. Is it possible?

Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.—O, that men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains! that we should, with Jag, revel, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: How came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleased the devil, drunkenness, to give place to the devil, wrath: one unperfectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself.

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moralist: As the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is, mend it for your own good.

Cas. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me, I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O strange!—Every inordinate cup is unblessed, and the ingredient is a devil.

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used: exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think, you think I love you.

Cas. I have well approved it, sir.—I drunk!
Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunk at some time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do.

Our general's wife is now the general:—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, morng, and demerment of her parts and graces:—confess yourself freely to her: importune her; she'll help to put you in your place again: she is of as free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, that she holds it a vice in her goodness, not to do more than she is requested: 'Tis broken joint, between you and her husband, entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

Cas. You advise me well.
Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love, and honest kindness.

Cas. I think it freely: and sometimes in the morning, I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my fortunes, if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant: I must to the watch.

Cas. Good night, honest Iago. [Exit Cassio] Iago. And what's he then, that says,—I play the villain?

When this advice is free, I give, and honest,
Probable to thinking, and (indeed) the course
To win the Moor again! For 'tis most easy
The inclining Desdemona to subdue

In any honest suit: she's fram'd as fruitful
As the free elements. And then for her
To win the Moor,—were't to renounce his baptism,
All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,—

His soul is so enfeet'd to her love,
That she may make, unmake, do what she list,
Even as her appetite shall play the god [Iago,
With his weak function. How am I then a vil-
To counsel Cassio to this parallel course.

Directly to his good? O, devil of hell!
When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,

As I do now: For while this honest fool
Pleads Desdemona to repair his fortunes,
And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor,
I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,—

That she repeals him for her body's lust;
And, by how much she strives to do him good,
She shall undo her credit with the Moor.
So will I turn her virtue into pitch;

And out of her own goodness make the net,
That shall enmesh them all.—How now, Roder-igo?

Enter Roderigo.

Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry.
My money is almost spent: I have been to-night exceedingly well cudgelled; and I think, the more will be—I shall have so much experience for my pains: and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they, that have not patience!

What wound did ever heal, but by degrees?
Thou know'st, we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;

And wit depends on dilatory time.
Does't not go well? O Cassio hath bewen't thee,
And thou, by that small hurt, hast cashier'd

Cassio:
Though other things grow fair against the sun,
Yet fruits that blossom first, will first be ripe:
Content thyself a while.—By the mass, 'tis mar-ving:—[about—

Pleasure, and action, make the hour seem

In some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep:
He'll watch the heron's eye a double set,
If drunk rock not his cradle.

Mon.

The general were not in mind of it
Perhaps, he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils; is not this true?

Enter Roderigo.

Iago. How now, Roderigo?

[Aside.]

I pray you, after the lieutenant; go.

Mon. And 'tis great pity, that the noble Moor

Should hazard such a piece, as his own second.

With one of an infirm infirmity:

It were an honest action, to say

So to the Moor.

Iago.

Not I, for this fair island:

I do love Cassio well; and would do much

To cure him of this evil. But hark! what noise?

[Cry within.—Help! help!]

Re-enter Cassio, & living in Roderigo.

Cas. You rogue! you ra-e-ell!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave—touch me my duty!

I'll beat the knave in a twicken bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue?

[Striking Roderigo.]

Mon.

Nay, good lieutenant;

[Slaying him.]

I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, sir,

Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk.

Cas. Drunk! [They fight.]

Iago. Away, I say! go out, and cry—a mutiny.

[Aside to Rod. who goes out.]

Nay, good lieutenant,—alms, gentlemen,—

Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—sir;—

Help, masters!—Here's a goodly watch, instead!

[Bell rings.]

Who's that that rings the bell?—Draho, ho!

The town will rise. Ours will, lieutenant! hold;

You will be sham'd for ever.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to the death;—ho

Oth. Hold, for your lives. [Alas.]

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant,—sir, Montano,— gentlemen,—

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?

Hold, hold! the general speaks to you; hold, for shame! [This.]

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence cometh

Are we turn'd Turks; and to ourselves do that,

Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites!

For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl!

He that stirs next to carve for his own rage,

Holds his soul light; he does upon his nation—

Release that dreadful hell, it fruits the woe

From her propriety.—What is the matter, masters?—

Honest Iago, that look'd dead with grieving,

Speak who began this? on thy love, I charge

thee.

Iago. I do not know;—friends all but now,

even now,

In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom

Devesting them for bed: and then, but now,

(As if some planet had unwitting men.)

Swore out, and tilting one at another's breast,

In opposition bloody. I cannot speak

Any beginning to this peevish odds;

And 'would in action glorious I had lost

These legs, that brought me to a part of it

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forg'd?

Cas. I pray you, pardon me. I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civil;

The gravity and stillness of your youth

The world hath noted, and your name is great

In mouths of wisest censure; What's the matter

That you unlace your reputation thus,

And spend your rich opinion, for the name

Of a slight-brav'ry? I give me answer in it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger;

Your officer, Iago, can inform you—

While I spare speech, which something now

offends me:—

Of all that I do know: nor know I ought

By me that's said or done amiss this night;

Unless self-charity be sometime a vice;

And to defend ourselves it be a sin,

When violence assaults us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,

My blood begins my safer ends to rule:

And passion, having my best judgment calld,

Assays to lead the way. If I once stir,

Or do but lift this arm, the best of you

Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know

How this foul root began, who set it on;

And he that's approv'd in this offence,

Though he had twin'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall lose me—What! in a town of war,

Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,

To manage private and domestic quarrel!

In night, and on the coast and guard of safety!

The monstrous—Iago, who began it?

Mon. If partially assail'd, or long'd in office,

Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,

Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near:

I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,

Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;

Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth

Shall nothing wrong him.—Thus it is, general.

Montano and myself being in speech,

I here comes a fellow, crying out for help;

And Cassio following him with determin'd sword,

To execute upon him: Sir, this gentleman

Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause;

Myself the crying fellow did pursue,

Untill, by his clamour, (as it so fell out,)

The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,

Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather

For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,

And Cassio high in oath; which, till to-night,

I ne'er might say before: When I came back,

(For this was brief,) I found them close together,

At blow, and thrust: even as again they were,

When you yourself did part them.

More of the matter can I not report:—

But men are men: the best sometimes forget.—

Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,—

As men in rage strike those that wash them best,—

Yet, surely, Cassio, I believe, receiv'd

From him that fled, some strange indignity,

Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know Iago.

Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,

Making it light to Cassio.—Cassio, I love thee;

But never more be officer of mine,—

Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do;
But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye
Will I look to't.

Oth. Iago is most honest.
Michael, good night:—To-morrow, with our entirest,

'Let me have speech with you.—Come, my dear
love,

[The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue;
(To Desdemona.

That profit's yet to come 'twixt me and you.—
Good night. [Exeunt Oth., Des., and Attend.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome, Iago: We must to the watch.
Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant: 'tis not yet ten o'clock: Our general cast us thus early, for the love of his Desdemona; when let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton
the night with her: and she is apt for Jove.

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.
Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she is a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And, when she speaks, is it not an alarm to love!

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.
Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of the black O'hellu.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago: I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking: I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too, and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they? [in.

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you call them
Cas. I'll do it; but it dislikes me. [Exit Cassio.

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drunk to-night already,

He'll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool, Roderigo,

Whom love has turn'd almost the wrong side outward,

To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potent pottle deep; and he's to watch:
Three lads of Cyprus,—noble swelling spirits,
That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,—
Have I to-night fuster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards,

Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle:—But here they come:
If consequence do but approve my dream,
My lust suits freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter Cassio, with him Montano, and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho!

And let me the comikin clink, clink; [Sings
And let me the comikin clink:

A soldier's a man;
A life's but a span;
Why then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! [Wine brought in.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, an excellent song.
Iago. I learned it in England, where (indeed)
they are most parley in potting; your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander,— Drunk, ha!—are notuing to your English.
Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.

Iago. O sweet England!

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sweeter all too dear,
With that he call'd the tailor—loam.

He was a knight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree:

'Tis pride that pulls the country down,
Then takes those audit clink about town.

Some wine, ho!

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again?

Cas. No: for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that does those things.—Well,—Heaven's above all; and there be souls that must be saved, and there be souls that must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, nor any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me;
the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient.
Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs.—
Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk: this is my ancient;—this is my right hand, and this is my left hand;—I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well, then: you must not think then that I am drunk. [Exit.

Mon. To the platform, masters; come, let's set the watch.

Iago. You see this fellow, that is gone before;—
He is a soldier, fit to stand by Caesar

And give direction: and do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtue a just equinox.

The one as long as the other: 'tis pity of him.
I fear, the trust O'hellu puts him in,

News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drowned.

How do our old acquaintance of this isle? Hume, you shall be well desired in Cyprus, I have found great love amongst them. O my sweet,

I wrattle out of fashion, and I dote in mine own comforts.—I prythee, good lago, Go to the bay, and disembark my coffers: Bring thou the master to the citadel; He is a good one, and his worthiness does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona, Once more well met at Cyprus.

[Exeunt Oth., Des., and Attendants.]
Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour. Come hither. If thou be'st valiant as (they say) these men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me. The lieutenant to night watches on the court of guard:—First, I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him I why, 'tis not possible.
Iago. Lay thy finger—thus, and let thy soul be instructed.—Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies: And will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be—again to inflame it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite,—loveliness in favour; sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in: Now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the core, disrelish and abhor the Moor: very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this cranted, (as it is a most pregnant and unforsaken position,) who stands so eminently in the degree of this fortune, as Cassio does? a knave very voluble; no further questionable, than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why none; why none: A slippery and subtle knave; a finder out of occasions; that has an eye can snare and counter-tort advantages, though true advantages never present itself: A devilish knave! besides, the knave is handsome, young; and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and green minds look after: A pestilent complete knave; and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she is full of most blessed condition.

Iago. Blessed he's and the wine she drinks is made of grapes: she who had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor: Blessed pudding! Dost thou not see her puddle with the palm of his hand? I dlist not mark that?

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lechery, by this hand; an index, and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. They met so near with their lips, that their breaths embraced together. Villainous thoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutualities so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion: Pish!—Bast, or, he you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay't upon you: Cassio knows you not;—I'll not be far from you: Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or taunting his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden in cholour; and, haply, with his truncheon may strike at you: Provake him, that he may: for, even out of that, will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.]

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it.

That she loves him, 'tis apt, and of great credit: The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not,—Is of a constant, loving, noble nature; And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona A most dear husband. Now I do love her too; Not out of absolute lust, (though, peradventure, I stand accountant for as great a sin,) But partly led to diet my revenge, For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Hath leap'd into my seat: the thought whereof Duth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards;

And nothing can or shall content my soul, Till I am even with him, wife for wife; Or, failing so, yet that I put the Moor

At least into a jealousy so strong [do,—

That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to

If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trash

For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,

I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip;

Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb,—

For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too; [me,

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward

For making him egregiously an ass,

And practising upon his peace and quiet

Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confid';

Knavery's plain face is never seen, till us'd.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter a Herald, with a proclamation: People following.

Hrr. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere condition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph: some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revel his addiction leads him: for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptials: So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open; and there is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five, till the bell hath told eleven. Heaven bless the sale of Cyprus, and our noble general, Othello! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night:

And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath;

That he may bleed this bay with his tall ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,
Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort!—O, behold,

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, Iago, Roderigo, and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore!
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees:—
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Kneel wheel thus round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.
What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arriv'd; nor know I aught
But that he's well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I fear;—How lost you company?
Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail.

[Cry within. A sail, a sail! Then guns heard.]
2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel;
Thus likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.—
[Exit Gentleman.]
Good ancient, you are welcome:—Welcome, mistress:—
[To Emilia.]

Let it not gull your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners: 'tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

[Kissing her.]
Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me, [lips]
You'd have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.
Iago. In faith, too much;
I find it still, when I have list to sleep:
Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.
Iago. Come on, come on: you are pictures out of doors,

Bells in your parlours, wild cats in your kitchens,
Saints in your injuries, devils being offend'd, Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

Des. O, 'tis upon thee, slanderer!
Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk,
You rise to play, and go to bed to work.
Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.
Des. What would'st thou write of me, if thou should'st praise me?

Iago. O gentle lady, do not put me to't,
For I am nothing, if not critical.
Des. Come on, assay:—There's one gone to the Iago. Ay, madam, [harbour]

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise—
Come, how would'st thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention
Comes from my pate, as birdlime does from frize,
It plucks out brains and all: But my muse is
And thus she is deliver'd.

[Boys.]
If she be fair and wise,—fairness and wit,
The one's for use, the other useth it.

Des. Well praise! How if she be black and Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She'll find a whet that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.
Emil. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes, to make fools laugh at the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish!

Iago. There's none so foul, and foolish there-unto.

But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.
Des. O heavy ignorance!—thou praisest the worst best. But what praise could'st thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed! One, that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proved;
Had time to will, and yet was never loud;
Never lack'd gold, and yet went never gay;
Fled from her wish, and yet said,—none / may;
She that, being anger'd, her revenge being nigh,
Bide her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly:
She that in wisdom never was so frail.

To change the ead's head for the salmon's tail;
She that could think, and ne'er disclose her mind,
See suitors following, and not look behind;
She was a wight,—if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what?
Iago. To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer.

Des. O most lame and impotent conclusion!—
Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal counsellor?

Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may relish him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside] He takes her by the palm: Ay, well said; whisper: with as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do: I will give thee in thine own courtship. You say true; 'tis so, indeed; if such trick—as these strip you out of your countenance, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the air in. Very good; well kissed! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? would they were cyster-pipes for your sake!—[Trumpet.] The Moor,
I know his trumpet.

Cas. 'Tis truly so.
Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior!
Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content,
To see you here before me. O my soul's joy!
If after every tempest comes such calm,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd
death!

And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus high; and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy; for I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid,
But that our loves and comforts should increase,
Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!—
I cannot speak enough of this content,
It stops me here; it is too much of joy:

And this, and this, the greatest discords be.
[Kissing her.]

That e'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. O, you are well tun'd now,
But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,
As honest as I am.

Oth. Come, let's to the castle.

thine hath no less reason: Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him: if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse; go; provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet to-morrow?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee sometimes.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear.

Rod. I am changed. I'll sell all my land.

Iago. Go to; farewell! put money enough in your purse. [Exit Roderigo.]

I thus do ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I would time expend with such a snipe;
But for my sport and profit, I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
He has done my office: I know not if 't be true;
But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do, as if for surety. He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now;
To get his place, and to plume up my will;
A double knavery.—How! how?—Let me see:—
After some time, to abuse Othello's ear,
That he is too familiar with his wife:—
He hath a person, and a smooth dispose,
To be suspected; fram'd to make women false.
The Moor is of free and open nature,
That thinks men honest, that but seem to be so;
And will as tenderly be led by the nose,
As asses are.
I have't.—It is engender'd:—I'll and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port Town in Cyprus. A Platform.

Enter Montano and Two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea? [Sound.]

1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought I cannot, 'twixt the heavens and the main, Decey a sail.

Mon. Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud at a fuller blast ne'er, when our battlements:
If it be such rafters, as upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? what shall we hear of this?

2 Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet:
For do but stand upon the fixing shore,
The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main,

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:
I never did like molestation view
On th' ensheathed flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not embell'd and embay'd, they are drown'd;
It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a Third Gentleman.

3 Gent. News, lord! our wars are done;
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,

That their designment halts: A noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance
On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

3 Gent. The ship is here put in,

A Venetian: Michael Cassio,

Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,

Is come on shore: the Moor himself 's at sea,

And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't: 'tis a worthy governor.

3 Gent. But this same Cassio,—though he speak of comfort,

Touching the Turkish loss,—yet he looks sadly,

And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted

With foul and violent tempest.

Mon.

'Pray heaven he be:

For I have serv'd him, and the man commands

Like a full soldier. Let's to the sea-side, ho!

As well to see the vessel that's come in,

As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello;

Even till we make the main, and the serial blue,

An undistinct regard.

3 Gent. Come, let's do so;

For every minute is expectancy

Of more arrivance.

Enter Cassio.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike mile,

That so approve the Moor: O, let the heavens

Give him defence against the elements,

For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well shipwreck'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot

Of very expert and approv'd allowance;

Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,

Stand in bold cure.

[Whims.]

A sail, a sail, a sail!

Enter another Gentleman.

Cas. What noise?

4 Gent. The town is empty: on the brow o' the Stand ranks of people, and they cry—a sail.

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy: [Guns heard.]

Our friends, at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth,

And give us truth who 'tis that is arriv'd.

2 Gent. I shall. [Exit.]

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd?

Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achiev'd a maid

That surpasses description, and wild fame;

One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,

And in the essential vesture of creation,

Dues bear all excellency.—How now! who has put in?

Re-enter Second Gentleman.

2 Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

Cas. He has had most favourable and happy speed: [Whims.]

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—

Traitors ensteep'd to clog the gutlines' keel,

As having sense of beauty, do omit

Their mortal natures, letting go safely by

The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cas. She that I spoke of, our great captain's captain.

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago:

Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts,

A se'night's speed.—Gr-a! Jove, O hello guard,

With such accommodation, and besort,
As levels with her breeding.

Duke If you please,
Be't at her father's.

Bra. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts,
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfading lend a gracious ear;
And let me find a charter in your voice,
To assist my simplicity.

Duke What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence and storm of fortunes
May trumpet to the world; my heart's subdued
Even to the very quality of my lord:
I saw Othello's visage in his mind;
And to his honours, and his valiant parts,
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rights for which I love him, are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence:—Let me go with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords:—'beseech you, let her Have a free way. [Will Vouch with me, heaven; I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In my distinct and proper satisfaction:
But to be free and bounteous to her mind;
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant,
For she is with me: No, when light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid steel with wanton dunces
My speculative and active instruments,
That my disports corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!

Duke Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going: the affair cries—
haste.

And speed must answer it; you must hence to-
night.

Des. 'To-night, my lord!

Duke. 'This night.

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine o'clock the morning here we'll meet
Othello, leave some officer behind, [again,
And he shall our commission bring to you;
With such things else of quality and respect,
As doth import you.

Oth. Please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty, and trust;
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall
To be sent after me. [think

Duke. Let it be so.—

Good night to every one.—And, noble signior,
[To Brabantio
If virtue no delighted beauty lack.

Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

I Sen. Adieu, brave Moor! use Desdemona well. [Exit

Bra. Look to her, Moor; have a quick eye to
She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.

Oth. My life upon her faith—Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee;
I pray thee, let my wife attend on her;
And bring them after in the best advantage.—
Come Desdemona, I have but an hour

Of love, of worldly matters and direction,
To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.

Rod. Iago.

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, think'st thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.

Rod. I will incubinate myself.

Iago. Well, if thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Rod. It is silliness to live, when to live is a torment: and then have we a prescription to die
when death is our physician.

Iago. O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years; and since I could distinguish between a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Guinean hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess, it is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue? a fig! 'tis in ourselves that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are our gardens; to the which, our wills are gardeners: so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyacinth, and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many; either to have it sterid with idleness, or manured with industry;
why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our nature would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: But we have reason to cool our raging mouthing, our carnal stings, our unbruted lusts; whereof I take this, that you call—love, to be a sore or scion.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: Drown thyself! drown cats and blind puppies. I have professed me thy friend, and I confess me to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness; I could never better stand thee than now.
Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; defeat thy favour with an usurped beard; I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be, that Desdemona should love continue her love to the Moor,
—put money in thy purse:—nor he his love to her:
was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an unanswerable acquiescent:—put but money in thy purse:—I leave Moore as changeable as their wills:—fill thy purse with money: the food that to him now is as luscious as hounds, shall be to him shortly as bitter as colicquintida. She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice.—She must have change, she must: therefore put money in thy purse.—If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it in a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst: If sanctimony and a frail vow, betwixt an erring barbarian and a superstitious Venetian, be not too hard for my wife, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way:
seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing thy joy, than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depart on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me:—Go, make money:
—I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: My cause is hearted

Than these thin habits, and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming, do prefer against him.

I Sen. But, Othello, speak :—
Did you by indirect and forced courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections ?
Or came it by request, and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth ?

Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary.
And let her speak of me before her father :
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.
Oth. Ancient, conduct them : you best know the place.—

[Exeunt Iago and Attendants.]

And, till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood.
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.
Oth. Her father lov'd me ; oft invited me ;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year : the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents, by flood and field ; (breach :
Of hair breadth escapes ; the imminent deadly
Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery : of my redemption thence,
And portance in my travel's history,
Wherein of antres vast, and deserts idle,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads
touch heaven,

It was my hint to speak, such was the process ;
And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. These things to hear,

Would Desdemona seriously incline :
But still the house affairs would draw her thence ;
Which ever as she could with haste despatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse : Which I observing,
Took once a phant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intensively : I did consent.
And often did beguile her of her tears.
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs :
She swore,—in faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing
strange ;

'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful :
She wish'd, she had not heard it ; yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man : she thank'd me ;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint, I spoke :
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd ;
And I lov'd her, that she did pity them.
Thus only a witchcraft I have us'd ;
Here comes the lady, let her witness it.

[Enter Desdemona, Iago, and Attendants.]

Duke. I think, this tale would win my daughter too.—

Good Brabantio,

Take up this mangled matter at the best :
Men do their broken weapons rather use,
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak ;
If she confess, that she was half the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man !—Come hither, gentle mistress ;
Do you perceive in all this noble company
Where most you owe obedience ?

Duke. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty :
To you, I am bound for life, and education ;
My life, and education, both do learn me
How to respect you : you are the lord of duty,
I am hitherto your daughter : But here's my husband :

And so much duty as my mother show'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Bra. God be with you !—I have done :—
Please it your grace, on to the state affairs ;
I had rather to adopt a child, than get it.—
Come hither, Moor :

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee.—For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child ;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang cloaks on them.—I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself ; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grave, or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended,
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes dependent

To mourn a mischief that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
What cannot preserve'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.
The robb'd, that smiles, steals something from the thief.

He robs himself, that spends a bootless grief.
Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile ;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He hears the sentence well, that nothing hears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears :
But he hears both the sentence and the sorrow,
That, to pay grief, must of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal :
But words are words ; I never yet did hear,
That the bruise'd heart was pierced through the ear.

I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.
Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus :—Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you :—And though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you : you must therefore be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and lesstenuous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down : I do aguize
A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness ; and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly, therefore, beseeching to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife ;
Due reference of place and exhibition ;

Bra. How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night!—Bring him away!
Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,
Or any of my brothers of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong, as 'twere their own:
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves, and pagans, shall our statesmen be.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Council-Chamber.

The Duke, and Senators, sitting at a table; Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition in these news,
That gives them credit.

1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion'd:
My letters say, a hundred and seven galleys

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.
2 Sen. And mine, two hundred:

But though they jump not on a just account,
(As in these cases, where the aim reports,

'Tis oft with difference,) yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve

In fearful seizure.
Sailor. [Within.] What ho! what ho! what ho!

Enter an Officer, with a Sailor.

Off. A messenger from the galleys.
Duke. Now! the business?

Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;

So was I bid report here to the state,
By senator Anselmo.

Duke. How may you by this change?

1 Sen. How may you by this change? This cannot be,
By no assay of reason; 'tis a payment,

To keep us in false gaze: When we consider
The impertinency of Cyprus to the Turk;

And let our eyes again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,

So may he with more facile question hear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,

But altogether lacks the abilities [of this,
That Rhodes is dress'd in: if we make thought

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest which confirms him first;

Neglect an attempt of ease, and gain,
To wake, and wage, a danger profitless.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.

Off. Here is more news.
Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious, Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,

Have they adjointed them with an after fleet.
1 Sen. Ay, so I thought:—How many, as you saw?

Mess. Of thirty sail: and now do they re-member their backward course, bearing with frank appearance [fame,

Their purposes towards Cyprus.—Senior Monsignor Urgay and most valiant servitor,

With his free duty, recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him

Duke. 'Tis certain then for Cyprus—
Marrus Lucchesi, is he not in town?

1 Sen. He's now in Florence.
Duke. Write from us: wish him post-post-haste:
despatch. [Hour

1 Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the valiant

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Iago, Roderigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ
Against the general enemy Ottomun.

Iago. I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior,
[To Brabantio.

Bra. So did I yours: Good your grace, pardon
me;

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business, Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general care

Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature,

That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Bra. My daughter! O, my daughter!
Sen. Dead!

Bra. Ay, to me:
She is stol'n, stol'n from me, and corrupted

By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks:
For nature so preposterously to err,

Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not—[Exeunt.

Duke. Whoe'er he be, that, in this foul profane thus beguile'd your daughter of herself,

And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the latter letter,

After your own sense; you, though our proper son
Stand in your action.

Bra. Humbly I thank your grace.
Here is the man, this Moor; whom now, it seems,

Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought.

Duke & Sen. We are sorry for it.

Duke. What, in your own part, can you say to this? [To Othello.

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.
Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,

My very noble and approv'd good masters,—
That I have taken away this old man's daughter,

It is most true; true, I have married her:
The very head and front of my offending speech,

Hath thus extent, no more. Kinde am I in my
And little bless'd with the set phrase of peace;

For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd

Their dearest action in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,

More than pertains to feats of broil and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,

In speaking for myself: Yet, by your grace's
patience,

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver [charms,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what

What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
[For such proceeding I am charg'd withal.]

I won his daughter with.

Bra. A maiden never bid;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her nervous

Blush'd at herself: And she,—in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, every thing,—

To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on!
It is a judgment maim'd, and most imperfect,

That will confess—perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature; and must be driven

To find out practices of cunning hell.
Why this should be,—I therefore teach again,

Not with some mixture powerful o'er the blood,
Or with some drain conjur'd to this effect,

He wrought upon her. To much this, is no proof:
Duke. Without more certain and more overt test,

Bra. O heaven!—How got she out!—O treason of the blood!—
Fathers, from hence trust not your daughter's mind.

By what you see them act.—Are there not
By which the property of youth and madness
May be abus'd? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir; I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother.—O, that you had had her!

Some one way, some another.—Do you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think, I can discover him; if you please
To get good guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll
I may command at most.—Get weapons, ho!
And raise some special officers of night.—
Oo, good Roderigo;—I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Street.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Attendants.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain
men.

Yet do I hold it very stiff o'the conscience,
To do no contriv'd murder; I lack inquiry
Sometimes, to do me service: Nine or ten times
I had thought to have yer'd him here under the
Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,
And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honour,

That, with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, sir,

Are you fast married? I am, he sure of this—
That the magnifico is much beloved;

And hath, in his effect, a voice potential
As double as the duke's; he will divorce you;

Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law (with all his might, to enforce it on)
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite:
My services, which I have done the signiory, Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know.

(Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,
I shall promulgate,) I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege; and my demerits
May speak, unboasted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription and confine
For the sea's worth. But, look! what lights —come yonder!

Enter Cassio, at a distance, and certain Officers with torches.

Iago. These are the rascals father, and his
You were best go in.

Oth. Not I: I must be found;
My parts, my title, and my port, and soul,
Shall manifest me rightly: Is it they?

Iago. By Janus, I think so.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my liege-
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?

Cas. The duke does greet you, general;
And he requires your haste-post-haste appearance on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?
Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine;
It is a business of some heat: the gallies

Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night, at one another's heels;
And many of the consuls, rain'd, and met,
Are at the duke's already: You have been hotly call'd for;

When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent about three several quests
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you.

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here?
Iago. Faith, he to night hath boarded a land carack;

If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.
Cas. I do not understand
He's married?

Cas. To who?

Re-enter Othello.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?
Oth. Have with you.

Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for
you.

Enter Brabantio, Roderigo, and Officers of night with torches and weapons.

Iago. It is Brabantio:—general, be advis'd;
He comes to bad intent.

Oth. Hold! stand there!

Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Bra. Down with him, thief.
[They draw on both sides.]

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for you.
Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them:—

Good signior, you shall more command with years,
Than with your weapons.

Bra. O thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd
my daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her:
For I'll refer me to all things of sense.

If she in chains of magic were not bound,
Whether a maid—so tender, fair, and happy;
So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd
The wealthy curied dailies of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou: to fear, not to delight.
Judge me the world, if 'tis not gross to sense
That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms,
Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs or minerals,
That waken motion:—'I'll have it disputed on.
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant:—
Lay hold upon him, if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter:—Where will you that I go
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison: till fit time
Of law, and course of direct vengeance,
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be there-with satisfied;
Whose message a rare here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state,
To bring me to him.

Cas. 'Tis true, most worthy signior
The duke's in council; and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

keep yet their hearts attending on themselves:
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords.

Do well thrive by them, and, when they have liu'd their coats, [soul:]
Do themselves homage: these fellows have some
And such a one do I profess myself
For, sir,

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In complement extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.

Rod. What a full fortune does the thick-lips
If he can carry't thus! [owe,
Iago.

Call up her father,
Rouse him: make after him, poison his delight,
Proclaim him in the streets; incense her kins-
And, though he in a fertile climate dwell, [men,
Plague him with flies: though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation out,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father's house; I'll call aloud. [yell.

Iago. Do: with like timorous accent, and dire
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities. [ho!

Rod. What, oh! Brabantio! signior Brabantio, Iago. Awake! what, ho! Brabantio! thieves!
thieves! thieves! [lugs!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your Thieves! thieves!

Brabantio, above, at a window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible sum-
What is the matter there? [mous!

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?
Iago. Are your doors lock'd? [s]

Bra. Why! wherefore ask you this?
Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are rob'd; for shame,
put on your gown;

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul;
Even now, very now, an old black ram
Is tupping your white ewe. Arise, arise;
Awake the snoring citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you:
Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?
Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my
Bra. Not I; what are you? [voice]

Rod. My name is—Roderigo.
Bra. The worse welcome.

I have charg'd thee, not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter is not for thee; and now, in mad-
ness,

Being full of supper, and distemp'ring draughts,
Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir, sir,——
Bra. But thou must needs be sure.
My spirit, and my place, have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good sir.
Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.
Rod. Most grave Brabantio,

In simple, and pure soul I come to you,
Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are one of those, that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service, you think we are ruffians: You'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse; you'll have your nephews neigh to you: you'll have coursers for coussins, and gennets for gennans

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you, your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are—a senator
Iago. This thou shalt answer: I know thee,
Roderigo. [seach you,

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But believe your pleasure, and must wise consent.
[As partly, I find, it is, that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even and dull watch o' the night,
Transported—with no worse nor better guard,
But with a kuave of common hire, a gullibler,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor,—

If this be known to you, and your allowance,
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;
But if you know not this, my manners tell me,
We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe,
That, from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence: [leave

Your daughter,—if you have not given her
I say again, hath made a gross revolt:
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes,
In an extravagant and wheeling stranger,
Of here and every where: Straight satisfy yourself:

If she be in her chamber, or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike upon the tinder, ho!
Give me a taper:—call up all my men:—
This accident is not unlike my dream:
Belief of it oppresses me already:—

Light, I say! light! [Exit, from above.

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you:
It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produc'd (as, if I stay, I shall)
Against the Moor: For, I do know, the state,—
However this may gall him with some check,—
Cannot with safety cast him: for he's embark'd
With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars,
(Which even now stand in act) that, for them
Another of his fathom they have not, [suns,
To lend their business: in which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell pains,
Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must show out a flag and sign of love,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find him,

Lead to the Sagittary the rain'd search;
And there will I be with him. So, farewell.

[Exit

Enter, below, Brabantio, and Servants with torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is;
And what's to come of my despair'd time,
Is nought but bitterness.—Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O, unhappy girl!—
With the Moor, say'st thou?—Who would be a father!—

How didst thou know 'twas she?—O, thou do ceiv'st me

Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more tapers:—Are they married think
you?

Rod. Truly, I think, they are.

But since, so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polish wars, and you from England,

Are here serv'd; give order, that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view;
And let me speak to the yet unknowing world,
How these things came about: So shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts;
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cause;
And, in this upstart, purposes mistook
Fall'n on the inventors' heads: all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,
And call the nobles to the audience.
For me, with so, now I embrace my fortune;
I have some signs of incensure in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage do I invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on
more:

But let the same be presently perform'd,
Even while men's minds are wild; lest some machance,

On plots, and errors, happen

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had he been put on, [sage,
To have prov'd most royal: and, for his pas-
The soldier's music, and the rites of war,
Speak loudly for him—

Take up the bodies!—Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.
Go, bid the soldiers smoke. [A dead March.
[Exeunt, bearing off the dead bodies; after which, a peal of ordnance is shot off.]

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Duke of Venice.
Brabantio, a senator.
Two other senators.
Cassio, brother to Brabantio.
Lodovico, Ambassador to Brabantio.
Othello, the Moor.
Cassio, his lieutenant.
Iago, his ancient.
Roderigo, a Venetian gentleman.
Montano, Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus.
Crown, servant to Othello.
Herald.

Desdemona, daughter to Brabantio, and wife to Othello.
Emilia, wife to Iago.
Bianca, a courtesan, mistress to Cassio.
Officers, Gentlemen, Messengers, Musicians, Sailors,
Attendants, &c.

SCENE.—for the First Act, in Venice; during the rest of the Play, at a Sea-Port in Cyprus.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Roderigo and Iago

Rod. Tush, never tell me, I take it much unkindly.

That thou, Iago,—who hast had my purse,
As if the strings were thine, should know of this.

Iago. 'Sblood, but you will not hear me:—
If ever I did dream of such a matter,
Athur' me.

Rod. Thou told'st me, thou didst hold him in thy hate.

Iago. Deserve me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city,

In personal suit to make me his lieutenant.
Off capp'd to him;—and, by the faith of man,

I know my price, I am worth no worse a place.
But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them, with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war;

And, in conclusion, nominats
My mediators; for, certain, says he,
I have already chose my officer.
And what was he?

Furness, a great arithmetician.
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife;
That never set a squadron in the field,

Nor the division of a battle knows [cries,
More than a spritzer; unless the bookish the-
Wherein the tog'd consuls can propose
As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice.

Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had the eie—
And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus; and on other grounds Christian and heathen,—must be be-lee'd and calm'd.

By debtor and creditor, this counter-charge;
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,
And I, (God bless the mark!) his Moor-ship's ancient.

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

Iago. But there's no remedy, 'tis the curse of Preference goes by better, and affection,
Not by the old gradation, where each second Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge your-Whether I in any just term am affi'd [swell,
To love the Moor.

Rod. I would not follow him then
Iago. O, sir, content you;

I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought, but provender; and, when he's old, Caster'd.

Whip me such honest knaves: Others there are,
Who, trim'd in forms and visages of duty,

Ham. This likes me well: These foils have all a length! [They prepare to play.]

Or. Ay, my good lord.

King. Set me the stoups of wine upon that table:—

If Hamlet give the first or second hit,
Or quit in answer of the third exchange,
Let all the battlements their ordnance fire;
The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall be throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn: Give me the
And let the kettle to the trumpet speak. [Cups:]
The trumpet to the cannoneer without,
The cannons to the heavens, the heaven to earth,
Now the king drinks to Hamlet.—Come, begin;—
And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, sir.

Laer. Come, my lord. [They play.]

Ham. One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Judgment.

Or. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well,—again.

King. Stay, give me drink: Hamlet, this pearl is thine;

Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound; and cannon shot off within.]

Ham. I'll play this bout first, set it by awhile.

Come.—Another hit: What say you? [They play.]

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scant of breath—

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows:

The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,—

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord:—I pray you, pardon me.

King. It is the poison'd cup; it is too late.

[Aside.]

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think it.

Laer. And yet it is almost against my conscience.

[Aside.]

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes: You do but

I pray you, pass with your best violence: [dially:]

I am afeard, you make a wanton of me.

Laer. Say you so? Come on. [They play.]

Or. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

[Laertes wounds Hamlet: then, in scuffling,

they change rapiers, and Hamlet wounds

Laertes.]

King. Part them, they are incens'd!

Ham. Nay, come again. [The Queen falls.]

Or. Look to the queen there, but!

Hor. They bleed on both sides:—How is it, my

Or. How is't, Laertes? [Lord:]

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to my own springe,

Or.

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my Hamlet!

The drink, the drink:—I am poison'd! [Dies.]

Ham. O villainy!—Ho! let the door be lock'd!

Treachery! seek it out. [Laertes falls.]

Laer. It is here, Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain;

No medicine in the world can do thee good,

In thee there is not half an hour's life;

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,

Unbated, and evenuou'd: the fool practice

Hath turn'd itself on me; lo, here I lie,

Never to rise again: Thy mother's poison'd;

I can no more; the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point

Evenuou'd too!—Then, venom, to thy work.

[Stabs the King.]

Or. & Lords. Treason! treason!

King. O, yet defend me, friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murd'rous, damned

Dane,

Drink off this potion:—Is the union here?

Follow my mother. [King dies.]

Laer. He is justly serv'd:

It is a poison temper'd by himself—

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,

Nor thine on me! [Dies.]

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow

thee.

I am dead, Horatio:—Wretched queen, adieu!—

You that look pale and tremble at this chance,

That are but nutes or audience to this act,

Had I but time, (as this fell sergeant, death, is strict in his arrest,) O, I could tell you,—

But let it be:—Horatio, I am dead;

'Thou liv'st: report me and my cause aright

To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it;

I am more an antique Roman than a Dane.

Ham. As thou'rt a man,—

Give me the cup; let go; by heaven, I'll have

O God!—Horatio, what a wounded name, (it—

Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind

If thou dost ever hold me in thy heart. [Drops]

Absent thee from felicity awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,

To tell my story.—[March afar off, and shut within.]

What warlike noise is this?

Or. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,

To the ambassadors of England gives

This warlike volley.

Ham. O, I die, Horatio:

The potent poison quite o'er-crowns my spirit;

I cannot live to hear the news from England:

But I do prophesy, the election lights

On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice:

So tell him, with the occurrents, more or less,

Which have solicited.—The rest is silence. [Dies.]

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart:—Good night, sweet prince;

And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!

Why does the drum come hither? [March within.]

Enter Fortinbras, the English Ambassadors, and others.]

For. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it, you would see?

If aught of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

For. This quarry cries on havoc!—O proud

death!

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell

That thou so many princes at a shot,

So bloodily hast struck?

I Am. The sight is dismal;

And our affairs from England come too late:

The ears are senseless, that should give us hear-

To tell him, his commandment is fulfill'd. [Sings.]

That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead:

Where should we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth

Had it the ability of life to thank you;

He never gave commandment for their death.

Ors. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.

Ors. I mean, sir, for his weapon: but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his need he's unfollowed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Ors. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but, well.

Ors. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses; against the which he has impawned, as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdles, hangers, and so: Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hits, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal consent.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Ors. I know, you must be edified by the margin, ere you had done.

Ors. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more german to the matter, if we could carry a cannon by our sides; I would, it might be hangers till then. But, on: Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their scabbards, and three liberal-assorted carriages: that's the French bet against the Danish: Why is this impawned, as you call it?

Ors. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits; he hath laid on twelve for mine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How, if I answer, no?

Ors. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall; if it please his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me; let the foils be brought, the gentlemen warming, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odd hits.

Ors. Shall I deliver you so?

Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Ors. I commend my duty to your lordship.

[Exit.]

Ham. Yours, yours—He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for's turn.

Hor. This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply with his dug, before he sucked it. Thus has he (and many more of the same breed, that I know, the drossy age does on) only got the tune of the time, and outward habit of encounter, a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and do but sow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Orsio, who brings luck to him, that you attend him in the hall; He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow the king's pleasure; if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now, or whenever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you, to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou wouldst not think, how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord.—

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain giving, as would perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury: there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: Since no man, of aught he leaves, knows, what is't to leave betimes? Let be.

Enter King, Queen, Laertes, Lords, Orsio, and Attendants with foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts the hand of Laertes into that of Hamlet.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I have done you wrong:

But pardon it, as you are a gentleman. This presence knows, and you must needs have heard,

How I am punish'd with a sore distraction.

What I have done,

That might your nature, honour, and exception, Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.

Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never, Hamlet: If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away,

And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes, Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it then? His madness: 'Tis he so,

Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd;

His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purposed evil

Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,

That I have shot my arrow o'er the house,

And hurt my brother.

Laer.

I am satisfied in nature,

Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most

To my revenge: but in my terms of honour,

I stand aloof; and will no reconciliation

Till by some elder masters, of known honour,

I have a voice and precedent of peace,

To keep my name ungraced: But till that time,

I do receive your offer'd love like love,

And will not wrong it.

Ham.

I embrace it freely;

And will this brother's wager frankly play.—

Give us the foils; come on.

Laer.

Come, one for me

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance

Your skill shall, like a star in the darkest night,

Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer.

You mock me, sir.

Ham.

No, by this hand

King. Give them the foils, young Orsio.—Comin

You know the wager?

Ham.

Very well, my lord;

Your grace hath laid the odds o'th weaker side

King. I do not fear it: I have seen you both:—

But since he's better'd, we have therefore odds

Laer.

This is too heavy, let me see another.

When our deep plots do pall: and that should teach us.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sword-corn scar'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire;
Finger'd their packet: and, in fine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,
A royal knavery; an exact command,—
Larded with many several sorts of reasons,
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho! such huge and goblin in my life.—
That, on the supervene, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, Tush, you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villain—
Or I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play:—I sat me down;
Devise'd a new commission; wrote it fair;
I once did hold it, as our statists do.
A haziness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
It did the yeoman's service: Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,—
As England was his faithful tributary;
As love between them like the palm might flourish;
As peace should still her wheat and garland wear,
And stand a comma 'tween their amities;
And many such like as of great charge,—
That on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debatement farther, more, or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving-time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordain'd;
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal;
Fuk'd the writ up in form of the other; [safely,
Subscrib'd it; gav't the impression; plac'd it
The chancery never known: Now, the next day
Was our sea-fight: and what to this was sequent
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;
They are not near my conscience: their defeat
Does by their own instruction grow;
'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes
Between the fall and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

Ham. Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon?

He that hath kill'd my king, and whor'd my mother—
Popp'd in between the election and my hopes;
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozendage; 'st not perfect conscience,

To quit him with this arm? and is't not to be
To let this canker of our nature come
Is further evil?

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England
What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;
And a man's life no more than to say, one.

But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;

For by the image of my cause, I see
The portraiture of his. I'll count his favours;
But, sure, the heaviness of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace; who comes here?

Enter Osvic.

Osv. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost know this water-fly?

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis a vice to know him: He hath much land and fertile: let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'Tis a chough;
but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osv. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit: Your bonnet to his right use: 'tis for the head.

Osv. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold: the wind is northerly.

Osv. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry, and hot; or my complexion—

Osv. Exceedingly, my lord: it is very sultry,— as 'twere,—I cannot tell how.—My lord, his majesty bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter.

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.]

Osv. Nay, good my lord; for my ease, in good faith. Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes:
believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences, of very soft society, and great showing; indeed, to speak feigningly of him, he is the owl or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the contentment of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his defilement suffers no perdurance in you:—though, I know, to divide him invincibly, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory;
and yet but raw neither, in respect of his quick mail. But, in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great artifice; and his infuseness of such death and ravenness, as, to make true dictation of him, his semblance is his mirror; and who else would trace him, his ombage, nothing more.

Osv. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osv. Sir!

Ham. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do it, sir, really.

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osv. Of Laertes!

Ham. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Osv. I know, you are not ignorant—

Ham. I would, you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me:—Well, sir

Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander looked o'this fashion i'the earth?

Hor. E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah!

[Throws down the skull.]

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return. Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returned to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam: And why of that loam, wherein he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel?

Imperious Caesar, dead, and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away:
O, that the earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw!
But soft! but soft! aside;—Here comes the king.

Enter Priests, &c., in procession; the corpse of Ophelia, Laertes, and Mourners following; King, Queen, their Trains, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: Who is this they follow?

And with such mained rites! This doth betoken.
The corpse, they follow, did with desperate hand
Fordo its own life. 'Twas of some estate:
Cough we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring with Horatio.]

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes.

A very noble youth: Mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

I Priest. Her obsequies have been as far enlarg'd

As we have warranty: Her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'erways the order,

She should in ground unanointed have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on Yet here she is allowed her virgin crans, (her,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Most there no more be done!

I Priest. No more he done!
We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem, and such rest to her,
As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i'the earth:—

And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring!—I tell thee, churlish priest,
A ministering angel shall my sister be,
When thou hast howl'd.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia!

Queen. Sweetest to the sweet: Furewell!

[Scattering flowers.]
I hop'd, thou should'st have been my Hamlet's
wife;

I thought, thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet
And not have strow'd thy grave.

Laer. O, treble woe

Fall ten times treble on that cursed head,
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee off!—Hold off the earth a while Till I have caught her once more in mine arms:

[Leaps into the grave.]

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead;

Till of this flat a mountain you have made,

To o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of hie Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he, whose grief
Bears such an emphasis! whose phrase of sorrow

Conjures the wand'ring stars, and makes them
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. 'The devil take thy soul!

[Grasping with him.]

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.

I pray thee, take thy fingers from my throat;

For, though I am not splenetic and rash,

Yet have I in me something dangerous.

Which let thy wisdom fear: Hold off thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet!

All Gentlemen.— Good my lord, be quiet.

Hor. [The Attendants part them, and they come out of the grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this Until my eyelids will no longer wag. [Theme,

Queen. O my son! what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thousand brothers

Could not, with all their quantity of love,

Make up my sum.—What wilt thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes.

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. 'Zounds, show me what thou'lt do:

Woul't weep? woul't fight? woul't fast? woul't tear thyself?

Woul't drink up Eux? eat a crocodile?

I'll do't.—Dost thou come here to whine?

To outface me with leaping in her grave?

Be buried quick with her, and so will I:

And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw

Millions of acres on us; till our ground,

Singing his mate against the burning zone,

Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou'lt mouth,

I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is more madness:

And thus a while the fit will work on him;

Anon, as patient, as the female dove,

When that her golden couplets are disclos'd,

His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, sir:

What is the reason, that you use me thus?

I lov'd you ever: But it is no matter;

Let Hercules himself do what he may,

The cat will mew, and dog will have his day.

[Exit.]

King. I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him.— [Exit Horatio.]

Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech; [To Laertes.]

We'll put the matter to the present push.—

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son—

This grave shall have a living monument:

An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;

Till then, in patience our proceeding be.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Castle.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other:—

You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fight-

That would not let me sleep: methought, I lay

Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Rashly

And prais'd be rashness for it!—Let us know,

Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of ourselves.

Ham. 'Tis even so: the hand of little employment bath the dautier sense.

1 Clo. But ago, with his stealing steps,
Fath claud' me in his chink;
And hath shipp'd me into the land,
As if I had never been such.

[Throws up a skull.]

Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician, which this as now after-reaches; one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier: which could say, Good-morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord?
This might be my lord Such-a-one, that prais'd my lord Such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it; might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so: and now my lady Worm's; chapless, and knock'd about the muzzard with a sexton's spade: Here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at logs with them? mine aile to think on't.

1 Clo. A pick-axe, and a spade, a spade. [Sings.
*For—and a shrouding sheet:
O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest to meet.*

[Throws up a skull.]

Ham. There's another: Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddits now, his quilts, his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Humph! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recog-nizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very custody of his lands will surely lie in this box: and must the inheritor himself have no more i' the box?

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Aye, my lord, and of calves-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow:—Whose grave's this, sirrah?

1 Clo. Mine, sir—

O, a pit of clay for to be made [Sings.
For such a guest is meet.

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed; for thou liest in't.

1 Clo. You lie out on't, sir, and therefore it is not your's; for my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't, and say it is thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again,
from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1 Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman then?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

1 Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us.
By the lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken note of it: the axe is grown so pick'd, that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe.—How long hast thou been a grave maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days 't' the year, I came in't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long's that since?

1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: It was that very day that young Hamlet was born: he that is mad, and sent into Eastland.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into Eastland?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

1 Clo. 'Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark: I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth, ere he rot?

1 Clo. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die, (as we have many pucky corpses now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in,) he will last you some eight year, or nine year: a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?

1 Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while;
and your water is a sore decayer of your whorson dead body. Here's a skull now hath lain you i' the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

1 Clo. A whorson dead fellow's it was; Whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! he poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once.
'Tis a same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the king's jester.

Ham. Thine?

[Takes the skull.]

1 Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Alas, poor Yorick!—I knew him, Horatio: a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent funny; he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips that I have kiss'd I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite clasp'd fallen! Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come;
make her laugh at that.—Prythee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

With this contagious; that, if I gall him slightly, it may be death.

King. Let's further think of this: weigh, what convenience, both of time and means,

May fit us to our shape: if this should fail, And that our drift look through our had performance,

'Twere better not assay'd; therefore this project Should have a back, or second, that might hold, If this should blast in proof. Soft;—let me see:—

We'll make a solemn wager on your cunning, — I ha't.

When in your motion you are hot and dry, 'As make your bouts more violent to that end,' And that he calls for drink, I'll have prefer'd him

A chalice for the nonce; whereon but sipping, If he by chance escape your venom'd stock, Our purpase may hold there. But stay, what noise!

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen!

Queen. One woe doth tread upon another's heel,

So fast they follow:—Your sister's drown'd, [Laertes.] Leer. Drown'd! O, where?

Queen. There is a willow grows asacunt the brook,

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream; Thewith fantastick garlands did she make Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,

That liberal shepherds give a greener name, But our cold mads do dead men's fingers call them:

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weeds Clambring to hang, an envious silver broke; When down her weedy tresses, and herself, Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide;

And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up: Which time, she chanted snatches of old tunes; As one incapable of her own distress, Or like a creature native and indu'd Unto that element; but long it could not be, Till that her garments, heavy with their drink, Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay To muddy death.

Leer. Alas then, she is drown'd?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd. [Lia.]

Leer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia! And therefore I forbad my tears: But yet It is our trick; nature her custom holds, (gone, Let shame say what it will: when these are The woman will be out.—Adieu, my lord! I have a speech of fire, that fun would blaze, But that this folly drowns it. [Exit.]

King. Let's follow. Gertrude! How much I had to do to calm his rage! Now fear I, this will give it start again; Therefore, let's follow. [Exeunt.]

2 Clo. I tell thee, she is; therefore make her grave straight: the crowner hath set on her, and finds it christian burial.

1 Clo. How can that be, unless she drown'd herself in her own defence?

2 Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

1 Clo. It must be ex offendo; it cannot be else. For here lies the point: If I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act; and an act hath three branches; it is to act, to do, and to perform: Arra! she drown'd herself wittingly.

2 Clo. Nay, but hear you, goodman deliver.

1 Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water; good: here stands the man; good: If the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes; mark you that: but if the water come to him, and drown him, he drowns not himself: Arra! he, that is not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life.

2 Clo. But is this law?

1 Clo. Ay, marry is't; crowner's-quest law.

2 Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't? If this be I not been a gentleman, she should have been buried out of christian burial.

1 Clo. Why, there thou say'st: And the more pity, that great folks shall have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers; they hold up Adam's profession.

2 Clo. Was he a gentleman?

1 Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

2 Clo. Why, he had none.

1 Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the scripture? The scripture says, Adam digg'd; Could he dig without arms? I'd put another question to thee: if thou answerst me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2 Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well: But how does it well? it does well to those that do ill; now thou dost ill, to say, the gallows is built stronger than the church; arra! the gallows may do well to thee. To't again: come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1 Clo. To't.

2 Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio, at a distance.

1 Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating; and, when you are asked this question next, say, a grave-maker; the houses that he makes, last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Youghan, and fetch me a stoup of liquor. [Exit 2 Clo.]

1 Clo. Digs, and sings.

In youth, when I did love, did love,

My thought, it was very meet.

To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behove,

O, methought, there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave-making.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Church-Yard.

Enter Two Clowns, with spades, &c.

1 Clo. 's she to be buried in christian burial, that wittily seeks her own salvation?

King. Break not your sleeps for that: you must not think That we are made of stuff so flat and dull. That we can let our beard be shook with danger, And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more: I loved your father, and we love ourselves; And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine,— How now! what news!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet: This to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. Four Hamlet! Who brought them?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say: I saw them not;

They were given me by Claudio, he receiv'd them. Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them:—
Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]

[Re-enter Hamlet. High and mighty, you shall know, I am not naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your lady's eyes: when I shall, first ask you your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return. Hamlet.]

What should this mean! Are all the rest come back?

Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. Naked,—

And, in a postscript here, he says, alone: Can you advise me?

Laer. I am lost in it, my lord. But let him it warm the very sickness in my heart, That I shall live and tell him to his teeth, Thus didst thou.

King. If it be so, Laertes, As how should it be so? how otherwise?— Will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. Ay, my lord; So you will not o'er-rule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—

As checking at his voyage, and that he means No more to undertake it,—I will work him

To an exploit, now ripe in my device: Under the which he shall not choose but fall:

And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe;—

But even his mother shall uncharge the practice And call it accident.

Laer. My lord, I will be rul'd: The rather, if you could devise it so, That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right. You have been talk'd of since your travel mach, And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality

Wherein they say you abuse your son of parts Did not together pick such envy from him, As did that one: and that, in my regard,

Of the unworthiest singe.

Laer. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very ribband in the cap of youth, Yet useful too; for youth no less becomes The light and careless livery that it wears,

Than settled care his sales, and his weeds, Importing health and grave-veils.—Two months since,

Here was a gentleman of Normandy,—[French, I have seen myself and serv'd against, the And they call on horseback: but this gallant had witchcraft in't: he grew unto his seat;

And to such wondrous doing brought his horse, As he had been incorpor'd and demi-natur'd

With the brave beast: so far he topp'd my thought,

That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks, Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman, wasn't it?

King. Upon my life, Lamard.

Laer. I know him well: he is the brooch indeed,

And rem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you; And gave you such a masterly report, For art and exercise in your defence,

And for your rapier most especial, That he cried out, 'twould be a sight indeed,

If one could match you: the screamers of their nation.

He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye, If you oppos'd them: Sir, this report of his Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,

That he could nothing do, but wish and beg Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.

Now, out of this,—

Laer. What, out of this, my lord?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you? Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,

A face without a heart?

Laer. Why ask you this?

King. Not that I think you did not love your father?

But that I know, love is begun by time; And that I see, in passages of proof,

Time qualifies the spark and fire of it. There lives within the very flame of love

A kind of weak, or stuff, that will abate it: And nothing is at a like goodness still;

For goodness, growing to a plurisy, Dies in his own too-much: That we would do, We should do when we would; for this would change,

And hath abatements and delays as many, As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;

And then this should be like a spendthrift sigh, That hurts by easing. But, to the quick of the ulcer;

Hamlet comes back: what would you undertake, To show yourself indeed your father's son

More than in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i'the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize:

Revenge should have no bounds. But, good

Laertes, Will you do this, keep close within your chamber—

Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home:

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence, And set a double varnish on the fame

The Frenchman gave you: bring you, in, as together,

And wager o'er your heads: he, being remiss, Most generous, and free from all contriving,

Will not peruse the foils; so that, with ease, Or with a little shuffling, you may choose

A sword unbated, and, in a pass of practice, Requite him for your father.

Laer. I will do it: And, for the purpose, I'll anaest my sword.

I bought an unction of a mountebank, So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,

Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare, Collected from all simples that have virtue

Under the moon, can save the thing from death. That is but scratch'd withal: I'll such my poison

Thill our souls turn the beam O rose of May!
I hear stand, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!—
O heavens! it's possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life!
Nature is fine in love; and where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

*Opk. They bore him barefod on the bear;
They no money, noney hry noney;
And in his grave rain'd many a tear!—*

Fare you well, my dove! [revenge.
Laer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade
It could not move thee.

Opk. You must sing, Down a-down, as you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel becomes it. It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Opk. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance;
pray you, love, remember: and there's pansies,
that's for thoughts.

Laer. A document in madness; thoughts and remembrance faded.

Opk. There's fennel for you, and columbines:—
—there's rue for you; and here's some for me:—
we may call it, herb of grace o'Sundays:—you may wear your rue with a difference.—There's a daisy:—I would give you some violets; but they withered all, when my father died:—They say, he made a good eulogy.—

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.—[Sings.

Laer. Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,
She turns to favour, and to prettiness.

Opk. And will he not come again? [Sings.
And will he not come again?
No, no, he is dead,
Go to thy death-bed,
He never will come again.

*His beard was as white as snow,
All flaxen was his poll:
He is gone, he is gone,
And we cast away moon,
God's a mercy on his soul!*

And of all christian souls! I pray God. God be w' you! [Exit Ophelia.

Laer. Do you see this, O God!

King. Luertes, I must commune with your grief.
Or you clay me right. Go but apart.
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me:
If by direct or collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but, if not,
Be yet content to lose your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To ease it due content.

Laer. Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral,—
No trumpet, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones,
No music rite, nor formal ostentation,—
'Tis to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth.
That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall;
And, where the offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Horatio, and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with me?

Serv.

They say, they have letters for you.

Hor.

Let them come in.—

[Exit Servant.

I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

1 Still, God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

1 Still. He shall, sir, as'll please him. There's a letter for you, sir; it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor. [Rends.] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase: finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour; and in the grapple
I boarded them: on the instant, they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me, like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them.
Let the king have the letters I have writ; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou would'st fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear, will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England; of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, Hamlet.

Come, I will give you way for these your letters;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal.

And you must put me in your heart for friend;
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

Laer. It well appears:—But tell a
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So criminal, and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all th' ge-also.

You mainly were stirr'd up

King. O, for two special reasons;
Which may to you perhaps seem much unanswer'd,
But yet to me they are strong. The queen, his mother,

Lives almost by his looks; and for myself,
(My virtue, or my plague, be it either which,)
She is so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Why to a publick count I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him:
Who, dippe all his faults in their affection,
Work like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his eyes to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost;
A sister driven into desperate terms;
Whose worth, if prizes may go back again,
Stood challenger on mount of all the age:
For her perfection:—But my revenge will come

Oph. Well, God'held you! They say, the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but, know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Consecrate upon her father.

Oph. Pray, let us have no words of this; but when they ask you what it means, say you this:

*Good morrow, 'tis Saint Valentine's day
All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine:*

*Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dupp'd the chamber door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never departed more.*

King. Pretty Ophelia!

[out:]

Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end

*By Gis, and by Saint Charity
Alack, and for shame!
Young men will do't, if they come to't;
By cock, they are to blame.
Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
You promis'd me to wed:*

[He answers.]

*So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.*

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot chide him with weep, to think, they should lay him in the cold ground: My brother shall know of it, and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies! good night, sweet ladies! good night, good night!

King. Follow her close; give her good watch, I pray you. [Exit Horatio.]

O! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs All from her father's death: And now behold, O Gertrude, Gertrude.

When sorrows come, they come not single spies, But in battalions! First her father slain; Next your son gone; and he most violent author Of his own just remove: The people muddied, Thicke and unwholesome in their thoughts and winpers.

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but in huger-mugger to inter him: Poor Ophelia, Divided from herself, and her fair judgment; Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts.

Last, and as much containing as all these, Her brother is in secret come from France: Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds, And wants not buzzers to infect his ear With pestilent speeches of his father's death; Wherein necessary of matter begu'd, With nothing stuck our person to arraign In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this, Like to a murdering piece, in many places, Gives me superfluous death. [A noise within.]

Queen. Alack! what noise is this?

Enter a Gentleman.

King. Attend! [door.]
Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the What is the matter?

Gent. Save yourself, my lord;
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eate out the fate with most impetuous haste
Thus yoking Laertes, in a riotous head,

O'erbears your officers; The rabble call him, lord, And as the world were now but to begin, Antiquity forgot, custom not known,

The ratifiers and props of every word,

They cry, Choose we; Laertes shall be king!

Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds, Laertes shall be king, Laertes king! [cry!]

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they O, this is counter, you false Danish dogs.

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.]

Enter Laertes armed; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king?—Sire, stand you still without.

Dan. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Dan. We will, we will. [They retire without the door.]

Laer. I thank you:—keep the door.—O thou vile king,

Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm, proclaims me bastard;

Cries, cuckold, to my father; brands the harlot Even here, between the chaste unsmirched brow Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,

That thy rebellion looks so giant-like!—

Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person;

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,

That treason can but peep to what it would,

Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,

Why thou art thus incensed?—Let him go, Ger-

Speak, man. trude:—

Laer. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

Laer. Let him demand his fill.

King. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled

To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil!

Conscience, and grace, to the profoundest pit!

I dare damnation: To this point I stand,—

That both the worlds I give to negligence.

Let come what comes; only I'll be reveng'd

Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world's:

And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,

They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

If you desire to know the certainty [rears.]

Of your dear father's death, is't writ in your re-

That, sweetestake, you will draw both friend and

Winner and loser? [See.]

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll open my arms;

And, like the kind life-rendering pelican,

Repent them with my blood. [Why, now you speak

Like a good child, and a true gentleman.

That I am guiltless of your father's death,

And am most sensibly in grief for it,

It shall as level to your judgment 'pear,

As day does to your eye.

Danes. [Within] Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?

Enter Ophelia, fantastically dressed with streamers and flowers.

O heat, dry up my brains! tenor, seven times eult,

Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!—

By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight,

The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England;
For like the heetick in my blood he rages.
And thou must cure me: 'Till I know 'tis done,
Howe'er my haps, my joys will ne'er begin.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Plain in Denmark.

Enter Fortinbras, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish
Tell him, that, by his licence, Fortinbras (king):
Craves the conveyance of a promisd march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.
If that his majesty would audit with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye,
And let him know us.

Cap. I will do't, my lord.

For. Go softly on. [Exeunt Fortinbras and Forces.]

Enter Hamlet, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, &c.

Ros. Good sir, whose powers are these?

Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purpos'd, sir,

I pray you!

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who commands them, sir?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.
Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir,
Or for some frontier?Cap. Truly to speak, sir, and with no addition,
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name.To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it;
Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole,
A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee. [it.]

Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd.

Ham. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousand ducats,

Will not debate the question of this straw:

This is the impetuousness of much wealth and peace;

That inward breaks, and shows no cause without

Why the man dies—I humbly thank you, sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, sir. [Exit Captain]

Ros. Will't please you go, my lord?

Ham. I will be with you straight. Go a little before.

[Exeunt Ros. and Guild.]

How all occasions do inform against me,

And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,

If his chief good, and market of his time,

Be but to sleep and feed? A beast, no more.

Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse,

Looking before, and after, gave us out

That capability and godlike reason

To fast in us unus'd. Now, whether it be

Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple

Of thinking too precisely on the event,—

A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wieldeth.

And, ever, three parts coward,—I do not know

Why yet I live to say, This thing's to do;

Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means.

To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:

Witness this army of such mass, and charge,

Led by a delicate and tender prince;

Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,

Matures months in the inveterate eye,

Expressing what is mortal, and unseems,

To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,

Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,

Is not to stir without great argument;

But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,
When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason, and my blood,
And let all sleep? While, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That, for a fantasy and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds; fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough, and continent,
To hide the slain!—O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

[Exit.]

SCENE V.—Elsinore. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Queen and Horatio.

Queen. — I will not speak with her.

Hor. She is importunate; indeed, distract;
Her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen. What would she have?

Hor. She speaks much of her father; says, she hears,

There's tricks i'the world; and hems, and beats

her heart;

Spurns aniously at straws; speaks things in

That carry but half sense; her speech is nothing.

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move

The hearers to collection; they aim at it,

And both the words up fit to their own thoughts;

Which, as her winks and nods, and gestures yield them, [thought,

Indeed would make one think, there might be

Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

Queen. 'Twere good she were spoken with; for

she may strew

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds:

Let her come in. [Exit Horatio]

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,

Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss;

So full of artless jealousy is guilt,

It spills itself, in fearing to be spilt.

Re-enter Horatio, with Ophelia.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Den-

Queen. How now, Ophelia? [mark]

Oph. How should I your true love know

From another one?

By his cockle hat and staff,

And his sandal shoon? [Singing.]

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

Oph. Say you? nay, pray you, mark.

He is dead and gone, lady, [Sings.]

He is dead and gone;

At his head a grass-green turf,

At his heels a stone.

O, ho!

Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,—

Oph. Pray you, mark.

While his shroud as the mountain snow. [Sings.]

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded all with sweet flowers;

Which sheep do bite the grass do, do,

With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence: and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse. — Ho! Guilden-stern!

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd
him:

Go, seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Ros. and Guil.
Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done: so, haply, slander,—
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon's bullet, [name,
Transports his poison'd shot,—may miss our
And hit the woundless air.—O come away!
My soul is full of discord, and dismay. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. — Safely stowed. — [Ros., &c., within.
Hamlet! lord Hamlet!] But soft,—what noise!
who calls on Hamlet? O, here they come.

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin. [thence,

Ros. Tell us where 'tis; that we may take it
And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be denuded of a sponge!
—what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end: He keeps them, like an ape, in the corner of his jaw; first mouth'd, to be last swallowed: When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry
again.

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

Guil. A thing, my lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the same.

Enter King, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How dangerous is it, that this man goes loose!
Yet must not we put the strong law on him:
He's lov'd of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes;
And, where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd,

But never the offence. To bear all smooth and

This sudden sending him away, must seem Deliberate pause: Dissension, desperate grown,
By desperate appliances are reliev'd,

Enter Rosencrantz.

Or not at all.—How now! what hath befallen?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my
We cannot get from him. [lord,

King. But where is he?

Ros. Without, my lord; guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper? Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten: a certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only em-perour for diet: we fat all creatures else, to fat us; and we fat ourselves for maggots: Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service; two dishes, but to one table; that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king; and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see: if your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there.

[To some Attendants.

Ham. He will stay till you come.

[Exeunt Attendants.

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,—

Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve
For that which thou hast done,—must send thee
hence.

With fiery quickness: Therefore, prepare thyself: The bark is ready, and the wind at help,
The associates tend, and every thing is bent
For England.

Ham. For England?

King. Ay, Hamlet.

Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub, that sees them. — But,
come; for England!—Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My mother: Father and mother is man and wife; man and wife is one flesh; and so say mother. Come, for England. [Exit.

King. Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed aboard:

Delay it not, I'll have him hence to-night:

Away; for every thing is seal'd and done
That else leans on the affair: Pray you, make haste. [Exeunt Ros. and Guil.

And, England, if my love thou hold'st at sight,
(As my great power thereof may give thee sense;
Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and the free awe Pays homage to us,) thou may'st not cockle set
Our sovereign process: which imports at full,
By letters conjuring to that effect.

Ham. On him! on him! — Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones.
Would make them cupable. — Do not look upon
Lost, with this piteous action, you convert [us;
My stern efforts: then what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears, perchance, for blood.
Queen. To whom do you speak this?
Ham. Do you see nothing there?
Queen. Nothing at all; yet all, that is, I see.
Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?
Queen. No, nothing but ourselves.
Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!
[Exit Ghost.

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!
My pulses, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: it is not madness.

That I have utter'd; bring me to the test.
And the matter will no word; which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that fluttering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness, speaks:
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place;
Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what's past; avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost on the weeds
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue:
For in the future of these pure times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg;
Yea, curb and woo, for leave to do him good.

Queen. O Hamlet! thou hast cleft my heart in two.

Ham. O throw away the worse part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night: but go not to my uncle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habits devil, is angel yet in this;
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery.
That aptly is put on. Refrain to-night;
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: the next more easy;
For use almost can change the face of nature,
And either curb the devil, or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night;
And when you are desirous to be bless'd,
I'll blessing beg of you. — For this same lord,

[Pointing to Polonius.
I do repent: But heaven hath pleas'd it so,
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So again, good night!
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind. —
But one word more, good lady.

Queen. What shall I do?
Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:
Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you, his mouse;
And let him, for a pair of reechy kisses,
Or padding in your sack with his damnd fingers,
Blaste you to ravel all this matter out,
That if essentially you are not in madness,
But mad in craft, 'Twere good, you let him know:
For who, that's a but a queen, fair, sober, wise,

Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gh,
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so!
No, in despite of sense, and secrecy,
Unpeep the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly; and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions, in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down. [threats.
Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.

Ham. I must to England; you know that!
Queen. Alack,

I had forgot: 'tis so concluded on. [fellows.—
Ham. There's letters seal'd: and my two school-
Whom I will trust, as I will address fung'd,
They bear the mandate: they must sweep my
way;

And marshal me to knavery: Let it work;
For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar: and it shall go hard,
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon: O, 'tis most sweet,
When in one line two crafts directly meet. —
This man shall see me packing.

I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room: —
Mother, good night. — Indeed, this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you:
Good night, mother.

[Exeunt severally; Hamlet dragging in Polonius.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves;
You must translate: 'tis fit we understand them:
Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while. — [To Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, who go out.

Al, my good lord, what have I seen to-night?
King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea, and wind, when both contend

Which is the mightier: In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries, A rat! a rat!
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!
It had been so with us, had we been there:
His liberty is full of threats to all;
To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?
It will be laid to us, whose providence [haunt] Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of This mad young man: but, so much was our
love,

We would not understand what was most fit;
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:
Of whom his very madness, like some ore,
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure; he weeps for what is done.

King. O, Gertrude, come away!

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now, mother: what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much of-Queen. Come, come, you answer with an ill tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet?

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so: You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife; And,—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then, I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall you go not, till I set you up a glass.

Where you may see the inmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me!

Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind.] What, ho! help!

Ham. How now! a rat! [Drums.

Dead, for a ducat, dead.

[Hamlet makes a pass through the arras.

Pol. [Behind.] O, I am slain! [Falls and dies.

Queen. O me, what hast thou done!

Ham. Nay, I know not:

Is it the king?

[Lifts up the arras, and drives forth Polonius.

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed;—almost as bad, good

mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king?

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word,—

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

[To Polonius.

I took thee for thy better: take thy fortune:

Thou find'st, to be too busy, is some danger—

Leave wringing of your hands: Peace, sit you down,

And let me wring your heart: for so I shall,

If it be made of penetrable stuff;

If damned custom have not braz'd it so,

That it be proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham.

Such an act,

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;

Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love,

And sets a blister there: makes marriage vows

As false as dicers' oaths: O, such a deed

As from the body of contraction plucks

The very soul; and sweet religion makes

A rapscall of words: Heaven's face doth glow;

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,

With tristful visage, as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen.

Ah me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this!

The counterfeited presentment of two brothers.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow:

Hypocrite's curls; the front of Jove himself;

An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;

A station like the herald mercury.

New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;

A combination, and a form, indeed,

Where every god did seem to set his seal,

To give the world assurance of a man:

This was your husband.—Look you now, what follows:

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,

Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,

And batten on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it love: for, at your age,

The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,

And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment

Would step from this to this? Sense, sense, you

Else, could you not have motion: But sure, that sense

Is apoplex'd: for madness would not err;

Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd;

But it reserv'd some quantity of choice,

To serve in such a diffidence. What devil was't

That thus hath cozzen'd you at husman-blind?

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,

Ears without hands or eyes, smelling same all,

Or but a sickly part of one true sense

Could not so mope.

O shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,

If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,

To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,

And melt in her own fire: proclaim no shame,

When the compulsive ardour gives the charge;

Since frost itself an actively doth burn,

And reason panders will.

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more:

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;

And there I see such black and grained spots,

As will not leave their tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an enseamed bed,

Stew'd in corruption; honeyed, and making love

Over the nasty sty;

Queen. O, speak to me no more;

These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears;

No more, sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A murderer, and a villain:

A slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe

Of your precedent lord:—a vice of kings:

A outpurse of the empire and the rule;

That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,

And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more.

Enter Ghost.

Ham. A king

Of shreds and patches:—

Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,

You heavenly guards!—What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas! he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,

That, in a time and passion, lets go by

The important acting of your dread command?

O, say.

Ghost. Do not forget: This visitation

Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.

But look! amazement on thy mother sits:

O, step between her and her fighting soul;

Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works:

Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how isn't with you?

That you do bend your eye on vacancy,

And with the incorporeal air do hold discourse?

Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;

And as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,

Your bedded hair, like life in exorcism,

Starts up, and stands on end. O gentle soul,

Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper

Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes
out
Contaction to this world: Now could I drink but
And do such business as the bitter day
Would quake to look on. Soft: now to my mother—

O heart, lose not thy nature: let not ever
The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom:
Let me be cruel, not unnatural:
I will speak daggers to her, but use none;
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites:
How in my words I never shall be silent,
To give them seals never, my soul, consent!

[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the same.

Enter King, Rosenkrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. I like him not; nor stands it safe with us, [you]
To let his madness range. Therefore prepare
I your commission with forthwith despatch,
And be to England shall along with you:
The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacy.

Osric. We will ourselves provide:
Most holy and religious fear it is,
To keep those many many bodies safe,
That live, and feed upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from 'noyance'; but much more
That spirit; upon whose wheel depend and rest
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Does not alone; but, like a gulf, doth draw
What's near it, with it: it is a mummy wheel,
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortu'd and adjoin'd; which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the honest ruin. Never alone
Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you to this speedy voyage:
For we will fetters put upon this fear, [age]
Which now goes too free-footed!

Ros. Gosh. We will haste us.
[Exeunt Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern.]

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet:
Behind the arras I'll convey myself, [home]
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax him
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet, that some more audience than a mother,
[hear]
Since nature makes them partial, should o'er-
The speech of vengeance. Fare you well, my F'll call upon you as you go to bed, [liege]
A. I tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord.
[Exit Polonius.]

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon't;
A brother's murder!—Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent;
And like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Where's my sword?

murder
But to construct the image of offence!

And what's in prayer, but this two-fold force,—
To be forestalled, ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder—
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd [dér-]
Of those effects for which I did the murder.
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd, and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: But 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one can not repeat?
O wretched state! O bloody, bleak as death!
O limed soul; that struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Help, angels, make assay!
Bow, stubborn knees! and, heart, with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe;
All may be well!

[Retires and kneels.]

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do't:—and so he goes to heaven:
And so am I reveng'd! That would be scan'd:
A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.

Why, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May;

And, how his audit stands, who knows, save heaven?
But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him: And am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No.

Up, sword! and know thou a more horrid heat.
When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage;
Or in the incestuous pleasures of his bed;
At gaming, swearing; or about some riot
That has no relish of salvation in't:
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven;
And that his soul may be as damn'd and black,
As hell, whereto it goes. My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days.

[Exit]

The King rises and advances.

King. My words fly up, my thoughts remain below;
Words without thoughts, never to heaven go.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Queen and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight. Look, you lay home to him:
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with;
And that your grace hath screen'd and stood behind him: I'll silence me e'en here.
Pray you, be round with him.

Queen. [I'll warrant you;
Fear me not:—withdraw, I hear him coming.]
[Polonius & des. Hamlet]

Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy natural magic and dire property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.

(Pours the poison into the sleeper's ears.)
Ham. He poisons him i'the garden for his estate.

His name's Gonzago; the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: You shall see soon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Op. The king rises.

Ham. What! frightened with false fire!

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light:—away!

Pol. Lights, lights, lights!

(Exeunt all but Hamlet and Horatio.)

Ham. Why, let the strucken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play;
For some must watch, while some must sleep:

Thus runs the world away—

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers, (if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me,) with two Provincial roses on my razed shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share.

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear,

This realm dismantled was

Of Jove himself; and now reigns here

A very very—peacock.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Dost perceive it?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning.—

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha!—Come, some music; come,
the recorders.—

For if the king like not the comedy,
Why then, belike,—he likes it not, perdy.

Enter Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern.

Come, some music. (You.)
Gui. Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word with

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Gui. The king, sir.—

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him? (Tempered.)

Gui. Is, in his retirement, marvellous dis-

Ham. With drink, sir?

Gui. No, my lord, with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to the purgation, would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler.

Gui. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir:—pronounce.

Gui. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Gui. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment; if not, your pardon, and my return, shall be the end of my business.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Gui. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer; my vow's dissolved: But, sir, such answer as I can make, you shall command; or, rather, as you say,

my mother: therefore, no more, but to the master: My mother, you say.—

Ros. Then thus she says: Your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O wonderful son, that can astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? impart.

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. And do still, by these pickers and stealers.

Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of distemper? you do, surely, but bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, sir, but, While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty.

Enter the Players, with recorders.

O, the recorders:—let me see one.—To withdraw with you:—Why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?

Gui. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmanly.

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Gui. My Lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Gui. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Gui. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying: govern these ven-tages with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music. Look you, these are the stops.

Gui. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me. You would play upon me:
you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass: and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think, I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

Enter Polonius.

God bless you, sir!

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.
Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by.—They fool me to the top of my head.—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

Ham. By and by is easily said.—Leave me, friends. (Exeunt Ros., Gui., Hor., &c.)

'Tis now the very witching time of night:

upon a bank of flowers; she, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exits. The Queen returns; finds the King dead, and makes poisonous action. The poisoner, with some two or three mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The poisoner woos the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling awhile, but, in the end, accepts his love. (Exeunt.)

Opt. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is mitching mallecho; it means mischief.

Opt. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Opt. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: Be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Opt. You are naught, you are naught; I'll mark the play.

*Pro. For us, and for our tragedy,
Here sleeping to your discovery,
We lay your hearing patiently.*

Ham. Is this a proulogue, or the posy of a ring?

Opt. 'Tis brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a King and a Queen.

P. King. Full thrice ten times hath Phoebus' cart gone round

*Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground;
And thirty dozen moons, with borrow'd sheen,
About the world have times twelve times been;
Since love our hearts, and Hymen dal our hands,
Late contractual in most sacred bands. (moue)*

*P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon
Make us again count o'er, ere love be done!
But, woe is me, you are so sick of late,*

*So far from cheer, and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust, Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must:*

*For women fear too much, even as they love;
And women's fear and love hold quantity;
In neither slight, or in extremity.*

*Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know;
And as my love is said, my fear is so.*

*Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;
Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.*

P. King. Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too:

*My operant powers their functions leave to do;
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, below'd; and, haply, one as kind
For husband shalt thou —*

*P. Queen. O, confound the rust!
Such love must needs be treason in my breast;
In second husband let me be accurst!
None wed the second but who kill'd the first.*

Ham. 'Tis a wormwood. (moue)

*P. Queen. The instances, that second marriage
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love;
A second time I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in bed. (speak)*

*P. King. I do believe, you think what now you say,
But what we do determine, off we break.
I'll requite but the slave to memory;
Of vilest birth, but poor valour.*

*Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree:
But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.*

Most necessary 'tis, that we forget

To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:

What to ourselves in passion we propose,

The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.

The violence of either grief or joy

Their own enactments with themselves destroying:

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;

Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.

This world is not for aye: nor 'tis not strange,

That even our loves should with our fortunes

change;

For 'tis a question left us yet to prove,

Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.

The great man down, you mark his favourite flies,

The poor advanced makes friends of enemies.

And hitherto doth love on fortune tend;

For who not needs, shall never lack a friend;

And who in want, a hollow friend doth try.

Directly seasons him his enemy.

But, orderly to end where I begun,—

Our wills, and fates, do so contrary run,

That our devices still are overthrown; (fown)

Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our;

So think thou wilt no second husband wed;

But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give fond, nor heaven

light!

Sport and repose lock from me, day, and night!

To desperation turn my trust and hope!

An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope!

Each opposite, that blinks the face of joy,

Meet what I would have well, and it destroy!

Both here, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,

If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break it now,—

(To Ophelia.)

P. King. The deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile

The tedious day with sleep. (Sleeps.)

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain,

And never come machance between us twain!

(Exit.)

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?

Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest;

no offence i'the world.

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically.

This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife,

Baptista: you shall see anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work: But what of that? Your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung —

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Opt. You are as good as a chorus, my lord.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Opt. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a grinning, to take off my edge.

Opt. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you mistake your husbands. — Begin, murderer! — leave thy damnable faces, and begu.

Come; —

— The creaking raven

Doth bellow for revenge. (time agreeing)

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, words fit, and Hamlet.—Marry, this is miching mallecho; it means mischief.

HAMLET, ACT III., SCENE II.

921 fellow whipped for o'er-doing Termagant; it out-herods Herod: pray you, avoid it.

1 Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature: to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now this overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure of which one must, in your silence, o'er-weigh a whole theatre of others. O, there he plays, that I have seen play, — and heard of hers praise, and that highly, — not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of christians, nor the gait of christian, pagan, nor man, have so strutted, and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

1 Play. I hope, we have reformed that indifferently with us.

Ham. O reform it altogether. And let those, that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though, in the mean time, some necessary question of the play be then to be considered: that's villainous; and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready. [Exit Players.]

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.
How now, my lord? will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste. —

[Exit Polonius.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. Ay, my lord.

[Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man as o'er my conversation cup'd withal.

Hor. O, my dear lord. —

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter: For what advancement may I hope from thee, That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits, To feed, and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp; And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice, And could of men distinguish her election, She hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been

As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing; A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards (thou) Hast ta'en with equal thanks; and blest is he Whose blond and judgement are so well co-mingled, That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger To sound what stop she please: Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart, As I do thee. — Something too much of this. —

There is a play to-night before the king, One scene of it comes near the circumstance, Which I have told thee of my father's death. I pray thee, when thou see'st that act a-foot, Even with the very comment of thy soul Observe my uncle: if his occulted guilt Do not itself unkennel in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen; And my imaginations are as foul As Vulcan's stithy. Give him heedful note: For I mine eyes will rivet to his face; And, after, we will both our judgments join In censure of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord: If he steal aught, the whilst this play is playing, And scape detecting, I will pay the theft. [Exit.] Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be got you a place.

Danish march. A flourish. Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith: of the camelion's dish: I eat the air, promise-cramm'd: You cannot feed capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now. My lord, — you played once in the university, you say? [To Polonius.]

Pol. That did I my lord; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Caesar: I was killed i' the Capitol; Brutus killed me.

Ham. It was a brave part of him, to kill so capital a calf there — Be the players ready!

Ros. Ay, my lord; they stay upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's a maelstrom attractive.

Pol. O ho! do you mark that? [To the King.]

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap? [Lying down at Ophelia's feet.]

Opk. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap!

Opk. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think, I meant country matters?

Opk. I think nothing, my lord!

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between a maid's legs.

Opk. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Opk. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Opk. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O! your only jig-maker. What should a man do, but be merry? for look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father dead within these two hours.

Opk. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then, let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet! Then there's hope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'r-lady, he must build churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse; whose epitaph is, For O, for O, the hobby-horse is forgot.

Trumpets sound. The dumb show follows.

Enter O, King and a Queen, very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of devotion unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck: lays him down

With a here bodkin I who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life;
But that the dread of something after death—
The undiscover'd country, from whose bourne
No traveller returns,—puzzles the will;
And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of!
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought;
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now!
The fair Ophelia:—Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember'd.

Oph. Good my lord,
How does your honour for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thank you; well.
Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you, now receive them.

Ham. No, not I;
I never gave you aught. [you did:
Oph. My honour'd lord, you know right well,
And, with them, words of so sweet breath compos'd,
As made the things more rich: their perfume
Take these again; for to the noble mind,
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind.

Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest?
Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair?
Oph. What means your lordship?
Ham. That if you be honest, and fair, you should admit no discourse to your beauty.
Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of honesty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a baud, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was some time a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.
Ham. You should not have believed me: for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it: I lov'd you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.
Ham. Get thee to a nunnery; Why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck, than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in: What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven! We are arrant knaves, all; believe none of us: Go thy ways to a nunnery.
Where's your father?

Oph. At home, my lord.
Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him; that he may play the fool on where but in's own house.
Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!
Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry: Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow thou shalt not escape calumny.
Get thee to a nunnery; farewell! Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and quickly too.
Farewell.

Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him!

Ham. I have heard of your paintings too, well enough; God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another: you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nick-name God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance: Go to,
I'll no more of it: it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages: those that are married already, all but one, shall live; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go.

[Exit Hamlet.
Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's, eye, tongue,
sword:

The expectancy and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion, and the mould of form,
The observ'd of all observers! quite, quite down!
And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh;
That unmatched form and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy: O, woe is me!
To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter King and Polonius.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend;
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul,

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch, and the disclose.
Will be some danger: Which for to prevent,
I have in quick determination,
Thus set it down; He shall with speed to England,

For the demand of our neglected tribute:
Haply, the seas, and countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This something-settled matter in his heart;
Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well; but yet I do believe,
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia,
You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his grief; let her be round with him;
And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference: If she find him not,
To England send him; or confine him, where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so:
Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the same.

Enter Hamlet, and certain Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Now do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus;
but use all gently: for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and bear a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periphrastic fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings; who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb-shows, and noise: I would have such a

The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I.

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property, and most dear life,
A damn'd defeat was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie i'th' throat,

As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
Ha!

Why, I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall,
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal: Bloody, bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!

Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave;
That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing, like a very drab,
A scullion! [have heard.]
Eye upon't! foh! About my brains! Humph! I
That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will
speak

With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him to the quick; if he do blench
I know my course. The spirit that I have seen,
May be a devil: and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
Out of my weakness, and my melancholy,
(As he is very potent with such spirits,)—
Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds
More relative than this: The play's the thing,
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. And can you, by no drift of conference
Get from him, why he puts on this confusion;
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?
Ros. He does confess, he feels himself distracted;

But from what cause he will by no means speak.
Gm. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;

But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen

Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Gm. But with much forcing of his disposition.
Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands,
Most free in his reply.

Queen

Did you assay him,
To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players

We o'er-raught on the way: of these we told
And there did seem in him a kind of joy [him.]
To hear of it: They are about the court;
And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol.

And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties,
To hear and see the matter. [tent me.]
King. With all my heart; and it doth much commend to hear him so inclin'd.

Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]
King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:

For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;

That he, as 'twere by accident, may here

affront Ophelia:

Her father, and myself (lawful espials)

Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,

We may of their encounter frankly judge;

And gather by him, as he is behav'd,

If 't be the affliction of his love or no,

That thus he suffers for.

Queen. I shall obey you:

And, for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,

That your good beauties be the happy cause

Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues

Will bring him to his wouted way again.

To both your honours.

Oph.

Madam, I wish it may.

[Exit Queen.]

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here:—Gracious, so

please you,

We will bestow ourselves:—Read on this book;

[To Ophelia.]

That show of such an exercise may colour

Your loneliness.—We are oft to blame in this,—

'Tis too much prov'd, that, with devotion's visage,

And pious action, we do sugar o'er

The devil himself.

King.

O, 'tis too true! how smart

A lash that speech doth give my conscience!

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plastring art,

Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,

Than is my deed to my most painted word:

O heavy burden!

[Aside.]

Pol. I hear him coming: let's withdraw, my lord. [Exit King and Polonius.]

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:—

Whether 'tis nobler in the mind, to suffer

The sling and arrows of outrageous fortune;

Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,

And, by opposing, end them?—To die,—to sleep,—

No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end

The heart-ach, and the thousand natural shocks

That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation

Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep;—

To sleep! perchance to dream:—ay, there's the rub;

For in that sleep of death what dreams may

When we have shuffl'd off this mortal coil,

Must give us pause: there's the respect,

That makes calamity of so long life:

For who would bear the whips and scorns of

time,

The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contempt, the pangs of desp'd love, the law's delay,

The insolence of office, and the spurs

That patient merit of the unworthy takes,

When he himself might his quietus make,

mark!—What! my young lady and mistress! By—o—lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven, than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine. Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring.—Mistress, you are all welcome. We'll den to it like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: We'll have a speech straight; Come, give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

1 Play. What speech, my lord!

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once,—but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once; for the play, I remember, pleased not the million; 'twas cavied to the general: but it was (as I received it, and others, whose judgments, in such matters, cried in the top of mine,) an excellent play; well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, once said, there were no sales in the lines, to make the matter savoury; nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the author of affection; but called it, an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved: 'twas Æneas' tale to Dido; and therewithof it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter: If a live in your memory, begin at this line; let me see, let me see:—

The rugg'd Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast,—

'tis not so; it begins with Pyrrhus.

The rugg'd Pyrrhus,—br, whose noble arms,

Black as his purpose, did the night resemble

When he lay couch'd in the ominous horror,

Æt'na now this dread and black complexion smear'd

With heretofore more dismal; bend to foot

Now is he total gales; horribly trick'd

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons;

Back'd and impasted with the parching streets,

That lend a tyrannous and a damned light

To their lord's murder: Roast'd in wrath, and fire,

And thus o'er-siz'd with compunctious pore,

With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus

Old grandam Priam secks;—So proceed you.

Pol. 'Fore God, my lord, well spoken; with good accent, and good discretion.

1 Play. Anon he finds him

Striking too short at Greeks; his rusty sword,

Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,

Repugnant to command: Unwieldy witch'd,

Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage, strikes wide;

But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword

The unwarred father falls. Then æneas flies,

Seeming to feel this blow, with fanning top

Stings to his face; and with a furious crack

Throws prisoner Pyrrhus' ear; for, lo! his sword

Which was detrim'd on the milky head

Of reverend Priam, smelt'd it the air to stick:

So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood;

And, like a neutral to his will and matter,

Did nothing.

But, as we often see, against some storm,

A silence in the heavens, the rock stand still,

The bold winds speechless, and the orb below

As hush as death; anon the dreadful thunder

Doth rattle the region: So, after Pyrrhus' pause,

A rattling vengeance sets him new a-work;

And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall

On Mars' armour, forged for proof eternal,

With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword

Now falls on Priam.—

Out, out, thou trumpet, Fortune! All you gods,

In general synod, take away her power;

Break all the spokes and felloes from her wheel,

And bow the round nave down the hill of heaven,

As low as to the floods!

Pol. This is too long

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard.

—Pr'ythee, say on:—It's for a jill, or a tale of hew'dry, or he sleeps:—any on: come to Hecuba.

1 Play. But who, oh who! had seen the madd'd

queen?

Ham. 'The madd'd queen?

Pol. That's good: madd'd queen is good.

1 Play. Run barefot up and down, threaten,

the flames

With basion rhetoric; a clout upon that head,

Where late the diadem stood; and, for a robe,

About her lank and all o'er-teem'd limbs,

A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up;

Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,

'Greatest fortune's state would treason have pro-nounc'd!'

But if the gods themselves did see her then,

When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport

In mowing with his sword her husband's limbs;

The instant burst of clamour that she made,

(Unless things mortal move them not at all.)

Would have made much the burning eye of heaven,

And passion in the gods.

Pol. Look, whether he has not turn'd his colour, and has tears in's eyes.—Pr'ythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well: I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestow'd? Do you hear, let them be well need: for they are the abstract, and brief

chronicles, of the time: After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. Odd's bodikin, man, much better: Use every man after his desert, and who shall escape whipping! Use them after your own honour and dignity: The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sir

(Exit Polonius with some of the Players.)

Ham. Follow him, friends: we'll hear a play to-morrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend; can you play the murder of Gonzago?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll have it to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't! could you not?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.—Follow that lord; and look you mock him not. (Exit Player.) My good friends, (To Ros. and Guil.) I'll leave you till night: you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord!

(Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.)

Ham. Ay, so, God be wi' you:—Now I am alone.

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

Is it not monstrous, that this player here,

But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,

Could force his soul so to his own conceit,

That from her working, all his vantage wad'd;

Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect,

A broken voice, and his whole function sinning

With forms to his conceit? And all for nothing!

For Hecuba!

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,

That he should weep for her? What would he do

Had he the motive and the cue for passion,

That I have? He would drown the stage with

tears,

And cleave the universal ear, with horrid speech;

Make mad the guilty; and appeal the free;

Confound the ignorant; and amaze, indeed

our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. What say you?

Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you; [Aside.—if you love me, hold not off.

Guit. My lord, we were sent for

Ham. I will tell you why; or shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen moults no feather. I have of late, (but, wherefore, I know not,) lost all my mirth, foregone all custom of exercises; and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterility promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave orphanning firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither; though, by your smiling, you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there is no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said, Man delights not me?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what leuten entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted them on the way; and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king, shall be welcome: his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the drunkard may choke his heart in peace; the clown shall make those laugh, whose lunas are tickled of the mere; and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt forth.—What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it, they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think, their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: But there is, sir, an airy of children, little eyes, that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapped for't; these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages, (as they call them) that many wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What are they children? who maintains them? how are they educated? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players, (as it is most like, if their means are no better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. Faith, there has been much to do on both sides: and the nation holds it no sin, to turn them on to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is it possible?

Guit. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his lion too.

Ham. It is not very strange; for my uncle is king of Denmark; and those, that would make mouths at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Flourish of trumpets within.]

Guit. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then: the appearance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply with you in this garb: lest my intent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome: but my uncle-father, and aunt-mother, are deceived.

Guit. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a hand-saw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern,—and you too:—at each ear a hearer; that errand baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling clouts.

Ros. Happily, he's the second time come to them; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy, he comes to tell me of the players; mark it.—You say right, sir: 'O'Monday morning'; 'twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you. When Romeus was an actor in Rome.—

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. Brz, buz!

Pol. Upon my honour,—

Ham. Then come each actor on his ass.—

Pol. The best actors in the world, if not for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical, historical-pastoral, scene indivisible, or poem unlimited: Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ, and the liberty, these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel!—what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why?—One fair daughter, and no more,

The which he loved passing well.

Pol. Still on my daughter.

Ham. Am I not i'th' right, old Jephthah? [Aside.

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows then, my lord?

Ham. Why, As by lot, God wot, and then, you know, it came to pass, As most like it was.—The first row of the pious chanson will show you more; for look, my abridgement comes.

Enter Four or Five Players.

Yea are welcome, masters; welcome all:—I am glad to see thee well, and good friends:—O, old friend!—Why, thy face is valenced since I saw thee last; I'm at it now to learn me in Den-

where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.

King. How may we try it further?
Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours together
Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does, indeed. [him:]
Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to Be you and I behind an arras then;
Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
And be not from his reason fallen thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter Hamlet, reading.

Queen. But look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away
I'll board him presently:—O, give me leave.—
[Exit King, Queen, and Attendants.]

How does my good lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, god-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest as this world goes,

is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god, kissing carrion.—Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk i'th' sun: conception is a blessing; but as your daughter may conceive,—friend, look to't.

Pol. How say you by that? [Aside.] Still harping on my daughter:—yet he knew me not at first; he said I was a fishmonger: he is far gone, far gone: and truly in my youth I suffered much extremity for love: very near this. I'll speak to him again.—What do you read, my lord?

Ham. Words, words, words!

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean, the matter that you read, my lord.

Ham. Slanders, sir: for the satirical rogue says here, that old men have grey beards: that their faces are wrinkled; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams: All of which, sir, though I most powerfully and potentially believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for yourself, sir, shall be as old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madness, yet there's a method in it. [Aside.] Will you walk out of the air,
my lord?

Ham. Into my grave?

Pol. Indeed, that is out o'th' air.—How pregnant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madmen hit on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.—My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal; except my life, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools.

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Pol. You go to seek the lord Hamlet: there he is.
Ros. God save you, sir! [To Polonius.]

[Exit Polonius.]

Guild. My honour'd lord!

Ros. My most dear lord!

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both?

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guild. Happy, in that we are not overhappy;

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoes?

Ros. Neither, my lord.

Ham. 'Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

Guild. 'Faith, her privities we.

Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? O, most true; she is a strumpet. What news?

Ros. None, my lord; but that the world's grown honest.

Ham. Then is dooms-day near: But your news is not true. Let me question more in particular:
What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Guild. Prison, my lord!

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

Ros. Then is the world one.

Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confiners, wards, and dungeons; Denmark being one of the worst.

Ros. We think not so, my lord.

Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you: for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why then your ambition makes it one;
'tis too narrow for your mind.

Ham. O Guild! I could be bounded in a out-shell, and count myself a king of infinite space;
were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guild. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of no airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars' bodies; and our monarchs, and outstretch'd heroes, the beggars' shadows: Shall we to the court? for by my fay
I cannot reason.

Ros. Guild. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended.
But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggars that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear a half-penny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inciting? Is it a free visitation? Come, come; deal justly with me: come, come; nay, speak.

Guild. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Any thing—but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know, the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the consanguinity of our youth, by the obligation of

Quee. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosen-
And I beseech you instantly to visit. [craatz.
My too much claundered son.—Go some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

God. Heavens make our presence, and our practices,

Pleasant and helpful to him!

Quee.

Ay, amen!

[Exeunt Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and some Attendants]

Enter Polonius.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good
Are joyfully return'd. [lord, King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my sonl,
Both to my God, and to my gracious king:

And I do think, (or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure

As it hath us'd to do,) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;

My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Theyself do grace to them, and bring them in. [Exit Polonius.

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Quee. I doubt, it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

Re-enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Cornelius.

King. Well, we shall sift him.—Welcome, my good friends!

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Pol. Most fair return of greetings, and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies; which to him appear'd

To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack;
But, better look'd into, he truly found

It was against your highness: Whereat griev'd,—
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,

Was falsely borne in hand,—sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys;

Receives rebuke from Norway: and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle, never more

To give the assay of arms against your majesty.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee;

And his commission, to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack;

With an entreaty, herein further shown,

[Gives a paper.

That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise;

On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well;

And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business. [bour:

Mean time, we thank you for your well-took la-go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:

Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad:
But let that go.

Quee. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear, I use no art at all.

That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pity;

And pity 'tis, 'tis true: a foolish figure;

But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let us grant him then: and now remains
That we find out the cause of this effect.

Or, rather say, the cause of this defect:

For this effect, defective, comes by cause:

Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perpend.

I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;

Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,

Hath given me this: Now gather, and surmise.

—To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beliefed Ophelia,—

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautiful is a vile phrase, but you shall hear.—'Tis so:—

In her excellent white bosom, there, &c.—

Quee. Came this from Hamlet to her? [fal.—

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile: I will be faithful.

Doubt thou, the stars are fire; [Rounds.

Doubt, that the sun doth move;

Doubt truth to be a liar;

But never doubt, I love.

O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers; I have no art to reckon my groans: but that I love thee best,

O most best, believe it. Adieu.

Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet.

This in obedience, hath my daughter shown me:

And more above, hath his solicitings,

As they fell out by time, by means, and place,

All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Received his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think,

When I had seen this hot love on the wing,
(As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,

Before my daughter told me,) what might you,
Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,

If I had play'd the desk, or table-book;
Or given my heart a working, mute and dumb;

Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
What might you think? no, I went round to work,

And my young mistress thus did I bespeak;
Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy sphere;

This must not be, and then I precepts gave her,
That she should lock herself from his resort,

Admit no messengers, receive no tokens:

Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;

And he, repuls'd, (a short tale to make),
Fell into a sadness; then into a fast;

'Thence to a watch; thence into a weakness;

'Thence to a lightness; and, by this declension,
Into the madness wherein now he raves.

And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think, 'tis this?

Quee. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time, (I'd fain know that.)

That I have positively said, 'Tis so,

When it prov'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise:

(Pointing to his head and shoulder.

If circumstances lead me, I will find

The flash and out-break of a fiery mind;
A savageness in unreclaimed blood,
Of general assault.

Rep. Bat, my good lord,—
Rep. Wherefore should you do this?

Rep. Ay, my lord,
I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift;
And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant:
You laying these slight sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little sould i'the working,
Mark you,
Your party in converse, him you would sound,
Having ever seen, in the presumptive crimes,
The youth you breathe of guilty, be assur'd,
He closes with you in this consequence:—
Good sir, or so; or friend, or gentleman,—
According to the phrase, or the addition,
Of man, and country.

Rep. Very good, my lord.
Pol. And then, sir, does he this,—he does—
What was I about to say? By the mass, I was about to say something:—Where did I leave it?

Rep. At, closes in the consequence.
Pol. At, closes in the consequence,—Ay, marry;
He closes with you thus:—I know the gentleman;
I saw him yesterday, or t'other day, [say,
Or then, or then; with such, or such; and, as you
There was he passing; there o'erlook in his rousé:
There falls out at tennis; or perchance,
I saw him enter such a house of ale,
[Vulgar, a brothel,] or so forth.—
See you now?

Your hat of falsehood takes this carp of truth:
And thus do we of wisdom and of reason,
With windlasses, and with assays of bias,
By indirectness find directions out:
So, by my former lord's advice,
Shall you my son:—You have me, have you not?

Rep. My lord, I have.
Pol. God be wi' you; fare you well.
Rep. Good my lord.—
Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.
Rep. I shall, my lord.
Pol. And let him ply his music.
Rep. Well, my lord.

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell!—How now, Ophelia? what's the matter?

Op. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

Pol. With what, in the name of heaven?
Op. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrued,
No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd, and down-gyved to his ankle;
Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;
And with a look so piteous in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of hell,
To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?
Op. My lord, I do not know:

Pol. But truly, I do fear it.
Op. What said he?
Op. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;

Then gurs he to the length of all his arm;
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it. Loos'd he so;
At last,—a little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,—
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,

As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being: That done, he lets me go:
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;
For, out o'doors he went without their helps,
And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me: I will go speak the
This is the very ecstasy of love; [king.
Whose violent property fordoes itself,
And lends the will to desperate undertakings,
As oft as any passion under heaven,
That does afflict our natures. I am sorry,—
What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Op. No, my good lord; but, as you did command.
I did repel his letters, and denied
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am sorry, that with better heed, and judgment,
I had not quoted him: I fear'd, he did but trifle,
And meant to wreck thee; but, beshrew my jealousy!

It seems, it is no proper to our age:
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king:
This must be known; which, being kept close,
might move
More grief to hide, than hate to utter love.
Come. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern!

Moreover, that we much did long to see you,
The need, we have to use you, did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it.
Since not the exterior nor the inward man
Resembles that it was: What it should be,
More than his father's death, that thus hath put
him

So much from the understanding of himself,
I cannot dream of: I entreat you both,
That,—being of so young days brought up with
him;—

And, since, so neighbour'd to his youth and
That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court:
Some little time; so by your companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather,
So much as from occasion may glean,
Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus,
That, open'd, lies within our remedy. [Exit.]

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of
And, sure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom we more adhere. If it will please you,
To show us so much gentry, and good will,
As to expend your time with us a while,
For the supply and profit of our hope.
Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Op. But we both obey;
And here give up ourselves in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guildenstern.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Mar. How is't, my noble lord!

Hor. What news, my lord!

Ham. O, wonderful!

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No;

You will reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How may you then; would heart of man once think it!

But you'll be secret,—

Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Ham. There's ne'er a villain, dwelling in all

But he's an arrant knave. [Denmark.]

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from

To tell us this. [the grave.]

Ham. Why, right; you are in the right;

And so, without more circumstance at all,

I hold it fit, that we shake hands, and part:

You, as your business, and desire, shall point

us out;

For every man hath business, and desire,

Such as it is,—and for my own poor part,

Look you, I will go pray. [lord.]

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my

Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily; yes,

'Faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by St. Patrick, but there is, Horatio,

And much offence too Touching this vision

here.

It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you:

For your desire to know what is between us,

O'er-muster it as you may. And now, good friends,

As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,

Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord!

We will.

Ham. Never make known what you have seen

to-night.

Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith.

My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ha, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there, true-penny!

Come on,—you hear this fellow in the collarage,—

Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen,

Swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ric et ubique? then we'll shift our

Come hither, gentlemen. [ground:]

And lay your hands again upon my sword:

Swear by my sword,

Never to speak of this that you have heard.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear by his sword.

Ham. Well said, old mole! can't work i'th earth so fast! [friends.]

A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome. [Horatio.]

There are more things in heaven and earth,

Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

But come; —

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy!

How strange or odd so'er I bear myself,

As I perchance hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on—

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall

With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

As, Well, well, we know;—or, We could, and if we would;—or, If we had to speak;—or, There be, on

if they might;—

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note

That you know aught of me:—This do you swear,

So grace and mercy at your most need help you!

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! So, gentle-

With all my love I do commend me to you, (mean,

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is

May do, to express his love and friending to you,

God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in

together;

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.

The time is out of joint:—O cursed spite!

That ever I was born to set it right!

Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Room in Polonius's House.

Enter Polonius and Reynaldo.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes, Rey-naldo.

Rey. I will, my lord. [Reynaldo.]

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good

Before you visit him, to make inquiry

Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

Pol. Marry, well said: very well said. Look you, sir,

Inquire me first what Dankers are in Paris;

And how, and who, what means, and where they keep.

What company, at what expence; and finding,

By this encompassment and draft of question,

That they do know my son, come you more nearer

Than your particular demands will touch it:

Take you, as 'twere, some distant knowledge of

him;

As thus,—I know his father, and his friends,

And, in part, him;—Do you mark this, Reynaldo?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. And, in part, him;—but, you may say, not

well;

But, if't it be he I mean, he's very wild;

Addict'd so and so;—and there put on him

What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank

As may dishonour him; take heed of that;

But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,

As are companions noted and most known

To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, feuding, swearing, quarrelling.

Drabbing:—You may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. 'Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him,

That he is open to continency; [continuity.]

That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults so

That they may seem the taints of liberty.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Némean lion's nerve —

[Ghost beckons.
Still am I call'd:—unhand me, gentlemen:—

[Breaking from them.
By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets
I say, away:—Go on, I'll follow thee. [Exit.

[Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mer. Let's follow: 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Ham. Have after:—To what issue will this come? [mark.

Mer. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark. Heaven will direct it.

Mer. Nay, let's follow him.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—A more remote Part of the Platform.

Re-enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me? speak, I'll Ghost. Mark me. [Go no further.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,

When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames

Must render up myself

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hear-

To what I shall unfold. [ing

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt

Ham. What? [hear.

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;

Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night;

And, for the day, confin'd to fast in fires,

Till the foul crimes, done in my days of nature,

Are burnt and purg'd away. But that I am for-

To tell the secrets of my prison-house, [bid

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word

Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young blood; [spies:

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their

Thy knotted and combined locks to part,

And each particular hair to stand on end,

Like quills upon the fretful porcupine:

But this eternal blazon must not be

To ears of flesh and blood:—List, list, O list!—

If thou didst ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O heaven! [murder

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural

Ham. Murder!

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;

But this most foul, strange, and unnatural!

Ham. Haste me to know it; that I, with wings as swift

As meditation, or the thoughts of love,

May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;

And duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed

That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf,

Would'st thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet,

hear:

'Tis given out, that sleeping in mine orchard,

A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark is a forced process of my death. [mark

Ham. Rankly abus'd: but know, thou noble youth,

The serpent that did sting thy father's life,

Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetic soul! my uncle!

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,

(O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power

So to seduce,) won to his shameful lust

The will of my most seeming virtuous queen:

O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!

From me, whose love was of that dignity,

That it went hand in hand even with the vow

I made to her in marriage; and to decline

Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor

To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,

Though ledness court it in a shape of heaven;

So just, though to a radiant angel link'd,

Will suite itself in a celestial bed,

And prey on garbage.

But, soft! methinks, I scent the morning air;

Brief let me be:—Sleeping within mine orchard,

My custom always of the afternoon,

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,

With juice of cursed hellebore in a vial,

And in the porches of mine ears did pour

The leperous distillment; whose effect

Holds such an enmity with blood of man,

That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through

The natural gates and alleys of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset

And curd, like eager droppings into milk,

The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine;

And a most instant tetter bark'd about,

Most Lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,

All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,

Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd:

Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,

Unhousel'd, unsuit'd, unarm'd,

No reckoning made, but sent to my account

With all my imperfections on my head:

O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!

If thou hast nature in thee, hear it not;

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be

A couch for luxury and damned incest.

But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act,

'Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive

Against thy mother ought; leave her to heaven,

And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,

To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!

The glow worm shows the nuttin to be near,

And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire:

Adieu, adieu, adieu! remember me. [Exit.

Ham. O all you host of heaven! O earth!

What else? [my heart;

And shall I couple hell?—O fy!—Hold, hold,

And you, my sinews, grow not instant odd,

But hear me stuffy up!—Remember thee!

Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat

In this distracted globe. Remember thee!

Yea, from the table of my memory

I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,

All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,

'Tis youth and observation copied there;

And thy commandment all alone shall live

Within the book and volume of my brain,

Unmix'd with baser matter: yes, by heaven.

O most pernicious woman!

O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!

My tables,—meet it is, I set it down,

That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;

At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark: [Writing.

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word;

It is, Adieu, adieu! remember me.

I have sworn't.

Ham. [Within.] My lord, my lord,—

Mer. [Within.] Lord Hamlet,—

Ham. [Within.] Heaven secure him!

Ham. So be it!

Mer. [Within.] Ill, ho, ho, my lord!

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy! come, bird, come.

Have of your audience been most free and honest
If it be so, (as so 'tis put on me, [to Ophelia])
And that in way of caution, I must tell you,
You do not understand yourself so clearly.
As it behoves my daughter and your honour.
What is between you? give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late, made many tenders
Of his affection to me. [dramatic pause]

Pol. Affection? pah! you speak like a green girl,
Unfaded in such perilous circumstance.
Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby;

That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay,
Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly;

Or, (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Wrangling it thus,) you'll tender me a fool.

Oph. My lord, he hath importun'd me with love,
In honourable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it: go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord.

With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

Pol. Ay, springs to catch woodcocks. I do know.

When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul
Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter,
Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both,
Even in their promise, as it is a making,—
You must not take for fire. From this time,
Be somewhat squalid of your maiden presence;
Set your entreatments at a higher rate,
Than a command to parley. For lord Hamlet,
Believe so much in him, That he is young;

And with a larger tether may he walk,
Than may be given you: in few, Ophelia,
Do not believe his vows: for they are brokers
Not of that die which their investments show,
But mere implorers of unholy suits,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,
The better to beguile. This is for all,—
I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,
Have you so slander any moment's leisure,
As to give words or talk with the lord Hamlet.
Look to't, I charge you; come your ways.

Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exit Pol.]

SCENE IV — The Platform.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think, it lacks of twelve.

Ham. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; it then draws near the season.

Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A flourish of trumpets, and ordnance shot off, within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes His repose. [reals]

Keeps wassel, and the swaggering upspring
Aud, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't.

But to my mind,—though I am native here,
And to the manner born,—it is a custom
More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.
This heavy-headed revel, east and west, [vance.]

Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations:
They clepe us, drunkards, and with swinish
Soil our addition; and, indeed, it takes [phases]
From our achievements, though perform'd at
The pith and marrow of our attributes. [taught]
So, oft it chances in particular men,
That for some vicious mole of nature in them,
As, in their birth, (wherein they are not guilty, Since nature cannot choose his origin.)
By the o'ergrowth of some complexion,
Off breaking down the pales and forts of reason;
Or by some habit, that too much o'er-leavens
The form of plausive manners;—that there

men.—
Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect;
Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,—
Their virtues else (be they as pure as grace,
As infinite as man may undergo)
Shall in the general censure take corruption
From that particular fault: The dram of base
Doth all the noble substance often dent,
To his own scandal.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!
Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend us!

Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from
Be thy intents wicked, or charitable. [hall]
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee; I'll call thee, Hamlet
King, father, royal Dane; O, answer me:
Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell,
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements! why the sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd it's ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again? What may this mean,
That thou, dead corpse, again, in complete steel,
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous: and we fools of nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we
Hor. It beckons you to go away with it, [do it]
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Hor. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should he the fear? I
I do not set my life at a pin's fee;
And, for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself?
It waves me forth again;—I'll follow it.

Hor. What, if it tempt you toward the flood,
My lord,

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea?
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,
And draw you into madness? think of it:
The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still:—

Go on, I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. From top to toe!
Alf. My in d. from head to foot.
Ham. Then saw you not
 His face
Her. O yes, my lord: he wore his heaven up.
Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?
Her. A countenance more
 In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?
Her. Nay, very pale.
Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?
Her. Most constantly.

Ham. I would, I had been there.
Her. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like, Very like,
 Very like: stay'd it long?
 (hundred.)

Her. While one with moderate haste might tell a Mar. Br. Longer, longer.
Her. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzl'd? no?
Her. It was, as I have seen it in his life,
 A sable silver'd

Ham. I will watch to-night;
 Perchance, 'twill walk again

Her. I warrant, it will.
Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,
 I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
 And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
 If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
 Let it be tenable in your silence still;
 And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
 Give it an understanding, but no tongue;
 I will requite your loves: So, fare you well:
 Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
 I'll visit you.

Alf. Our duty to your honour.
Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: Farewell.
 (Exeunt Horatio, Marcellus, and Bernardo.)

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
 I doubt some foul play: 'would, the night were
 come!

Till then sit still, my soul: Poor deeds will rise, Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes. (Exit.)

SCENE III.—A Room in Polonius's House.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd: farewell!
 And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
 And convey is assistant, do not sleep,
 But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?
Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,
 Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood;
 A violet in the youth of primy nature,
 Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
 The perfume and suppliance of a minute;
 No more.

Oph. No more but so?
Laer. Think it no more:

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone
 In the seeds and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
 The inward service of the mind and soul
 Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now;
 And now no soul, nor earnest, doth besmirch
 The virtue of his will: but, you must fear,
 His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
 For he himself is subject to his birth:
 He may not, as unrivall'd persons do,
 Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
 The safety and the health of the whole state;
 And therefore must his choice be circumscrib'd
 Upon the voice and yielding of that holy, you,
 Whoseof he is the head: Then if he says, he loves

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
 As he in his particular art and place
 May give his saying doct: which is no further.
 Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal
 Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain
 If with too credent ear you list his songs;
 Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open
 To his unmaster'd importunity.

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;
 And keep you in the rear of your affection,
 Out of the shot and danger of desire.

The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
 If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
 Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes:
 The canker galls the infants of the spring;
 Too oft before their buttons be discolor'd:
 And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
 Contagious blastments are most imminent.

Be wary then: best safety lies in fear;
 Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson keep,
 As watchman to my heart: But, good my brother,
 Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
 Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
 Whilst, like a palfrey and reckless libertine,
 Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
 And recks not his own read.

Laer. O fear me not.
 I stay too long:—But here my father comes.

Enter Polonius.

A double blessing is a double grace;
 Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! onward, onward, for shame!
 The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
 And you are stay'd for: There, my blessing with you! (Lays his hand on Laertes's head.)

And these few precepts in thy memory
 Look thou character: Give thy thoughts no tongue,
 Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar:
 The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
 Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;
 But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
 Of each new-hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Beware
 Of entrance to a quarrel: but, being in,
 Bear it, that the opposite may beware of thee.

Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice;
 Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
 But not express'd in fancy: rich, not gaudy;
 For the apparel oft proclaims the man;
 And they in France, of the best rank and station,
 Are most select and generous, chief in that.

Neither a borrower, nor a lender be:
 For loan oft loses both itself and friend;
 And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

This above all,—in this the self: be true;
 And it must follow, as the night the day,
 Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell; my blessing season this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia: and remember well
 What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd
 And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell. (Exit Laertes.)

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the lord Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well thought of.

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late
 Given private time to you: and you yourself

An understanding simple and unschoold'd;
For what, we know, must be, and is as common
As any of the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we, in our peevish opposition,
Take it to heart? Fye! 'tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
To reason must absurd; whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first curve, till he that died to-day,
This must be so. We pray you, throw to earth
This unprevailing woe; and think of us
As of a father: for let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our throne;
And, with no less nobility of love,
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart toward you. For your intent
In going back to school in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:
And, we beseech you, bend you to remain
Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers,
Hamlet;

I pray thee, stay with us; go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply;
Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come;
This gentle and amiable accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof,
No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king's rouse the heaven shall bruit again,
Re-speaking earthly thunder. Come away.

[Exeunt King, Queen, Lords, &c. Polonius, and Laertes]

Ham. O, that that two too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew!
Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
His canon 'gainst self-slaughter! O God! O God!
How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fye on't! O fye! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,

Possess it merely. That it should come to this!
But two months dead!—nay, not so much, not two;
So excellent a king; that was, to this,
Hyperion to a satyr: so loving to my mother,
That he might not betwixt the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? Why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what he fed on:—And yet, within a month,— Let me not think on't;—Fruity thy name is woman!—

A little month; or ere those shoes were old,
With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
Like Niobe, all tears;—why she, even she,—
O heaven! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,
Would have mourn'd longer,—married with my uncle.

My father's brother; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules: Within a month;
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married!—O most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to good;
But break, my heart; for I must hold my tongue!

Enter Horatio, Bernardo, and Marcellus.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you well:

Horatio.—or I do forget myself

Hor. 'Tis a sin, my lord, and your poor servant

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you
And what make you from Wittenberg. Horatio!— Marcellus!

Mar. My good lord.— [sir,]

Ham. I am very glad to see you; good even!

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear you enemy say so;

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,

To make it trustor of your own report.

Against yourself: I know you are no truant.

But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep, ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;

I think, it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bakh'd meats

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

'Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven

Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

My father,—Methinks, I see my father.

Hor. Where,

My lord!

Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,

I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw! who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father!

Hor. Season your admiration for a while

With an attent ear; till I may deliver,

Upon the witness of these gentlemen,

This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,

Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,

In the dead waist and middle of the night,

Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,

Armed at point, exactly cap-a-pe,

Appears before them, and, with solemn march,

Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd,

By their oppress'd and fear-surpriz'd eyes,

Within his truncheon's length; whilst they, distill'd

Almost to jelly with the act of fear,

Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me

In dreadful secrecy impart they did,

And I with them; the third night kept the watch.

Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,

Form of the thing, each word made true and good,

The apparition comes: I knew your father;

These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we

Ham. Did you not speak to it? [Watch'd]

Hor. My lord, I did:

But answer made it none: yet once, methought,

It lifted up its head, and did address

Itself to motion, like as it would speak;

But even then, the morning cock crew loud;

And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,

And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;

And we did think it writ down in our duty,

To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sir, but this troubles me

Hold you the watch to-night?

All. We do, my lord.

All. Arm'd, say you?

All. Arm'd, my lord.

Mer. 'Tis gone!
We do it wrong, being an majestic,
To offer it the show of violence:
For it is, as the air, invulnerable,
And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Mer. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.
Mer. And then it started like a guilty thing
Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day; and, at his warning,
Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
The extravagant and erring spirit hies
To his confine; and of the truth herein
This present object made probation.

Mer. It faded on the crowing of the cock.
Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long;
And then, they say, no spirit dare stir abroad:
The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.

Mer. So have I heard, and do in part believe it.
But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill:
Break we our watch up; and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have seen to-night
Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life,
This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him:
Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needful in our loves, fitting our duty? (know

Mer. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morning
Where we shall find him most convenient.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter the King, Queen, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, Voltimand, Cornelius, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green; and that it us befitst
To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom
To be contracted in one brow of woe;
Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature,
That we with wæst sorrow think on him,
Together with remembrance of ourselves.
Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen,
The imperial junctress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defuncted joy,
With one auspicious, and one dropping eye,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale, weighing delight and dole,—
Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr'd
Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
With this affair along:—For all, our thanks.

Now follows, that you know young Fortinbras,—
Holding a weak supposal of our worth;
Or thinking, by our late dear brother's death,
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame,

Collected with this dream of his advantage,
He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
Importing the surrender of those lands
Lost by his father, with all lands of law,
To our most valiant brother.—So much for him.
Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting:
Thus much the business is: We have here writ
To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,—
Who, impotent and bed-ridden, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress
His further gait herein: in that the lovers,
The hot, and full proportions, are all made

Out of his subject:—and we here despatch
You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand,
For bearers of this greeting to old Norway,
Giving to you no further personal power
To business with the king, more than the scope
Of these dilated articles allow.

Farewell: and let your haste commend your duty.
Cor. Not in that, and all things, will we show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell.
[Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.]
And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
You told us of some suit? What is't, Laertes?
You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
And lose your voice: What would'st thou beg,

Laertes,
That shall not be my offer, nor thy asking?
The hand is not more native to the heart,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.
What would'st thou have, Laertes?

Laer. My dread lord,
Your leave and favour to return to France:
From whence though willingly I came to Denmark,

To show my duty in your coronation;
Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,
My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France.

And how then to your gracious leave and pardon.
King. Have you your father's leave? What says
Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, wrung from me my slow
By labourous petition; and, at last,
Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent:
I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be
And thy best graces; spend it at thy will.—
But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind.

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord. I am too much i'th' love.
Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.
Do not, for ever, with thy veiled lids
Seek for thy noble father in the dust:
[die]
Thou know'st, 'tis common; all that live, must Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,
Why seems it so particular with thee? [seems.]

Ham. Seem, madam? I say, it is: I know not
'Tis not alone my ink'd cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,

Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
That can denote me truly: These, indeed, seem,
For they are actions that a man might play;
But I have that within which passeth show;
These, but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:
But, you must know, your father lost a father;
That father lost, lost his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term

To do obsequious sorrow; but to persever
In obstinate condolement, is a fault
Of impious stubbornness: 'tis unmanly grief:
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven;
A heart unfortified, a mind impatient

From. Bernardo hath my place.
Give you good night. (Exit Francisco.)

Mar. Holla! Bernardo! Say.

What, is Horatio there?
Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio; welcome, good Marcellus. (night)

Hor. What, has this thing appear'd again to-
Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says, 'tis but our fantasy;
And will not let belief take hold of him,

Touching this dreaded sight, twice seen of us:
Therefore I have entreated him, along

With us to watch the minutes of this night;
That, if again this apparition come,

He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.
Hor. Tush! tush! 'twill not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile;
And let us once again assail your ears,

'That are so fortified against our story,
'That we two nights have seen

Hor. Well, sit we down,
And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all,
When you came star, that's westward from the pole, (ven)

Had made his course to illume that part of hea-
Where now it burns, Marcellus, and myself.

The bell then beating one.— (comes again:)
Mar. Peace, break these off; look, where it

Enter Ghost.

Ber. In the same figure, like the king that's dead.
Mar. Thou art a scholar, speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio. (wonder.)

Hor. Most like;—it harrows me with fear, and
Mar. It would be spoke to.

Hor. What art thou, that usurp'st this time of
night,

Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark (speak.)

Did sometimes march! by heaven, I charge thee,
Mar. It is offended.

Ber. See! it stalks away.
Hor. Stay; speak; I charge thee, (Exit Ghost.)

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer. (pale:)
Ber. How now, Horatio! you tremble, and look

Is not this something more than fantasy?
What think you of it?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe,
Without the sensible and true avouch

Of mine own eyes.
Mar. Is it not like the king?

Hor. As the art to thyself;
Such was the very armour he had on,

When he the ambitious Norway combated;
So frowned he once, when, in an angry parlie,

He smote the slued Polack on the ice.
'Tis strange. (hour.)

Mar. The third before, and jump at this dead
With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not;

But, in the gross and scope of mine opinion,
'This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows,

Why this same strict and most observant watch
So nightly toils the subject of the land?

And why such daily cast of brizen cannon,
And foreign mart for implements of war?

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sores task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week?

What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day,

Who is't, that can inform me?
That can I;

At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,
Whose image even but now appear'd to us,

Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,
Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride,

Bared to the combat; in which our valiant Hamlet (For so this side of our known world esteems'd him,) (pact.)

Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal'd com-
Well ratified by law, and heraldry,

Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands,
Which he stood seiz'd of, to the conqueror;

Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king; which had return'd

To the inheritance of Fortinbras. (mart.)
Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same co-
And carriage of the article design'd,

His fell to Hamlet: Now, sir, young Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle hot and full,

Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolute,

For food and diet, to some enterprise
That hath a stomach in't; which is no other

(As it doth well appear unto our state),
But to recover of us, by strong hand,

And terms compulsatory, those foresaid lands
So by his father lost: And this, I take it,

Is the main motive of our preparations;
The source of this our watch; and the chief head

Of this post-haste and romage in the land.
Ber. I think, it be no other, but even so:

We'll may it yet, that this portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch; so like the king

That was, and is, the question of these wars.
Hor. A mote it is, to trouble the mind's eye.

In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,

The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

As, stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
Disasters in the sun; and the most star,

Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to dooms-day with eclipses.

And even the like precursors of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,

And prodrome to the oven coming on,—
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated

Unto our climatures and countrymen.—
Re-enter Ghost.

But, soft; behold! lo, where it comes again!
I'll cross it, though it blast me.—Stay, illusion!

If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,
Speak to me:

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,

Speak to me:
If thou art privy to thy country's fate,

Which, happily, foreknowing may avoid,
O, speak!

Or, if thou hast upboared in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,

For which they say, you spirits oft walk in death,
(Cork crosses)

Speak of it!—stay, and speak.—Stop it, Marcellus!
Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partizan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.
Ber. 'Tis here!

Hor. 'Tis here.

Being the time the potion's force should cease.
But he which bore my letter, friar John,
Was staid by accident; and yesternight
Return'd my letter back: 'Then all alone,
At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault;
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo:
But when I came, (some minute ere the time
Of her awakening,) here untimely lay
The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead.
She wakes; and I entreated her come forth,
And hear this work of heaven with patience:
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
But (as it seems) did violence on herself.
All this I know; and to the marriage
Her nurse is privy: And, if sight in this Misanthropy by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrific'd, some hour before his time,
Unto the rigor of everest law. [man.—
Prince. We still have known thee for a holy Where's Romeo's man? what can he say in this?
But I brought my master news of Juliet's death:
And then in post he came from Mantua.
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father;
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.
Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.—
Where is the countess's page, that rais'd the watch?
Serrab, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave;
And bid me stand aloof, and so I did:
Anon, comes one with light to ope the tomb;
And, by and by, my master drew on him;
And then I ran away to call the watch.
Prince. This letter doth make good the friar's
words.
Their course of love, the tidings of her death:
And here he writes—that he did buy a casket
Of a poor 'pothecary, and therewithal
Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.—
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!—
See, what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with And I, for winking at your discords too, [love]
Have lost a brace of kinsmen:—all are punish'd.
Cap. O brother Montague, give me thy hand:
This is my daughter's jointure, for no more
Can I demand.
Mon. But I can give thee more:
For I will raise her statue in pure gold;
That, while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of true and faithful Juliet.
Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity! [brings;
Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it
The sun for sorrow will not show his head:
Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;
Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished:
For never was a story of more woe
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo. [Exeunt

SCENE.—Elsinore.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Elsinore. A Platform before the Castle.

Francisco on his post. Enter to him Bernardo.
Ber. Who's there?
Fran. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold
Yourself.
Ber. Long live the king!
Fran. Bernardo!
Ber. He.
Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour. [Francisco.
Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed,
Fran. For this relief, much thanks: 'tis bitter
And I am sick at heart. [look.
Ber. Have you had quiet guard?
Fran. Not a mouse stirring.
Ber. Well, good night.
If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.
Enter Horatio and Marcellus.
Fran. I think, I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who
Hor. Friends to this ground. [is there?
Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.
Fran. Give you good night.
Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier:
Who hath reliev'd you?

And fearfully did mow me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. [me;]

Fri. Stay then. I'll go alone.—Fear comes upon
O, much I fear some ill unlucky thing.

Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.

Fri. Romeo!—[Advances.
Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre!—
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolored by this place of peace?

[Enters the monument.
Romeo! O, pale!—Who else? what, Paris too?
And steep'd in blood!—Ah, what an unkind hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!—
The lady sighs. [Juliet wakes and stirs.

Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am:—Where is my Romeo?

[Noise within.

Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep; (next
A greater Power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents: come, come away;
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too; come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;
Come, go, good Juliet.—[Noise again.] I dare stay no longer. [Exit.]

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away.—
What's here? a cup, clost'd in my true love's
hand?

Prison. I see, hath been his timeless end:—
O churl! drink all; and leave no friendly drop,
To help me after!—I will kiss thy lips;
Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses him.
Thy lips are warm!

1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy:—Which way?
Jul. Yea, noise!—then I'll be brief.—O happy dagger! [Snatching Romeo's dagger.
This is thy sheath; [Stabs herself:] there rust,
and let me die.

[Falls on Romeo's body, and dies.

Enter Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn.

1 Watch. The ground is bloody; Search about the church-yard:

O, some of you, whose eye you find, attach. [Exit some.]

Pitiful sight! here lies the county slain:—
And Juliet bleeding, warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain these two days buried.—
Go, tell the prince,—run to the Capulets.—
Raise up the Montagues.—some others search:—

[Exit other Watchmen.
We see the ground whereon these woes do lie;
But the true ground of all these piteous woes,
We cannot without circumstance decry.

Enter some of the Watch, with Balthazar.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the church-yard

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come hither.

Enter another Watchman, with Friar Laurence.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps:

We took this mattedock and this spade from him,
As he was coming from this church-yard side.

1 Watch. A great suspicion; Stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up
That calls our person from our morning's rest?

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shrink abroad?

La. Cap. The people in the street cry—Romeo,
Some—Juliet, and some—Paris; and all run,
With open outcry, toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this, which startles in our ears?

1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris
And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before,
Warm and new kill'd

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes. [meo's man:]

1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Ro-
With instruments upon them, fit to open
These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O, heavens!—O, wife! look how our daughter bleeds!

This dagger hath mista'en,—for, lo! his house
Is empty of the buck of Montague,—

And it mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom.

La. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell,
That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter Montague and others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up,
To see thy son and heir more early down.

Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night;
Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath:
What further woe conspires against mine age?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see. [This.]

Mon. O thou untaught! what manners is in
To press before thy father to a grave? [while.]

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a
Till we can clear these ambiguities, [usent,
And know their spring, their head, their true de-
And then will I be general of your woes.
And lead you even to death: Meantime forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience.—
Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least,
Yet most suspected, as the time and place
Doth make against me, of this direful murder;

And here I stand, both to impeach and purge
Myself condemned and myself excus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.

Romeo, before dead, was husband to that Juliet,
And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife:
I married them; and their stolen marriage-day
Was Tybalt's dooms-day, whose untimely death Bann'd the new-made bridegroom from this city;

For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin'd.—
You—to remove that stain of grief from her.—
Betrouth'd, and would have married her perforce,
To county Paris:—Then comes she to me:
And with wild looks, bidd me devise some means
To rid her from this second marriage.

Or, in my cell there would she kill herself.
Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art,
A sleeping potion; which no took effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her
The form of death: meantime I writ to Romeo
That he should hither come on this dire night
To help to lead her from her borrow'd grave,

For Sweet flower, with flowers I strew thy bridal bed:

Sweet tomb, that in thy circuit dost contain
The perfect model of eternity:
Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hands;
That living honour'd thee, and, being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb!

[The Boy whistles.

The boy gives warning, something doth approach.
What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies and true love's rites?
What, with a torch!—muffle me, night, a while.

[Retires.

Enter Romeo and Balthasar, with a torch,
mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron.

Hold, take this letter: early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light: Upon thy life I charge thee,
Whate'er thou hearst or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is, partly, to behold my lady's face:
But, chiefly, to take thence from her dead finger
A precious ring; a ring, that I must use
In dear employment: therefore hence, be gone:—
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint, [limbs]
And strew this hungry church-yard with thy Thee time and my intents are savage-wild;
More fierce, and more inexorable far,
Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shall thou show me friendship.—Take thou that: [low]

Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow!

Bal. For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout;
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt. [Retires.

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou womb of
death,

Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,

[Breaking open the door of the monument.

And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that haughty Montague, That murder'd my love's cousin;—with which
It is supposed, the fair creature died,—

And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.—

[Advances

Stop thy unballov'd toil, vile Montague!
Can vengeance be peruv'd farther than death?
Condemn'd villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I am, indeed; and therefore came I hither.

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man;
Fly hence and leave me;—think upon these gone;

Let them affright thee.—I beseech thee, youth,
Heap not another sin upon thy head.

By asking me to fury:—O, be gone!
By heaven, I love thee better than myself:

For I come hither arm'd against myself:
Stay not, be gone:—live, and hereafter say—

A madman's merry made thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,
And do attack thee as a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then have at thee, boy.

[They fight.

Page. O lord! they fight: I will go call the watch.

[Exit Page.

Par. O, I am slain! [Falls.]—If thou be merciful,

Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.

Rom. In faith, I will:—Let me peruse this face:—

Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris:—
What said my man, when my belov'd soul

Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:

Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,

To think it was so?—O, give me thy hand.
One writ with me in sorrow's misfortune's book!

I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave.—
A grave! O me! a lantern, slaughter'd youth,

For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.

Death, lie thou there, by a dead man interr'd [Laying Paris in the monument.

How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call

A lightning before death: O, how may I
Call this a lightning?—O, my love! my wife!

Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:

Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,

And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—
Tybalt, here thou liest in thy bloody sheet!

O, what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain,

To sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah, dear Juliet,

Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous;

And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour?

For fear of that, I will stay with thee;
And never from this palace of dim night

Depart again: here, here, will I remain
With worms that are thy chamber-maids; O, here

Will I set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars [last]

From this world-weary'd flesh.—Eyes, look your Arms, take your last embrace! and lips, O you

The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engendering death!—

Come, bitter conduct, come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on

The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark!
Here's to my love!—[Drinks.] O true apothecary!

Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies.

Enter, at the other end of the church-yard, Friar
Laurence, with a lantern, cross, and spade.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-
night

Have my feet felt stumbled at graves?—[There!]
Who's that if that comes, so late, the dead?

Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.

Fri. Bless be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond', that vainly lends his light

To grubs and eyeless skulls; as I discern,
It burneth in the Capels' monument.

[ter,
Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master that you love

Fri. Who is it?

Bal. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he been there?

Bal. Full half an hour.

Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, sir.
My master knows not but I am gone hence

I dreamt, my lady came and found me dead;
 (Strange dream! that gives a dead man leave to think.)
 And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
 That I reviv'd, and was an emperor.
 Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess'd,
 When but love's shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter Balthasar.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthasar!
 Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?
 How doth my lady? Is my father well?
 How fares my Juliet? That I ask again;
 For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill:
 Her body sleeps in Capela's monument,
 And her immortal part with angels lives.
 I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault,
 And presently took post to tell it you:
 O pardon me for bringing these ill news,
 Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it even so? then I defy you, stars!—
 Thou know'st my lodging: get me ink and paper,
 And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. Pardon me, sir, I will not leave you thus:
 Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
 Some immediate danger.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiv'd;
 Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do:
 Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.
Rom. No matter: get thee gone.
 And hire those horses; I'll be with thee straight.
Exit Balthasar.

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
 Let's see for means:—O, mischief! thou art swift
 To enter in the thoughts of desperate men!

I do remember an apothecary:
 And hereabouts he dwells,—whom late I noted,
 In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
 Culling of simples; meagre were his looks,
 Sharp misery had worn him to the bones;
 And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
 An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
 Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
 A beggarly account of empty boxes,
 Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
 Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
 Were thinly scatter'd, to make up a show.
 Noting this penury, to myself I said—
 An if a man did need a poison now,
 Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
 Here lives a caltiff wretch would sell it him.
 O, this same thought did but fire-run my need;
 And this same needy man must sell it me.
 As I remember, this should be the house:
 Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.
 What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man.—I see, that thou art poor.

Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have
 A dram of poison; such soon-speeding gear
 As will disperse itself through all the veins,
 That the life-weary taker may fall dead;
 And that the trunk may be discharge'd of breath
 As violently, as hasty powder fir'd
 Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
 Is death, to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,
 And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks,
 Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,

Upon thy back hangs ragged misery.

The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law;
 The world affords no law to make thee rich;
 Then be not poor, but break it, and take that.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
 And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
 Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold; worse poison to men's souls,
 Doing more murders in this loathsome world,
 Than these poor compounds that thou may'st not sell!

I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
 Farewell: buy food, and get thyself in flesh.—
 Come, curial, and not poison: go with me
 To Juliet's grave, for there will I use thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar John.

John. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar Laurence.

Law. This same should be the voice of friar John Welcome from Mantua: What says Romeo?
 Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

John. Going to find a bare-foot brother out,
 One of our order, to associate me,
 Here in this city visiting the sick,
 And finding him, the searchers of the town,
 Suspecting, that we both were in a house
 Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
 Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us forth;
 So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.

Law. Who here my letter then to Romeo?
John. I could not send it,—here it is again,
 Nor get a hessenger to bring it thee,
 So fearful were they of infection.

Law. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
 The letter was not nice, but full of charge,
 Of dear import; and the neglecting it
 May do much danger: Friar John, go hence;
 Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
 Unto my cell.

John. Brother, I'll go and bring it thee. [Exit.]

Law. Now must I to the monument alone.
 Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake;
 She will beshrew me much, that Romeo
 Hath had no notice of these accidents;
 But I will write again to Mantua,
 And keep her at my cell till Romeo come;
 Poor living corse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb!
 [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Church-Yard; in it, a Monument belonging to the Capulets

Enter Paris, and his Page, bearing flowers and a torch.

Par. Give me thy torch, boy: Hence, and stand aloof;—

Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
 Upon yew-trees lay these all alone,
 Holding their ear close to the hollow ground;
 So shall no foot upon the church-yard tread,
 (Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves.)
 But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me,
 As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
 Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
 Here in the church-yard; yet I will adventure.
 [Retires.]

Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.

Accursed time! unfortunate old man!

Nurse. O lamentable day!

La Cap. O woful time!

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail.

Tie up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?

Cap. Ready to go, but never to return:

O son, the night before thy wedding day [lives,

Hath death lain with thy bride:—See there she Flower as she was, deflowered by him.

Death is my son-in-law, death is my heir;

My daughter he hath wedded! I will die,

And leave him all; life leaving, all I death's face,

Fur. Have I thought long to see this morning's

And doth it give me such a suit as this? [dies!

La Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, wretched, hateful

Must miserable hour, that ere time saw

In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!

But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,

But one thus to rejoice and solace in,

And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.

Nurse. O woe! O woful, woful day!

Most lamentable day! most woful day,

That ever, ever, I did yet behold!

O day! O day! O day! O hateful day!

Never was seen so black a day as this:

O woful day, O woful day!

Fur. Beguil'd, divorced, wronged, spited, slain!

Must needs abide death, by these beguil'd,

By cruel cruel thee quite overthrown!

O love! O life!—not life, but love in death!

Cap. Begun'd, distressed, hated, martyr'd,

kill'd!—

Uncomfortable time! why can't thou now

To murder murder our solemnity!—

O child! O child!—my soul, and not my child!—

Dead art thou, dead!—glark! my child is dead!

And with my child, my joys are buried! [not

Fri. Peace, ho, for shame! confusion's cure lives

In these confusions. Heaven and yourself

Had part in this fair maid: now heaven hath all,

And all the better is it for the maid:

Your part in her you could not keep from death:

But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.

The most you might was—her promotion:

For 'twas your heaven, she should be advanc'd:

And weep you now, seeing she is advanc'd?

Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?

O in this love, you love your child as ill!

That you run dead, seeing that she is well:

She's not well married, that lives married long;

But she's best married, that dies married young.

Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary

On this fair corpse; and, as the custom is,

In all her best array bear her to church:

For though fond nature bids us all lament,

Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,

Turn from their office to black funeral:

Our instruments, to melancholy bells;

Our wedding cheer, to a sad funeral feast;

Our solemn hymns, to sullen dirges change;

Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,

And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir, go you in,—and, madam, go with him:—

And go, sir Paris;—every one prepare

To follow this fair corpse unto her grave:

I've heavens do low'r upon you, for none ill!

Save them no more, by crossing their high will.

[Exeunt Capulet, Lady Capulet, Paris,

and Friar.

1 Mus. 'Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.

Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah, put up, put up, For, well you know, this is a pitiful case.

[Exit Nurse.

1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Musicians, O, musicians, Heart's case, heart's case; O, an you will have me live, play—heart's case.

1 Mus. Why heart's case?

Pet. O musician, because my heart itself plays—My heart is full of tocs; O play me some merry dump, to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we; 'tis no time to play now.

3 Mus. You will not then?

Pet. No.

Pet. I will then give it you soundly.

1 Mus. What will you give us?

Pet. No money, on my faith; but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then will I give you the serving-men's tales.

Pet. Then I will lay the serving creature's dagger on your pate: I will carry no crutchlets: I'll re you, I'll fa you; do you note me?

1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

2 Mus. Tray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. Then have at you with my wit; I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger:—Answer me like men;

When gripping grief the heart doth wound,

And doleful dumps the mind oppresses,

Then music, with her silver sound,

'Why silver sound? why music with her silver sound? What say you, Simon Catling?

1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Pet. Pretty! What say you, Hugh Rebek?

2 Mus. I say—silver sound, because musicians sound for silver.

Pet. Pretty too! What say you, James Sound-

put?

3 Mus. 'Faith, I know not what to say.

Pet. O, I cry you mercy! you are the singer: I will say for you. It is—music with her silver sound, because such fellows as you have seldom gold for sounding:—

Then music, with her silver sound,

With speedy help doth lend redress.

[Exit, anyone.

1 Mus. What a pestilent knave is this same!

2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll in here;

tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Mantua. A Street.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering eye of sleep,

My dreams presage some joyful news at hand:

My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;

And all this day, an untruss'd and wild spirit

Like me, have waded through the ground with

So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you;
For, I am sure, you have your hands full all
In this sudden business.

La. Cap. Good night!
Get thee to bed, and rest: for thou hast need.

[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.]

Jul. Farewell!—God knows, when we shall meet again.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me:—
Nurse!—What should she do here?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone.—
Come phial—

What if this mixture do not work at all?
Must I of force be married to the County?
No, no:—this shall forbid it:—lie thou there—
[Laying down a dagger.]

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead;
Lost in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I fear, it is: and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man:
I will not entertain so bad a thought—
Haw if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Comes to redeem me: there's a fearful point!
Shall I not then be stilled in the vault,
To witness foul mouth on heathenous air breathes in.

And there the strangled ere my Romeo comes!
Or, if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,—
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies festering in his shroud; where, as they say,
At some hours in the night spirits resort;—
Alack, alack! is it not like, that I,
So early waking, what with loathsome smells;
And shrieks like mandrakes' torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad;—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environed with all these hideous fears?
And madly play with my forefathers' joints?
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?
O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point:—Stay, Tybalt! stay!
Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the bed.]

SCENE IV.—Capulet's Hall.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pantry.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd.

This carfeu bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock:—
Look to the hark'd nests, good Angelina:
Spare not for cost.

Nurse. Go, go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed; 'faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.

Cap. No, not a whit; What! I have watch'd ere
now

All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time;

But I will watch you from such watchings now.

[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.]

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!—Now
What's there?

Enter Servants, with spits, logs, and baskets.

1 Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what.

Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 Serv.]
Sirrah, fetch drier kure.

Call Peter, he will show thee where they are.

2 Serv. I have a ladder, that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit.]

Cap. 'Mum, and well said: a merry whoreson!
ha!

Thou shalt be longer-head.—Good faith, 'tis day:
The county will be here with musick straight.

[Musick within.]

For so he said he would. I hear him near:—

Nurse!—Wife!—what, ho!—what, nurse, I say!

Enter Nurse.

O, waken Juliet, go, and trim her up;
I'll go and chat with Paris:—Hie, make haste,
Make haste! the bridegroom he is come already:
Make haste, I say. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber; Juliet on the Bed.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress!—what, mistress!—Juliet!—

fast, I warrant her, she—

Why, lamb!—why, lady!—fy, you slug-a-bed!

Why, love, I say!—madam! a sweet-heart!—why, bride!—[Now:]

What, not a word!—you take your pennyworths

Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,

The county Paris hath set up his rest,

That you shall rest but little.—God forgive me,

[Marry and amon!] how sound is she asleep!

I needs must wake her:—Madam, madam, madam!

Ay, let the county take you in your bed;

He'll fright you up, 'faith.—Will it not be?

What, drest! and in your clothes! and down

again!

I must needs wake you: Lady! lady! lady!

Alas! alas!—Help! help! my lady's dead!

O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!

Some aqua-vitæ, ho!—my lord! my lady!

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What noise is here?

Nurse. O lamentable day!

La. Cap. What is the matter?

Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!

La. Cap. O me, O me!—my child, my only life.

Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!

Help, help!—call help.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is
come.

Nurse. She's dead, deceas'd, she's dead, alack
the day!

La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead, she's dead. [Cried:]

Cap. Ha! let me see her:—Out, alas! she's dead.

Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;

Life and these lips have long been separated;

Death lies on her, like an untimely frost

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
 Shall be the label to another deed.
 Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
 Turn to against thee, this shall slay them both:
 Therefore, out of this long-experienc'd time,
 Give me some present counsel: or, behold,
 'Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife
 Shall play the umpire: arbitrating that
 Which the commission of your years and art
 Could to no issue of true honour bring.
 Be not so long to speak; I long to die,
 If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

Fri. Hold, daughter: I do spy a kind of hope,
 Which craves as desperate an execution
 As that is desperate which we would prevent.
 If, rather than to marry county Paris,
 Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself;
 Then is it likely, thou wilt undertake
 A thing like death to chide away this shame,
 That cap'st with death himself to scape from it:
 And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O, had me leap, rather than marry Paris,
 From off the battlements of yonder tower;
 Or walk in thievish ways; or bid me lurk
 Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears;
 Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
 O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
 With reeky shanks, and yellow chapless skulls;
 Or bid me go into a new-made grave,
 And hide me with a dead man in his shroud:
 Things that, to hear them told, have made me tremble.

And I will do it without fear or doubt,
 To live an uncertain while in my sweet love.
Fri. Hold, then. In haste, he merry, give consent
 To marry Paris: Wednesday is to-morrow;
 To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,
 Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:
 Take thou this plan, being then in bed,
 And this distilled liquor drink thou off:

When presently through all thy veins shall run
 A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize Each vital spark: for no pulse shall keep
 His natural progress, but surcease to beat:
 No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou liv'st:
 The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
 To pale ashes; thy eyes' windows fall,
 Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
 Each part, depriv'd of supple government,
 Shall stiff, and stark, and cold, appear like death:
 And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death
 Thou shalt remain full two and forty hours,
 And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.

Now when the bridegroom in the morning comes
 To raise thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
 Then (as the manner of our country is),
 In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,
 Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
 Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
 In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,
 Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift;
 And hither shall he come; and he and I
 Will watch thy waking, and that very night
 Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.

And this shall free thee from this present shame,
 If no encounter meet us, nor womanish fear,
 Abate thy valor in the action it.

Jul. Give me, O give me! tell me not of fear.
Fri. Hold; get you gone, be strong and prosperous
 In this resolve: I'll send a friar with speed
 To Mantua, with my letters to his lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength! and strength shall help afford.
 Farewell, dear father.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, Nurse, and Servants.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ —
 [Exit Servant.]

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.
2 Ser. You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou try them so?
2 Ser. Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he, that cannot lick his fingers, goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone. — [Exit Servant.]

We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time.
Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on
 A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

Enter Juliet.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shrift with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong? where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the sin
 Of disobedient opposition

To you, and your behests; and am enjoin'd
 By holy Laurence to full procure here
 And beg your pardon: — Parlor, I beseech you!

Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the county; go tell him of this:
 I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;
 And gave him what becom'd love I might,
 Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on't; this is well, — stand
 This is as't should be. — Let me see the county:

Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither. —
 Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,
 All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,
 To help me sort such needful ornaments
 As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her: — we'll to church to-morrow. [Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.]

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision:
 'Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush! I will stir about,
 And all things shall be well. I warrant thee, wife:
 Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her:

I'll not to bed to-night: — let me alone:
 I'll play the housewife for this once. — What, ho? —
 They are all forth: — Well, I will walk myself
 To county Paris, to prepare him up Against to-morrow: my heart is wond'rous light,
 Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — Juliet's Chamber.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best: — Pray gentle nurse,
 I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night;

For I have need of many orisons
 To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
 Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

[Exit Nurse.]

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What, are you busy? do you need my help?

Jul. No, madam; we have cuff'd such necessities
 As are behoveful for our state to-morrow.

Waking, or sleeping, still my care hath been
To have her match'd: and having now provided
A gentleman of princely parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,
Staff'd (as they say) with honourable parts,
Proportion'd as one's heart could wish a man,—
And then to have a wretched pining fool,
A whining maimet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer—I'll not wed.—I cannot love,
I am too young.—I pray you, pardon me;—
But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you: [me:
Grazed where you will, you shall not house with
Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is near: lay hand on heart, advise:
An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die i' the streets.

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good:
Trust to't, bethink you, I'll not be forsworn.

[Exit.]

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds
That sees into the bottom of my grief?
O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!
Delay this marriage for a month, a week;
Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.

[Exit.]

Jul. O God!—O nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth?—comfort me, counsel me.—
Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as myself!— [comes
What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse. 'Faith, here 'tis: Romeo
Is banished; and all the world to nothing.
That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;
Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since the case so stands us now it doth,
I think it best you married with the county.
O, he's a lovely gentleman!
Romeo's a dainty count to him; an eagle, maulam,
Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye,
As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,
I think you are happy in this second match,
For it exceeds your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead; or 'twere as good he were,
As living here and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nurse. From my soul too: My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Or else beshrew them both.

Jul.

Nurse.

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.

Go in; and tell my lady I am gone.
Having disclaim'd my father, to Laurence's cell,
To make confession, and to be absolv'd.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done.

[Exit.]

Jul. Ancient damnation! O most wicked fiend!
Is it more sin—to wish me thus forsworn,
Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue
Which she hath prais'd him with above compare
So many thousand times?—Go, counsellor;
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.—
I'll to the friar, to know his remedy;
If all else fail, myself have power to die. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris.

Fri. On Thursday, sir! the time is very short
For My father Capulet will have it so;
And I am nothing slow, to slack his haste.

Fri. You say, you do not know the lady's mind;

Uneven is the course, I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's
death.

And therefore have I little talk'd of love;

For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous;

That she doth give her sorrow so much away;

And, in his wisdom, hastes our marriage;

To stop the inundation of her tears.

Which, too much minded by herself alone,

May be put from her by society:

Now do you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife!

Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Par. That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?

Jul. To answer that, were to confess to you.

Par. I do not deny to him, that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you, that I love him.

Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,

Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd with tears.

Jul. The tears have got small victory by that.

For it was bad enough, before their spite.

Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that report.

Jul. That is no slander, sir, that is a truth;

And what I spake, I spake it to my face. [R.]

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd
me.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now?

Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

Fri. My leisure serves me, penance daughter,
now:—

My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Par. God shield! I should disturb devotion.

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you:

Till then, adieu! and keep this holy kiss.

[Exit Paris.]

Jul. O, shut the door! and when thou hast done so,

Come weep with me: Past hope, past cure, past
help!

Fri. Ah, Juliet, I already know thy grief;

It strains me past the compass of my wits:

I hear thou must, and nothing must prologue it,
On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hear'st of this.

Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it:

If, in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,

Do thou but call my resolution woe,

And with this knife I'll help it presently.

God joined my heart and Romeo's, thus our hands

Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee
Fickle:

If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renowned for faith? Be fickle, fortune:
For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long,
But send him back.

La. Cap. [Witness.] Ho, daughter! are you up?

Jul. When is't that call? Is it my lady mother?
Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What uncus'd custom'd cause procures her hither?

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?

Jul. Madam, I am not well.

La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's
death?

What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears? [live;]

As if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him
Therefore, have done: Soon grief shows love:
But some of grief shows still some want of wit.

Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.

La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the
Which you weep for. [friend]

Jul. Feeling as the loss,
I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.

La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death.

As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.

Jul. What villain, madam?

La. Cap. That same villain, Romeo.

Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder,
God pardon him! I do, with all my heart;
And yet no man, like he, doth grieve my heart.

La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.

Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands. [death]

Would, now but I might venge my cousin's
La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not.

Then weep no more: I'll send to one in Mantua
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,—
That shall besow on him so sure a draught,
That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:

And then I hope thou wilt be satisfied.

Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd:—
Madam, if you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it:—

That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet.—O, how my heart abhors
To hear him nam'd,—and cannot come to him,—
To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him!

La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl. [one;]

Jul. And joy comes well in such a needful
What are they, I beseech your ladyship?

La. Cap. Well, thou hast a careful father, child.

One who to put thee from thy heaviness,
Has sorted out a sudden day of joy,
That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.

Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is that?

La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn,

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The County Paris, at St. Peter's church,
Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by St. Peter's church, and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a joyful bride.
I wonder at this haste; that I must wed

Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.
I pray you tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I swear,
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate.

Rather than Paris:—These are news indeed!

La. Cap. Here comes your father; tell him so yourself.

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle
But for the sunset of my brother's son. [dew;]
It rains downright.—

How now? a conduit, girl? what, still in tears?
Evermore showering? In a little while
Thou counterfeint'st a bark, a sea, a wind:

For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,
Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,
Selling in this salt flood; the winds thy sighs;

Who,—raging with thy tears, and they with
Without a sudden calm, will overset [them;—]
Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife?

Have you deliver'd to her our decree?

La. Cap. Ay, sir: but she will none, she gives you thanks.

I would the fool were married to her grave!

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you, wife.

How! will she give? I doth see she not give us thanks!
Is she not proud? doth she not count her blessing?
Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have;

Proud can I never be of what I hate;
But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Cap. How now! how now, chop-logic! What is this? [not;—]

Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you
And yet not proud:—Mistress mince, you
Thank me no thanks: nor proud me no prouds,
But settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
To go with Paris to St. Peter's church.

Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you hag!
You tallow face! [rage;]

La. Cap. Fye, fye! what, are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient
wretch!

I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thursday
Or never after look me in the face:
Speak not, reply not, do not answer me;
My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us
blest'd.

That God had sent us but this one child;
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her;
Out on her, hilding!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!—
You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom! I hold your tongue.

Good prudence; smatter with your gossips, go.
Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O, God ye good den!

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap. Peace, you mumping fool!
Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need it not.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad. Day night, late, early,

At home, abroad, alone, in company,

Romeo.—Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend.

ROMEO AND JULIET, Act III., Scene v.

803

Happiness courts thee in her best array;
 But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
 Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love:
 Take heed, take heed, for such a miserable
 Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
 Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;
 But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set,
 For thou dost cause not pass to Mantua;
 Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time
 To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
 Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
 With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
 Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.—
 Go, before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;
 And bid her hasten all the house to bed.
 Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
 Romeo is coming. [Night,
 Nurse. O Lord, I could have staid here all the
 To hear good counsel: O, what learning is—
 My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.
 Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.
 Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir:
 Hee you, make haste, for it grows very late.

[Exit Nurse.]

Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this!
 Fri. Go hence: Good night; and here stands
 all your state;
 Either before the watch be set,
 Or by the break of day disguis'd from hence:
 Sojourn in Mantua: I'll find out your man,
 And he shall signify from time to time
 Every good hap to you, that chances here:
 Give me thy hand: 'tis late: farewell; good night.
 Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me,
 It were a grief so brief with thee:
 Farewell. [Exit Fri.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and Paris.
 Cap. Things have fallen out, sir, so unluckily,
 That we have had no time to move our daughter:
 Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
 And so did I:—Well: we were born to die—
 'Tis very late, she'll not come down to-night:
 I promise you, but for your company,
 I would have been a-bed an hour ago.
 Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo;
 Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.
 La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow.
 To-night she's new'd up to her heaviness.
 Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
 Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
 In all respects by me; nay more, I doubt it not.
 Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed:
 Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love;
 And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
 But, soft: What day is this?

Par. Monday, my lord.
 Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon.
 O' Thursday let it be:—O' Thursday, tell her,
 She shall be married to this noble earl:—
 Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
 We'll keep no great ado;—a friend, or two:—
 For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
 It may be thought we held him carelessly,
 Being our kinsman, if we revel much:
 Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,
 And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?
 Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.
 Cap. Well, set you gone:—O' Thursday be it
 Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,

Prepare her, wife, against that wedding-day—
 Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho!
 May call it, it is so very late, that we Afford me it early by and by:—Good night.

[Exit Romeo.]

SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber.

Enter Romeo and Juliet.

Jul. Will thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
 It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
 That pierc'd the fearful hollow of thine ear;
 Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree:
 Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.
 Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
 No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
 Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
 Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
 Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops:
 I must be gone and live, or stay and die.
 Jul. You light is not day-light, I know it, I:
 It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
 To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
 And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
 Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
 I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
 I'll say, yon grey is not the morn's eye,
 'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;
 Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
 The vaulty heaven so high above our heads:
 I have more care to stay than will to go:—
 Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—
 How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is, he hence, he goes, away;
 It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
 Straining harsh discords, and unpleasing sharps.
 Some say, the lark makes sweet division;
 This doth not so, for she doth sing
 Some say, the lark and louch'd tend chaste eyes,
 O, now I would they had chain'd voices too:
 Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
 Hunting thence hence with hunts-up to the day.
 O, now be gone: more light and light it grows.
 Rom. More light and light!—more dark and dark our woes.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam!
 Jul. Nurse!
 Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to you:
 'The day is broke; be wary, look about!'
 Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.
 Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend. [Romeo descends.]
 Jul. Art thou gone so? my love! my lord! my friend!

I must hear from thee every day in the hour,
 For in a minute there are many days:
 O! by this count I shall be much in years.
 Ere I again behold my Romeo!
 Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
 That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
 Jul. O, think'st thou, we shall ever meet again?
 Rom. I doubt it not; and all those woes shall serve

For sweet discourses in our time to come.
 Jul. O God! I have an ill-divining soul:
 Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,
 As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
 Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.
 Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:
 Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu! adieu!
 [Exit Romeo.]

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,
But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence banished is banish'd from the world,
And world's exile is death:—then banishment
Is death's term'd: calling death—banishment,
Thou cutt'st my head off with a golden axe,
And smit'st upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,
Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banishment:
This is dear mercy, and thou see'st it not.

Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is here,

Where Juliet lives; and every cat, and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven and may look on her,
But Romeo may not. More validity,
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's nose,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips:
Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisses sin;
But Romeo may not: he is banished:
Flies may do this, when I from this must fly:
They are free men, but I am banished.
And say'st thou yet, that exile is not death?
Hadst thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-ground
knife,

No sudden me in of death, though ne'er so mean,
But—banished—to kill me?—banished!

O friar, the damned use that word in hell;
Howlings attend it: how hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a gently confessour,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd,
To mangle me with that word—banishment?

Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.

Rom. O, thou wilt speak again of banishment.
Fri. I'll give thee armour to keep off that word;
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy!

To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished!—Hang up philosophy!
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Down-take a town, reverse a prince's doom;
It helps not, it prevails not, talk no more.

Fri. O, then I see that nailmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.

Rom. Thou canst not speak of what thou dost not feel:

Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
As hour by married, Tybalt murdered,
Daring like me, and like me banished,
Then night's talk, thou speak'st, then might'st thou speak thy hair.

And fall upon the sward, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Fri. Arise; one knocks: good Romeo, hide thyself. [Knocking within]

Rom. Not I; unless the breath of heart-sick graves.

Must-like, inلود me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—Who's there?—
Romeo, arise.

Thou wilt be taken.—Stay awhile.—stand up;
[Knocking]

Rom. to my study:—By and by.—God's will!
What wisdom's in this?—I come, I come.

[Knocking]
Who knocks so hard; whence come you; what's your will?

Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand;
I come from lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar,

Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress' case,
Just in her case!

Fri. O woeful sympathy!
Piteous predicament!

Nurse. Even so lies she.
Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubber-
ing:—

Stand up, stand up; stand, as you be a man;
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;

Why should you fall into so deep an O?

Rom. Nurse!

Nurse. Ah, sir!—Well, death's the end.
Rom. Speak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?

Doth she not think me an old murderer?
Now I have stain'd the childhood of my joy

With blood remov'd but little from her own?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what says
My conceal'd lady to our cancell'd love?

Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;

And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then down falls again.

As if that name,
Rom. Shut from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murder'd her kinsman.—O tell me, friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth my name lodge? tell me that I may sack
The hateful mansion. [Draws his sword.]

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:

Art thou a man? thy form cries out thou art;
Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast:

Unseemly woman, in a seeming man!
Or ill-beseeming beast, in seeming both!

Thou hast amaz'd me: by my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.

Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself?
And slay thy lady too that lives in thee,
By doing damned hate upon thyself?

Why rail'st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth? [meet]

Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do in thee at once; which thou at once wouldst lose.

Pre, five! thou shalt not slay thy love, thy wit;
Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
And usest none in that true use indeed.

Which should beget thy shape, thy love, thy wit.
Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Degrass'd from the value of a man:

Thy dear love, sworn, not hollow perjury,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Mis-shapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,
Is set on fire by thine own ignorance,

And thou dost dimmer'st it with thine own defence.
What, nurse thee, man! thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;

There art thou happy. Tybalt would kill thee.
But thou slewest Tybalt: there art thou happy too.

The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend,
And turns it to exile: there art thou happy.

A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;

Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there?
the cords.

That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse.

Ay, ay, the cords.

Jul. Ah me! what news! why dost thou wring thy hands?

Nurse. Ah well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's
We are undone, lady we are undone!—
Alack the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead!

Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse.

Though heaven cannot;—O Romeo, Romeo!—
Who ever would have thought it?—Romeo!

Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me
thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.

Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I,

And that late vowel I shall poison more

Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice:

I am not I, if there be such an I;

Or those eyes shut, that make thee answer, I,

If he be slain, say—I; or if not, no:

Brief sounds determine of my weal, or woe

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine

eyes.—

God save the mark!—here on his manly breast:

A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;

Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,

All in gore blood—I swooned at the sight.

Jul. O break, my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once!

To prison, eyes! ne'er look on liberty!

Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here;

And thou and Romeo, press one heavy bier!

Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had!

O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!

That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this, that blows so contrary?

Is Romeo slaughter'd, and is Tybalt dead?

My dear lord's cousin, and my dear lord!

Then dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom!

For who is living, if these two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd;

Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd.

Jul. O God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's?

Nurse. It did, it did, alas the day! it did.

Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a bowing face!

Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?

Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical!

Dove-feather'd raven! volkish-ravens lamb!

Despised substance of divinest show!

Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st,

A damned saint, an honourable villain!

O, nature! what hadst thou to do in hell,

When thou did'st bow the spirit of a fiend

In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,

So fairly bound? O, that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous palace!

Nurse.

There's no trust,

No faith, no honesty in men; all perjur'd,

All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.—

Ah, where's my man? I give you some news wise!

These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me

old

Shame come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue,

For such a wish! he was not born to shame:

Upon his brow shame is ashamed to sit;

For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd

Sole monarch of the universal earth.

O, what a beast was I to chide at him!

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?
Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth thy
name,

When I, thy three-hours' wife, have mangled it?

But, wherefore, villain, dost thou kill my cousin?

That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband:

Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring;

Your tributary drops belong to woe.

Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.

My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain;

And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my husband:

All this is comfort: Wherefore weep I then?

Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's death,

That murder'd me: I would forget it fain;

But, O, it presses to my memory,

Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds!

Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banish'd.

That—banish'd, that one word—banish'd.

Hath slain ten thousand Tybalts. Tybalt's death—

Was woe enough, if it had ended there:

Or,—if our woes delights in fellowship,

And needly will be rank'd with other griefs,—

Why follow'd not, when she said—Tybalt's dead,

Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,

Which modern lamentation might have mov'd?

But, with a rare-ward following Tybalt's death,

Romeo is banish'd.—to speak that word,

Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,

All slain, all dead!—Romeo is banish'd.—

There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,

In that word's death; no words can that woe

sound—

Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?

Nurse. Weeping and waiting over Tybalt's corse:

Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears? mine shall be spent.

When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.

Take up these cords:—Poor ropes, you are be-guil'd,

Both you and I: for Romeo is exil'd:

He made you for a highway to my bed,

But I, a maid, die maiden-widowed.

Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wedding

And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead!

Nurse. Hie to your chamber: I'll find Romeo

To comfort you:—I wot well where he is.

Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night;

I'll to him: he is hid at Laurence's cell.

Jul. O find him! give this ring to my true knight,

And bid him come to take his last farewell.

[Exeunt]

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo, come forth: come forth, thou fearful man:

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts

And thou art wedded to calamity.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,

That I yet know not?

Fri. Two familiar

Is my dear son with such sour company:

I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince's?

Fri. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his lips,

Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha! banishment! he merciful, say—death:

For exile hath more terror in his look,

Much more than death: do not say—banishment.

Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banish'd

Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Hadst been my kinsman: O sweet Juliet,
Thy beauty hath made me effeminate,
And in my temper soften'd valour's steel.

Re-enter Benvolio

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead;
That pallid spirit hath aspir'd the clouds,
Which turn untimely here do scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend;

This but begins the woe, others must end.

Re-enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.
Rom. Alas! in triumph! and Mercutio slain!
Away to heaven, respective lenity,
And fire-my fury be my conduct now!—

Now, Tybalt, take the murther back again,
That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul
Is but a little way above our heads,
Staying for time to keep him company;

Exeunt thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here,

Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that.
(They fight; Tybalt falls.)

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone!
The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:—

Stand not amaz'd:—the prince will doom thee
death.

If thou art taken:—hence!—he gone!—away!

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool!

Ben. Why dost thou stay?
(Exit Romeo.)

Enter Citizens, &c.

1 Cit. Which way ran he, that kill'd Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 Cit. Up, sir, go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; Montague, Capulet, their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?
Ben. O noble Prince, I can discover all
The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl:

There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O my brother's child!

Unhappy night! ah me, the blood is spill'd
Of my dear kinsman!—Prince, as thou art true,
For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.

O. Cap. O cousin!
Prin. Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay;

Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bethink
How nice the quarrel was, and urg'd withal
Your high displeasure:—All this—uttered
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bow'd,—

Could not take truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace, but that he tilts
With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast;

Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,
And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity Retorts it:—Romeo he cries aloud, (Montague.
Hold, friends! friends, part!) and swifter than his
His agile arm beats down their fatal points,
And 'twixt their rushes underneath whose arm

An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fell:

But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertain'd revenge,
And to't they go like lightning; for, ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain;

And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly:
This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

La. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague.
Affection makes him false; he speaks not true:

Some twenty of them fought in this black strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life:

I beseech for justice, which thou, prince, must give;
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio;
Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe!

Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's
friend.

His fault concludes but what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And, for that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence:

I have an interest in your hate's proceeding,
My blood for your rude brawls doth lie a bleeding;

But I'll amerce you with as strong a fine
That you shall all repent the loss of mine:

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears, nor prayers, shall purchase out abuses;

Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste,
Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.

Bear hence this body, and attend our will:
Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.

(Exeunt.)

SCENE II.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. Gallop away, you fiery-footed steeds,
Toward Phœbus' mansion: such a waggoner
As Phoebus would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediate:—

Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
That run-aways' eyes may wink; and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!—

Lovers can see to do their amorous rites
By their own beauties: or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night.—Come, civil night,

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to kisse a winning man's cheek,
Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenhoods:

Hood my unmann'd blood bating in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle: till strange love, grown bold,

Think true love acted simple modesty. (night!)
Come, night!—Come, Romeo! come, thou day in
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow on a raven's back.—

Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd
night,

Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun

O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it; and, though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival

To an impatient child, that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with cords.

And she brings news; and every tongue that speaks

But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.—

This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagin'd happiness that both
Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit, more rich in matter than in words,
Brags of his substance, not of ornament:
They are but beggars that can count their worth;
But my true love is grown to such excess,
I cannot sum up half my sum of wealth.

Fri. Come, come, with me, and we will make short work;

For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy church incorporate two in one.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A publick Place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Paris, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire:
The day is hot, the Capulets abroad;
And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl;
For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellows that, when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, God send me no need of thee! and, by the operation of the second cup, draws it on the draw, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, in there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other.
Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes: What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg, for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old ribband?
and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling!

Ben. Am I were an apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple? O simple.

Enter Tybalt, and others.

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them.
Gentlemen, good den: a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? I couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that, sir,
if you will give me occasion.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort'st with Romeo —
Mer. Consort? what, dost thou make us minstrels!
an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick;
here's that shall make you dance. Zounds, consort!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men:
Either withdraw into some private place,
Or reason coldly of your grievances,
Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze:
I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir! here comes my man.

Mer. But I'll be hanged, sir, if he wear your Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower;
Your worship, in that sense, may call him,—man.

Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee can afford
No better term than this—Thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage: [Toe,
To such a greeting—Villain am I none;
Therefore, farewell; I see thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me; therefore turn and draw. I do protest, I never injured thee: [draw.
But love thee better than thou canst devise.
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love:
And an, good Capulet,—which name I tender
As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.

Mer. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!
A le steccato carries it away.

Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk? [Draws.
Tyb. What would'st thou with me?

Mer. Good king of cats, nothing, but one of your nine lives, that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-hat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come sir, your passado. [To fight.
Rom. Draw, Benvolio:—Gentlemen, for bear down their weapons:—Mercutio—
Furbear this outrage:—Tybalt—Mercutio—
The prince expressly hath forbid this bandying
In Verona streets:—hold, Tybalt:—good Mer-cutio. [Exeunt Tybalt and his partisans.

Mer. I am hurt:—

A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:
Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What, art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 'tis enough:—

Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a surgeon.

[Exit Page.]

Rom. Courage, man: the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve:
ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world:—A plague o' both your houses!—Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death!—a braggar, a rogue, a villain, that fights
by the book of arithmetic!—Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio,
Or I shall faint.—A plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms' meat of me:
I have it, and soundly too.—Your houses!

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.]

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally,
My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt
In my behalf; my reputation stain'd
With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour thrust.—O, there's a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain lay knife aboard; but she, good soul, had as lieve see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man; but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any cloot in the varml world. Dost not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. Ay, nurse: What of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mocker! that's the dog's name. R. is for the dog. No: I know it begins with some other letter: and she hath the prettiest sentences of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Commend me to thy lady. [Exit.

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times. Peter!

Pet. Anno!

Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Capulet's Garden.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send the nurse;

in half an hour she did promise to return. Perchance she cannot meet him:—that's not so.—O, she is lame! love's herakles should be thoughts.

Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams. Driving back shadows over low'ring hills:

And therefore do humble-pinkin'd doves draw love. And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Now is the sun upon the highmost hill. Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve is three long hours,—yet she is not come.

Had she affection, and warm youthful blood, She'd be as swift in motion as a ball;

My words would bandy her to my sweet love, And take me to me:

But old folks, may feign as they were dead; Unweildy, slow, heavy and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse and Peter.

O God, she comes!—O honey nurse, what news! Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit Peter.

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O lord! why look'st thou sad?

Through news be sad, yet tell them merrily; If good, thou shalt be the music of sweet news. By playing it to me with so sweet a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave awhile:—Fye, how my bones ache! What a jaunt have I had!

Jul. I would, thou hadst my bones, and I thy May come. I pray thee, speak:—good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Jemu, what haste! can you not stay? Do you not see, that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath?

To say to me,—that thou art out of breath? The excuse, that thou dost make in this delay, is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.

Is thy news good or bad? I answer to that: Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance: Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his legs are as ill as a man's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare: He is not the flower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Go thy ways, wench; serve God.—What, have you din'd at home?

Jul. No, no: But all this did I know before. What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces. My back o' Cother side.—O, my back, my back!

Bestrew your heart, for sealing me about. To catch my death with jaunting up and down!

Jul. Faith, I am sorry that thou art not well: Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman, And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, And, I warrant, a virtuous: Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother!—why, she is within; Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest!

Your love says like an honest gentleman,—Where is your mother?

Nurse. O, God's lady dear! Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;

Is this the poulitice for my aching bones? Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a coil,—Come, what says Romeo?

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shrieve to-day?

Jul. I have.

Nurse. Then hie you hence to friar Laurence: There stays a husband to make you a wife:

Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks, They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.

Hie you to church: I must another way, To fetch a ladder, by the which your love Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark:

I am the drudge, and tell in your delight: But you shall bear the burden soon at night.

Go, 'till I dinner; hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune!—honest nurse, farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act, That after-hours with sorrow chide us not!

Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can, It cannot countervail the exchange of joy.

That one short minute gives me in her sight: Do thou but close our hands with holy words, Then love-devouring death do what he dare, It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends, And in their triumph die: like fire and powder, Which, as they kiss, consume: The sweetest honey

Is loathsome in his own deliciousness, And in the taste confounds the appetite: Therefore, love moderately: long love doth so: Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the lady:—O, so light a foot Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:

A lover may bestride the gossamer, That idles in the wanton summer air, And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else are his thanks too soon.

Rom. Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be more To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a natch.

Mer. Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than, I am sure, I have in my whole five: Was I with you there for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast never with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very little sweeting; it is a most sharp penance.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O, here's a wit of cheverel, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad: which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sensible, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature; for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lulling up and down to hide his bawble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.

Ben. Thou would'st else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O, thou art deceived, I would have made it short; for I was come to the whole depth of my tale; and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly gear!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Mer. A sail, a sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt, and a smock.

Nurse. Peter!

Peter. Anou!

Nurse. My fan, Peter.

Mer. Prythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den, fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. 'Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you!

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said;—For himself to mar, quoth'st?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him:—I am the youngest of that name, for 'fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yea, is the worst well? very well took, I'faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will indite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, sir, unless a hare, sir in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

*An old hare hoar,
And an old hare hoar*

Is very good meat to him:

*But a hare that is hoar,
Is too much for a sower,
When it hoars ere it be spent.—*

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady; farewell, lady, lady, lady.

(Exit Mercutio and Benvolio)
Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery?

Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down an 'a were tustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find three that shall. Scoury knave! I am none of his fustills; I am none of his skains-mates:—And thou must stand by too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure?

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure: if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you: I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scoury knave!—Pray you, sir, a word; and as I told you, my young lady had me inquire you out: what she bade me say, I will keep to myself; but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say; for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very weak dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee,— Nurse. Good heart! and, I'faith, I will tell her as much: Lord, lord, she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come to this afternoon;—

And there she shall at friar Laurence's cell
Be shriv'd, and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to; I any, you shall.

Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey—Within this hour my man shall be with thee;

And bring thee combs made like a tickled stair:
Which to the hush top-gallant of my joy

Must be my convoy in the secret night.
Farewell!—Be trusty, and I'll quit thy pains.

Farewell!—Commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now God in heaven bless thee!—Hark you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say—

Two may keep counsel, putting one away?
Rom. I warrant thee; my man's as true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady—Lord, lord!—when 'twas a little prying

Or if not so, then here I hit it right—

Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. Good pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father! no;

I have forgot that name, and that name's woe.

Fri. That's my good son: But where hast thou been then?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.

I have been sometimes with mine enemy;

Where, on a sudden, one hath wounded me,

That's by me wounded; both our reasons

Within thy help and holy physick lies:

I bear no hatred, blessed man; for lo,

My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;

Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is set

On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:

As mine on her's, so her's is set on mine;

And all combin'd, save what thou must combine

By holy marriage: When, and where, and how,

We meet, we woo'd, and made exchange of vow,

I'll tell thee as we pass; but thus I pray,

That thou consent to marry us this day.

Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is here!

In Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,

So soon forsaken! young men's love's as thin

Not truly in their hearts, but on their eyes.

Jen. Mercutio! what a deal of bruis

Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!

How much salt water thrown away in waste,

To season love, that of it doth not taste!

The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,

Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;

Lo, here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit

Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet:

If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,

Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline;

And art thou chang'd! I pronounce this sentence

Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And had'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,

To lay one in, another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she, whom I love so,

Deth grace for grace, and love for love allow;

The other did not so. O, she knew well,

Fri. Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.

But come, young waverer, come go with me,

In one respect I'll thy assistant be;

For this alliance may so happy prove,

To turn your households' rancour to pure love.

Rom. O, let us hence; I stand on sudden

haste.

Fri. Wisely, and slow; They stumble, that run fast. (Exeunt.)

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?— Come he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father's; I spoke with his

man.

Mer. Ah, that same pale hard-hearted wench,
that Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet,

Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man, that can write, may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's maste;
how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo, he is already dead!
stabbed with a white wench's black eye; shot through the ear with a love-song; the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft; And is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats, I can tell you.
O, he is the courageous captain of compliments.

He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

He lights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his nimble rest.

Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—
Jul. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to night:
It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden:
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say it lightens. Sweet, good night;
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
My prize a beauteous flower when next we meet.

[Exit.]
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and Come to thy heart as that within my breast!

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?
Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.

[Exit.]
Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request
And yet I would it were to give again.
Rom. Wouldst thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love?

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.

[Nurse calls within.]
I hear some noise within; Dear love, adieu!
Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay but a little, I will come again. [Exit.]

Rom. O blessed blessed night! I am afear'd,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night,
indeed.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,
Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee my lord throughout the world.

Nurse. [Within.] Madam. [well.]
Jul. I come, anon:—But if thou mean'st not
I do beseech thee,—

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.
Jul. By and by, I come:—
To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul,—
Jul. A thousand times good night! [Exit.]

Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.
Love goes toward love, as school-boys from their
books;
But love from love, toward school, with heavy looks. [Retiring slowly.]

Re-enter Juliet above.

Jul. Hist, Romeo, hist!—O, for a falconer's voice,
To lure this tassel-gentle back again!
Benedicite is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave where echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine
With repetition of my Romeo's name.

Rom. It is my soul that calls upon my name:
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!
Rom. My sweet!

Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine.
Jul. I will not fail: 'tis twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember'st.
Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,
Rememb'ring how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning; I would have thee gone:
And yet no further than a wanton's bird;
Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyres,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So loving jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would, I were thy bird.
Jul. Sweet, so would I.

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sorrow.

That I shall say—good night, till it be morrow. [Exit.]

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!

'Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!
Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell;
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence, with a basket.

Fri. The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning
night,

Checkering the eastern clouds with streaks of
light;

And forth darkness like a drunkard reels
From forth day's path-way, made by Titan's wheels:

Now ere the sun advance his burning eye,
The day to cheer, and night's dank dew to dry,
I must up-fill this oriser cage of ours,
With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers.

The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb;
What is her burying-grave, that is her womb;
And from her womb children of divers kind
We sucking on her natural bosom feed;

Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some, and yet all different.

O, nicks is the powerful grace, that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities:
For nought so vile than on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give;

Nor ought so good, but, strain'd from that fair use,
Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse:
Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied;
And vice sometimes by action dignified.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power:
For this, being smelt, with that part cheers each part;

Being tasted, slays all senses with the heart.
Two such opposed foes encamp them still;
In man as well as herbs, grace, and rude will;

And, where the worser is predominant,
Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father!
Fri. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet salutes me?
Young son, it argues a disemp'rd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed;

Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
But where unbraided youth with unstuff'd brains
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign:

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art up-ris'n of some distemp'rd nature,

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father!
Fri. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet salutes me?
Young son, it argues a disemp'rd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed;

Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
But where unbraided youth with unstuff'd brains
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth
reign:

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art up-ris'n of some distemp'rd nature,

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father!
Fri. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet salutes me?
Young son, it argues a disemp'rd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed;

That were some spite : my invocation
Is fair and honest, and in his mistress' name,
I conjure only but to raise up him.

Rom. Come, he hath had himself among those trees,
To be conversed with the humorous night :
Blind is his love, and best befits the dark.

Mer. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wash his mistress with that kind of fruit.
As maids call medlars, when they laugh alone.—
Rom. Good night !—I'll to my truckle-bed ;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep :
Come, shall we go ?

Rom. Go then ; for 'tis in vain
To seek him here, that means not to be found.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Capulet's Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.

[Juliet appears above, at a window.
But, soft ! what light through yonder window breaks !

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun !—
Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
Who is already sick and pale with grief,
That thou her maid art far more fair than she :
Be not her maid, since she is envious ;
Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it ; cast it off.—
It is my lady ; O, it is my love !
O, that she knew she were !—
She speaks, yet she says nothing ; What of that ?
Her eye discourses, I will answer it.—
I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks ;
Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
Having some business, do entreat her eyes
To twinkle in their spheres till they return.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head ?
The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars.

As daylight with a lamp : her eye in heaven
Would through the airy region stream so bright.
That birds would sing, and think it were not night.
See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand !
O, that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek !

Jul. Ah me !
Rom. She speaks :—
O, speak again, bright angel ! for thou art
As glorious to this sight, being o'er my head,
As is a winged messenger of heaven

Unto the white-plum'd woodpecker's eyes
Of mortal, that fall back to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazy-purging clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. [Music.]

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo ! wherefore art thou Romeo ?
Deny thy father, and refuse thy name :
Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this ?
[Aside.]

Jul. 'Tis but thy name, that is my enemy ;—
Thou art thyself though, not a Montague.
What's Montague ? it is nor hand, nor foot,
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part
Belonging to a man. O, be some other name !
What's in a name ? that which we call a rose,
By any other name, would smell as sweet ;
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
Eaten that dear perfection which he owes,
Without that title :—Romeo, doff thy name ;

And for that name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself.

Rom. I take thee at thy word :
Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd ;
Henceforward I never will be Romeo. [Night,
Jul. What man art thou, that, thus hecstreen'd is So stumbling on my counsel ?

Rom. By a name
I know not how to tell thee who I am :
My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
Because it is an enemy to thee ;
Had I it written, I would tear the word. [Words
Jul. My ears have not yet drunk a hundred
Of that tongue's utterance, yet I know the sound ;
Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague ?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thou dislike Jul. How cam'st thou hither, tell me ! and wherefore ?

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb ;
And the place death, considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'er-perch
these walls ;

For stony limits cannot hold love out ;
And what love can do, that dares love attempt,
Therefore thy kinsmen are no lot to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.
Rom. Alack ! there lies more peril in thine eye,
Than twenty of their swords : look thou but sweet,
And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world, they saw thee
here.

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their sight, but thou love me, let them find me here :
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, waiting of thy love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place ? [Quire.]

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to in-
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.
I am no pilot ; yet, wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the furthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know'st, the mask of night is on my face ;

Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.
Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain, I day
What I have spoke ; But farewell compliment !
Dost thou love me ? I know, thou wilt say—Ay ;
And I will take thy word ; yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou may'st prove false ; at lovers' perjuries,
They say, Jove laughs. O, gentle Romeo,

If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully !
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo ; but, else, no more for the world.

In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond ;
And therefore thou may'st think my 'haviour light ;
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.
I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou over-hear'd'st ere I was ware.

My true love's passion : therefore pardon me ;
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.—

Jul. O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by ?

Jul. Do not swear at all ;
Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,

Show a fair presence, and put off these frowns,
An ill-beseeming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest;
I'll not endure him.

1 Cap. He shall be endur'd;
What, goodman boy!—I say he shall:—Go to,—
Am I the master here or you?—go to. [soul.]
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-hoop! you'll be the man!

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

1 Cap. Go to, go to,
You are a saucy boy:—Is't so, indeed!—
This trick may chance to scath you:—I know what.

You must contrary me! marry, 'tis time—
Well said, my hearts:—You are a pricour; go:—
Be quiet, or—More light, more light, for shame!—
I'll make you quiet: What!—Cheerly, my hearts.
Tyb. Putience perforce with wilful choler meeting.

Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw: but this intrusion shall,
Now seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall. [Exit.]

Rom. If I profane with my unworthy hand
[To Juliet.]

'This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this:—
My lips two blushing pilgrims, ready stand [kiss.]
To smooth that rough touch with a tender

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much.

Which mannerly devotion shows in this:
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch.

And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss.
Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmers too? [prayer.]

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in Rom. O then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do: [despair.]

They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake. [take.]

Rom. Then move not while my prayer's effect I
Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is purg'd.
[Kissing her.]

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took. [urg'd!]

Rom. Sin from my lips! O trespass sweetly
Give me my sin again.

Jul. Madam, your mother craves a word
with you.

Rom. What is her mother? Marry, bachelor.

Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous;
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk withal;
I tell you,—he that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Ber. Away, begone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.
Is it e'en so? Why, then I thank you all:

I thank you honest gentlemen; good night:—
More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed.
Ah, sirrah, [To 2 Cap.] by my fay, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest. [Exeunt all but Juliet and Nurse.]

Jul. Come hither, nurse: What is your gentleman?

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.
Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petroselin.
Jul. What's he, that follows there, that wou'd not dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go, ask his name:—if he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;
The only son of our great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
That I must love a loathed enemy.

Nurse. What's this? What's this?
Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now
Of one I danced withal. One calls within, Juliet.

Nurse. Anon, anon:—
Come, let's away: the strangers all are gone. [Exeunt.]

Enter Chorus.

Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir:

That fair, which love grunn'd fur, and would this,
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.

Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,
Alike bewitched by the charm of looks;

But to his foe supposed he must complain,
And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks:

Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear.

And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new-belov'd any where:

But passion lends them power, time means to meet,
Tempering extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—An open Place, adjoining Capulet's Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Can I go forward, when my heart is here;
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.

[He climbs the wall, and leaps down within it.]

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Ber. Romeo! my cousin Romeo! He is wise;
Mer. And, on my life, hath stolen him home to bed.

Ber. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard
Call, good Mercutio.

Mer. Nay, I'll conjure too.
Romeo! humours! madman! passion! lover!

Apper thou in the likeness of a sick,
Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied:

Cry but—Ah me! couple but—love and dove;
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nick-name for her periturd son and heir,

Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so true,
When king Cleopatra loved the beggar maid:

He hearst not, stirr'st not, he is no more;
The ape is dead, and I must conjure him:—
I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,

By her high forehead, and her scarlet lip,
By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,
And the demesnes that t' are adjacent lie,
That in thy likeness thou appear to us.

Ber. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him: 'twould anger
To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle [him]
Of some strange nature, letting it down stand
'Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it there:

The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
The collars, of the moonshine's wat'ry beams;
Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat,
Not half so big as a round little worm
Prook'd from the lazy fluxer of a maid:
Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut.

Made by the joner squirrel, or old crab,
Time out of mind the fairest couth-makers.
And in this state she gallops night by night Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of
love:

On courtiers' knees, that dream on court'sies
O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees;
O'er ladies lips, who straight on kisses dream;
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.

Sometimes she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit;
And sometimes comes she with a tickle-pag's tail,
Tickling a person's nose as 't he lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice;
Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep; and then anon
Drums in his ear; at which he starts and wakes;
And being thus frightened, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again: This is that very Mab,
That plants the seeds of madness in the night;
And takes the oil of fools in golden sleep.
Which, once untasted, breeds misfortune buds.
This is the herb, when made lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to bear,
Making them woumen of good carriage.
That, this is she—

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace:
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Merc. True, I talk of dreams;
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Beget of nothing but vain fantasy:
Which is as thin of substance as the air;
And more inconsequential than the wind, who woos
Even now the frames beam of the north.
And, being enter'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.
Bat. This wind you talk of blows us from our selves;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late
Rom. I fear too early: for my mind misgives,
Some consequence yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels; and expire the term
Of a despised life, clost'd in my breast,
By some vile forfeit of untimely death.
But hie, that hath the steers of my course,
Direct my sail!—On, lusty gentlemen.
E. S. Strike, drum. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Hall in Capulet's House.

Musicians waiting. Enter Servant's.

1 Serv. Where's the Putman, that he helps not to take away? he shift a trencher! he scrape a trencher!

2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unsaw'd too, 'tis a foul thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate:—good thou, save me a piece of march-pane; and, as thou lovest me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell.—Antony! and Putman!

2 Serv. Ay, boy: ready.

1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, sailed for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—
Cheerly, boys; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all! [They retire behind.]

Enter Capulet, &c. with the Guests, and the Maskers.

Cep. Gentlemen, welcome! Ladies that have their toes
Unplagu'd with corns, will have a bout with
[You:—]
Ah ha, my mistresses! which of you all [she]
Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty,
I'll swear hath corns: Am I come near you now?
You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the
That I have worn a visor: and could tell [day,
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please:—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis
You are welcome, gentlemen!—Come, musicians, play.

A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls.
[Musicians play, and they dance.]
More light, ye knaves; and turn the tables up,
And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.—
Ah, sirrah, this unlook'd-for sport comes well.
Nay, sit, you sit, and cousin Capulet:
For you and I are past our dancing days:
How long is't now, since last yourself and I
Were in a mask?

2 Cep. By'r lady, thirty years. [much.]
1 Cep. What, man? 'tis not so much, 'tis not so [Since the nuptial of Lucentio.]

Come Pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd.
2 Cep. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is older,
His son is thirty. [air:]

1 Cep. Will you tell me that?
His son was but a ward two years ago.
Rom. What lady's that which doth enrich the
Of yonder knight? [hand]

Serv. I know not, sir.
Rom. O, she doth teach the torches to burn
bright!

Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear;
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,
And, touching hers, make happy my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night!

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague:
Fetch me my rapier, boy:—What! dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To desert and scorn at our solemnity?
Now, by the stock and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

1 Cep. Why, how now, kinsman! wherefore stir'st thou so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cep. Young Romeo is't?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain, Romeo.
1 Cep. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone,
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to my truth, Verona trusts on him.
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all this town,
Here in my house, do a disreputable thing.
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will: the which I thus respect,

'A was a merry nun: — took up the child:
Yes, quoth he, dost thou fall upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast more wit;
Wilt thou not, Jule? I and, by my holy dunn,
 The pretty wretch left crying, and said — As:
 To see now, how a jest shall come about!
 I warrant, an I should live a thousand years, [he:]
 I never should forget it: Wilt thou not Jule? quoth
 And, pretty fool, it stunted, and said — As.

La. Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam; yet I cannot choose but
 To think it should leave crying, and say — As.
 And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow
 A bump as big as a young ruckel's stou;e;
 A pious knock; and it cried bitterly.
Yes, quoth my husband, fall'st upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age;
Wilt thou not, Jule? it stunted, and said — As.

Jul. And stint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I Nurse. Peace, I have dulle God mark thee to his grace!

Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nursed:
 As I might live to see thee married once,
 I have my wish.

La. Cap. A wish, that marry is the very theme
 I came to talk of: — Tell me, daughter Juliet,
 How stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were I not thine only nurse,
 I'd say, thou hadst suck'd wisdom from the teat.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger
 Here in Verona, ladies of esteem, [than you,
 Are made already mothers: by my count,
 I was your mother much upon these years

That you are now a maid. Thus then, in brief; —
 The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man,
 As all the world — Why he's a man of wax.

La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at our feast:
 Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face,
 And find delight writ there with beauty's pen;
 Examine every married lineament;
 And see how one another lends content;

And what obscur'd in this fair volume lies,
 I'nd written in the margin of his eyes.

'This precious book of love, this unbound lover,
 To beautify him, only lacks a cover: —
 The fish lives in the sea; and 'tis much pride,
 For fair without the fair, within to hide:

That book in many's eyes doth share the glory
 'That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;
 So shall you share all that he doth possess,
 By having him, making yourself no less. [men.]

Nurse. No less! may, bigger; women grow by La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?

Jul. I'll look to like, if looking liking move:
 But no more deep will I endart mine eye,
 'Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity. I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow a night.

La. Cap. We follow thee. — Juliet, the county
Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.
(Exeunt.)

SCENE IV. — A Street.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with Five or Six Maskers, Torch-bearers, and others.

Rom. What, shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?

Or shall we on without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such proximity:
 We'll have no Cupid hood-wink'd with a scarf,
 Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath,
 Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper;

Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke
 After the prompter, for our entrance:
 But let them measure us by what they will,
 We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch. — I am not for this am-being but heavy, I will bear the light. [lighting.]

Mer. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me: you have dancing
 With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead. [shoes,
 So stakes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Mer. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings,
 And soar with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore empierced with his shaft,
 To soar with his light feathers; and so bound,
 I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe:
 Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Mer. And, to sink in it, should you burden love;
 Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,
 Too rude, too heat; and it pricks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with
 love;

Prick love for pricking, and you beat love down. —
 Give me a case to put my visage in:

(Putting on a mask.)
 A visor for a visor! — what care I
 What curious eye doth quote deformities?

Here are the beetle brows, shall blush for me.

Ben. Come, knock, and enter; and no sooner,
 But every man betake him to his legs.

Mer. A torch for me: let wanton light of heart.

Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels;
 For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase, —
 I'll be a candle-holder, and look on, —
 The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.

Mer. Tut! I dun's the mouse, the constable's own
 word!

If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mire
 Of this (save reverence) love, wherein thou stick'st.

Up to the ears. — Come, we burn day-light, ha.
Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in doing
 We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day.

Take our good meaning: for our judgment sits
 Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And we mean well, in going to this mask;
 But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Rom. I dreamt a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed, asleep, while they do dream things true. [you.]

Mer. O, then, I see, queen Mab hath been with
 She is the fairest midwife; and she comes
 In shape no bigger than an agate-stone
 On the fore-finger of an alderman.

Drawn with a team of little atomies
 Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners' legs:

My will to her consent is but a part;
As she agrees, within her scope of choice
Loss my consent and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accustomed feast,
Whereto I have invited many a guest.
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more, most welcome makes my number
more.

At my poor house, look to behold this night
Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven
light:

Such comfort, as do lusty young men feel
When well apparel'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delight
Accent fresh female bode shall you this night faber at my house; hear all, all see.
And like her most, whose merit most shall be:
Such, amongst view of many, mine, being one,
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.
Come, go with me;—Go, sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; bid these persons out Whose names are written there, (gives a paper,) and to them say.

My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.

(Exeunt Capulet and Paris)

Serv. Find them out, whose names are written here! It is written—that the shewmaker should mould with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the faber with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never dread what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—in good time.

Enter Benvolio and Romeo.

Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burning.

One pain is less'n'd by another's anguish;
Torn giddy, and be help by backward turning;
One desperate grief cures with another's languish: Take some new infection to the eye, (quash)
And the rank poison of the old will die.

Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.

Ben. For what, I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken shin.

Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a mad-shut up in prison, kept without my food, (man in) Whipp'd and tormented, and—Good-even, good fellow.

Serv. Good gi' good e'en.—I pray, sir, can you read?

Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.

Serv. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book:

But I pray, can you read any thing you see?

Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.

Serv. Ye say honestly; rest you merry! (reads).

Rom. Stay, fellow: I can read.

Symon Martino, and his wife and daughters;
County Anselmo, and his beautiful sisters; the lady Anselmo of Viterbo; Shaper Placentio, and his lovely niece; Mercutio, and his brother Valentine: Mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; My fair niece Rosaline; Levi; Symon Valentio, and his cousin Lybalt; Lucio, and the lovely Helena.

A fair assembly; (gives back the note.) Whither sue. Up.

Rom. Whither?

Serv. To supper; to our house.

Rom. Whose house?

Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.

Serv. Now I'll tell you without asking: My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montague, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine. Rest you merry. (Exit).

Ben. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's
Supper the fair Rosaline, whom thou so lov'st;
With all the admired beauties of Verona:
Go thither; and with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with some that I shall show.
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires!

And these,—who, often drown'd, could never Transparent heretics, be burnt for liars! (die,—
One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun
Ne'er saw her match, since first the world began.

Ben. Tut! you saw her fair, none else being by,
Herself pow'd with herself in other eye:
But in those crystal scales, let there be weight'd
Your lady love against some other maid
That I will show you, shining at this feast. (Exit).

And she shall scant show well, that now shows
Romeo. I'll go along, no such sight to be shown.
But to rejoice in splendor of mine own. (Exeunt).

SCENE III.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? I call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maiden-head,—at twelve
I bade her come,—What, lamb! what, lady-bird!
God forbid!—where's this girl?—what, Juliet!

Enter Juliet.

Jul. How now, who calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here.

What is your will? (Nurse, give leave)

La. Cap. This is the matter:—Nurse, give leave

We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again;

I have remember'd me, thou shalt hear our counsel.

Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.

La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,

And yet, to my teen be it spoken, I have but four,—

She is not fourteen.—How long is it now

To Lammas-tide?

La. Cap. A fortnight, and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,

Come Lammas-eve at night, shall she be fourteen.

Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—

Were of an age.—Well, Susan is with God;

She was too good for me: But, as I said,

On Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen!

'Tis shall she, marry: I remember it well.

'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years;

And she was wean'd,—I never shall forget it,—

Of all the days of the year, upon that day:

For I had then laid wormwood to my dug,

Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall,

My lord and you were then at Mantua:—

Nay, I do hear a brain:—but, as I said,

When it did taste the wormwood on the apple

Of my dug, and felt it bitter, pretty fool!

To see it tetchy, and fall out with the dug,

Shake, quoth the dove-house; 'twas no need, I

To bid me tudge. (Exit)

And since that time it is eleven years:

For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,

She could have run and waddled all about.

For even the day before, she broke her brow;

And then my husband—God be with his soul!

But all so soon as the all-cheering sun
Should in the further east begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed.
Away from light steals home my heavy woe,
And private in his chamber pens himself,
Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out,
And makes himself an artificial night:
Black and portentous must this honour prove,
Unless good counsel may the cause remove.

Bes. My noble uncle, do you know the cause?

Mon. I neither know it, nor can learn of him.

Bes. Have you importun'd him by any means?

Mon. Both by myself, and many other friends:

But he, his own affections' counsellor,

Is to himself—I will not say, how true—

But to himself so secret and so close,

So far from sounding and discovery,

As is the bud bit with an envious worm,

Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,

Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.

Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow,

We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter Romeo, at a distance.

Bes. See, where he comes: So please you,
step aside;

I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.

Mon. I would thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To hear true shrift.—Come, madam, let's away.

Exit Montague and Lady.

Bes. Good morrow, cousin.

Mon. Is the day so young?

Bes. But new struck nine.

Mon. Ah me! sad hours seem long.

Was that my father that went hence so fast?

Bes. It was:—What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?

Mon. [them short.]

Rom. Not having that, which, having, makes

Bes. In love?

Rom. Out—

Bes. Of love?

Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in love.

Bes. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view,

Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!

Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,

Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will!

Where shall we dine?—O me!—What fray was

here?

Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.

Here's much to do with hate, but more with

love:—

Why then, O brawling love! O loving hate!

O any thing, of nothing first create!

O heavy eyelids! serious vanity!

Mis-shapen chace of well-seeming forms!

Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick

health!

Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!—

This love feel I, that feel no love in this.

Dust thou not laugh?

Bes. No, coz, I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Bes. At thy good heart's oppression.

Rom. Why, such is love's transgression.—

Grief of mine own lies heavy in my breast;

Which thou wilt propagate, to have it press

With more of thine: this love, that thou hast shown,

Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;

Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;

Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:

What is it else? a madness most discreet

A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.

Farewell, my coz.

Bes. Soft, I will go along; [Goes.]

As if you leave me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut, I have lost myself: I am not here;

This is not Romeo, he's some other where.

Bes. Tell me in sadness, who she is you love.

Rom. What, shall I groan, and tell thee?

Bes. Groan? why, no: [will:]—

But sadly tell me, who.

Rom. Bid a sick man in sadness make his

Ah, word ill urg'd to one that is so ill!—

In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

Bes. I aim'd so near, when I suppos'd you lov'd. [fair I love.]

Rom. A right good marks-man!—And she's

Bes. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well, in that hit, you miss: she'll not be hit.

With Cupid's arrow, she hath Dian's wit;

And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,

From love's weak childish bow she lives un-harm'd.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,

Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes,

Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:

O, she is rich in beauty; only poor,

That, when she dies, with beauty dies her store.

Bes. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste? [huge waste:]

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes

For beauty, starv'd with her severity,

Cuts beauty off from all posterity.

She is too fair, too wise; wisely too fair,

To merit blame by making me despair:

She hath forsworn to love; and, in that vow,

Do I live dead, that live to tell it now.

Bes. Be rul'd by me, forget to think of her.

Rom. O teach me how I should forget to think.

Bes. By giving liberty unto thine eyes;

Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'Tis the way

To call hers, exquisite, in question more:

These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies' brows,

Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair;

He, that is stricken blind, cannot forget

The precious treasure of his eyesight lost:

Show me a mistress that is passing fair,

What doth her beauty serve, but as a note

Where I may read, who pass'd that passing fair?

Farewell; thou canst not teach me to forget.

Bes. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. And Montague is bound as well as I

In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think,

For men so old as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both;

And pity 'tis you liv'd at odds so long.

Cap. But saying o'er what I have said before:

My child is yet a stranger in the world,

She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;

Let two more summers wither in their pride.

Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

Par. Younger than she are happy mothers made. [made]

Cap. And too soon marr'd are those so early

The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,

She is the hopeful lady of my earth:

But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,

when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids: I will cut off their heads.

Gre. The heads of the maids?
Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads: take it in what sense thou wilt.

Gre. They must take it in sense, that feel it.
Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand: and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of fish.

Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish: if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John. Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.

Enter Abram and Balthasar.

Sam. My naked weapon is out; quarrel, I will back thee.

Gre. How I turn thy back, and run!

Sam. Fear me not.

Gre. No, marry: I fear thee!

Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.

Gre. I will frown, as I pass by; and let them take it as they list.

Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Sam. Is the law on our side, if I say—ay?

Gre. No.

Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir: but I bite my thumb, sir.

Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?

Abr. Quarrel, sir! no, sir.

Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you; I serve as good a man as you.

Abr. No better.

Sam. Well, sir.

Enter Benvolio, at a distance.

Gre. Say—better; here comes one of my mister's kinsmen.

Sam. Yes, better, sir.

Abr. You lie.

Sam. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy swashing blow. [They fight.]

Ben. Part, fools; put up your swords; you know not what you do.

[Beats down their swords.]

Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What, art thou drawn among these hartless hinds?
Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death.

Ben. I do but keep the peace; put up thy sword.

Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word.

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee:
Have at thee, coward. [They fight.]

Enter several partizans of both houses, who join the fray; then enter Citizens, with clubs.

1 Cit. Clubs, bills, and partizans! strike! beat them down!

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter Capulet, in his gown; and Lady Capulet.

Cap. What noise is this?—Give me my long sword, ho!

La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch!—Why call you for a sword?

Cap. My sword, I say!—Old Montague is
come,
And flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter Montague and Lady Montague.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet,—Hold me not, let me go. [a foe.]

La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek hate.

Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel,—
Will they not hear?—what ho! you men, you hearts!

That quench the fire of your pernicious rage
With purple fountains issuing from your veins,
On pain of torture, from those bloody hands
Throw your mistemper'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your moved prince.—
Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word,
By thee, old Capulet, and Montague,
Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets;
And made Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their grave beseeching ornaments,
To wield old partizans, in hands as old,
Cank'r'd with peace, to part your canker'd
hate.

If ever you disturb our streets again,
Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time, all the rest depart away:
You, Capulet, shall go along with me:
And, Montague, come you this afternoon,
To know our further pleasure in this case,
To old Free-town, our common judgement-place.
Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

[*Exeunt Prince and Attendants; Capulet,
Lady Capulet, Tybalt, Citizens, and Servants.*]

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroach?

Speak, nephew, were you by, when it began?

Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary.

And yours, close fighting ere I did approach:
I draw to part them; in the instant came
The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd;
Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,
He swung about his head, and cut the winds,
Who, nothing hurt withal, hiss'd him in scorn:
While we were interchanging thrusts and blows, Came more and more, and fought on part and
part.

Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O, where is Romeo!—saw you him
to day?

Right glad I am, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the worshipp'd sun

Peer'd forth the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drove me to walk abroad;
Where,—underneath the grove of sycamore,
That westward rooteth from the city's side,—
So early walking did I see your son:

Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood:
I, measuring his affections by my own,—
That now are buzz'd when they are most abow'd.—

Pursu'd my humour, not pursuing his,
And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me.

Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen,

With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew,
Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs.

Shall be applied: For us, we will resign,
During the life of this old majesty,
To him our absolute power:—You, to your rights; [To Edgar and Kent.]
With bout, and such addition as your honours
Have more than merited—All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings.—O, see, see!

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no, no life!

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? O, thou wilt come
no more.

Never, never, never, never, never!—
Pray you, undo this button: Thank you, sir.—
Do you see this? Look on her,—look,—her lips,—
Look there, look there!— [He dies.]

Edg. He faints!—My lord, my lord,—

Kent. Break, heart: I pry thee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him.

That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer

Edg. O, he is gone, indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long:
He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence.—Our present business

Is general woe. Friends of my soul, you train
[To Kent and Edgar]

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;

My master calls, and I must not say, no.

Alb. The weight of this sad time we must obey;

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.
The oldest hath borne most; we that are young,
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exeunt, with a dead march.]

men, and Attendants.

SCENE.—during the greater Part of the Play, in Verona; once in the Fifth Act, at Mantua.

PROLOGUE.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.
The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, might could remove,

Is now the two hours' traffick of our stage,
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall mess, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A publick Place.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, armed with swords and bucklers.

Sam. Gregory, o'my word, we'll not carry coals.

Gre. No, for then we should be culliers.

Sam. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.

Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.

Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.

Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves
me.

Gre. To move is—to stir; and to be valiant,
is—to stand to it: therefore, if thou art mov'd,
thou run'st away.

Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand: I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.

Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.

Sam. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall:— therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.

Sam. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant:

Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhor'd society; but then, finding
Who 'twas that so endur'd, with his strung arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven; threw him on my father;
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life Began to crack: 'Twice then the trumpet
sounded,

And there I left him tranç'd.

Alb. But who was this?

Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody knife.

Gent. Help! help! O help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came even from the heart of—

Alb. Who, man? speak.

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady; and her sister
By her is poison'd; she confesses it

Edg. I was contract'd to them both; all three
Now marry in an instant.

Alb. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead!

This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble,

Twoches us not with pity. (Exit Gentleman.)

Rater Kent.

Edg. Here comes Kent, sir.

Alb. O! it is he.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come

To bid my king and master say good night;

Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot!—

Speak, Edmund, where's the king; and where's Cordelia?—

See'st thou this object, Kent?

(The bodies of Gonzil and Regan are brought in.)

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edg. Yet Edmund was below'd:

The one the other poison'd for my sake.

And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so—Cover their faces.

Edg. I put for life:—Some good I mean to do.

Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,—

Be brief in it,—to the castle; for my wit is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:—

Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O, run—

Edg. To who, my lord?—Who has the office?

Alb. Well thought on; take my sword,

Give it the captain.

Alb. He hath commission from the wife and me

To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair.
That she fordid herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. (Edmund is borne off.)

Enter Lear, with Cordelia dead in his arms; Edgar, Officer, and others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O, you are men of stones;

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack:—O, she is gone for ever!—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth:—Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,
It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O my good master!

Lear. Prythee, away. (Knocking.)

Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors
all!

I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever!—

Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha!

What is't thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft,

Gentle, and low: an excellent thing in woman:—

I kill'd the slave that was a hanging thee.

Off. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not, fellow?

I have seen the day, with my good biting fault-chain

I would have made them skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are you?
Mine eyes are none o'the best:—I'll tell you straight.

Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated,

One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight: Are you not Kent?

Kent. The same;

Your servant Kent: Where is your servant
Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;

He'll strike, and quickly too: He's dead and rotten

Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very man;—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. Thant, from your first of difference and decay

Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly—

Your eldest daughters have fore-doom'd themselves,

And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he says; and vain it is

That we present us to him.

Edg. Very bootless.

Enter an Officer

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord

Alb. That's but a trifle here.—

You lords, and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay may come,

Reg. If not, I'll ne'er trust poison. [Aside.]

Gon. There's my exclamation: [Throwing down a glove.] what in the world he is: That names me traitor, villain-like he lies: Call by thy trumpet: he that dares approach, On him, on you, (who not?) I will maintain My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, he!

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald! Alb. Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers, All levied in my name, have in my name Took their discharge.

Reg. This sickness grows upon me.

Enter a Herald.

Alb. She is not well: convey her to my tent.

Exit Regan, led. Come hither, herald,—let the trumpet sound,— And read out this.

Off. Sound, trumpet. [A trumpet sounds.]

Herald reads.

If any man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed earl of Gloster, that he is a man of traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet: He is bold in his defence.

Edm. Sound.

Her. Again.

Her. Again.

[1 Trumpet.

2 Trumpet.

3 Trumpet.

[Trumpet answers within.

Enter Edgar, armed, preceded by a trumpet.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears Upon this call of the trumpet.

Her. What are you?

Your name, your quality? and why you answer This present summons?

Edg. Know, my name is lost; By treason's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit: Yet am I noble, as the adversary I come to cope withal.

Alb. Which is that adversary?

Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloster?

Edm. Himself.—What say'st thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy sword;

That if my speech offend a noble heart, Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine. Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours, My oath, and my profession: I protest,—Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence, Despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune, Thy valour, and thy heart,—thou art a traitor; False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father; Conspirant 'gainst this lush illustrious prince; And, from the extreme upward of thy head, To the descent and dust beneath thy feet, A most twind-spotted traitor. Say thou, No, This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent

To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak, Thou liest.

Edm. In wisdom, I should ask thy name; But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike, And that thy tongue some way of breeding breathes,

What safe and nicely I might well delay By rule of knight-hood, I disdain and spurn: Be it I lose these treasons to thy head; With the hell-hated he o'erwhelm thy heart; Which, (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,) Sick, O, sick!

[Aside.]

This sword of mine shall give them instant way, Where they shall rest forever.—Trumpets speak.

[Alarums. They fight. Edmund falls.]

Alb. O save him, save him!

Gon. This is mere practice, Gloucester: By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer

An unknown opposite; thou art not vanquish'd, But excus'd and beguil'd.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame, Or with this paper shall I stop it!—Hold, sir:—Thou worse than any name, read this even evil:—

No tearing, lady; I perceive you know it.

[Gives the letter to Edmund.]

Gon. Say, if I do: the laws are mine, not

Who shall arraign me for't! [Thrice:

Alb. Most monstrous!

Knowest thou this paper?

Gon. Ask me not what I know.

[Exit General.]

Alb. Go after her; she's desperate: govern her.

[To an Officer, who goes out.]

Edm. What you have charg'd me with, that

And more, much more: the time will bring it

'Tis past, and so am I: But what art thou,

That hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble,

I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity.

I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund;

If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.

My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant voices

Make instruments to scourge us:

The dark and vicious place where thee he got,

Cost him his eyes.

Edm. Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true;

The wheel is come full circle; I am here.

Alb. Methought, thy very gut did prophesy

A royal nobleness:—I must embrace thee:

Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I

Did hate thee, or thy father!

Edg. Worthy prince,

I know it well.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself?

How have you known the miseries of your father?

Edg. By nursing them, my lord—Let a brief

tale:—

And when 'tis told, O, that my heart would burst!

The bloody proclamation to escape, (none)

That follow'd me so near, (O, our live's sweet)

That with the pain of death we'd hourly die,

Rather than die at once!) taught me to shift

Into a madman's rage; to assume a semblance

That very dogs disdain'd: and in this habit

Met I my father with his bleeding rings,

Their precious stones new lost; became his guide,

Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair;

Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him.

Until some half hour past, when I was arm'd,

Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,

I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last

Told him my pilgrimage: But his flaw'd heart,

(Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath moved me,

And shall, perchance, do good: but speak you on;

You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;

For I am almost ready to dissolve,

Hearing of this

Alarums; afterwards a Retreat. Re-enter Edgar.

Edg. Away, old man, give me thy hand, away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en:
Give me thy hand: come on.

Glos. No further, sir: a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Rape me in all: Come on.

Glo. And that's true too. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The British Camp near Dover.

Enter, in conquest, with drum and colours, Edmund; Lear and Cordelia, as Prisoners; Officers, Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away: good knight;

Until their greater pleasures first be known
That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who, with best meaning, have incur'd the worst.

For thee, oppress'd king, am I cast down;
Myself could else out-frown false fortune's
frown.—

Shall we not see these daughters, and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:

We two alone will slay like birds i'the cage.
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness: So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded butterflies, and bear poor nature
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them
too,—

Who looses, and who wins; who's in, who's out:—

And take upon us the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies: And we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, parks and seats of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I ought thee?

He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence, like fuzes. Wipe thine eyes;
The gods shall devour them, flesh and fell;
Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see them starve first.

Come. [Exeunt Lear and Cordelia, guarded.]

Edm. Come, brother, captain; bark;
Take thou this note; [gives a paper:] go, follow them to prison:

One step I have advanc'd thee. If thou dost
As thou instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes: Know thou this,—that men
Are as the time is: to be tender-minded
Does not become a sword:—Thy great employment

Will not bear question:—either say, thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other means.

Of. I'll do't, my lord.

Edm. About it; and write happy, when thou hast done.

Mark.—I say instantly; and carry it so,
As I have set it down.

Of. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If it be man's work, I will do it.

[Exit Officer.]

Flourish. Enter Albany, Goneril, Regan, Officers, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain.

And fortune led you well: You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife:
We do require them of you; so to use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention and appointed guard;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd launces in our eyes Which do command them. With him I sent the queen;

My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, to appear
Where you shall hold your session. At this time,
We sweat, and bleed: the friend hath lost his
friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cur'd
By those that feel their sharpness:—
The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a siller place.

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks, our pleasure might have been demanded.

Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers;
Bore the commission of my place and person;
The which innuenduo may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot;
In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
More than in your advancement.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeers the best, [you.]

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband
Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla!

That eye, that told you so, look'd but a-segment.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer
From a full-blown stomach.—General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony;
Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine;
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will.

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine. [To Edmund.]

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason:—Edmund, I arrest
On capital treason; and, in thy arrest,
This gilded serpent: [Pointing to Goneril.]—for your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife:

'Tis she is sub-contracted in this lord,
And I, her husband, contradict your bans.
If you will marry, make your love to me,
My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude! [murmur:]

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Goneril:—Let the trumpet
If none appear to prove upon thy person,
Thy business manifest, and many treasons
There is my plecter: [Throwing down a stone.]

I'll prove it on thy heart.
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,

You see, is cur'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even o'er the time he has lost.

Desire him to go in: trouble him no more,
Till further settling.

Cor. Will't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me:
Pray now, forget and forgive: I am old, and foolish.

[Exeunt Lear, Cordelia, Physician, and Attendants.]

Gent. Holds it true, sir,
That the duke of Cornwall was so slain?

Ant. Most certain, sir.

Gent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 'tis said,
The bastard son of Gloucester.

Gent. They say, Edgar,
His banish'd son, is with the earl of Kent
in Germany.

Kent. Report is changeable.

'Tis time to look about; the powers o'the king-
Approach apace.

Gent. The arraignment is like to be a bloody.

Fare you well, sir.

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought.

Or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover.

Enter, with drums and colours, Edmund, Regan, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Edm. Know of the duke, if his last purpose hold;

Or, whether since he is advis'd by aught

To change the course: He's full of alteration.

And self-reproving:—bring his constant pleasure.

[To an Officer, who goes out.]

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'Tis to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord,

You know the goodness I intend upon you:

Tell me,—but truly,—but then speak the truth,

Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

Reg. But have you never found my brother's

To the forefended place?

Edm. That thought abuses you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been con-
-junct

And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her: Dear my lord,

Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not:

She, and the duke her husband,—

Enter Albany, Goneril, and Soldiers.

Gon. I had rather lose the battle, than that sister

Should loosen him and me.

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be met.—

Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his
daughter,

With others, whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. Where I could not be honest,

I never yet was valiant: for this business,

It toucheth us as France invades our land.
Not holds the king; with others, whom, I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.

Reg. Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy:

For these domestick and particular broils

Are not to question here.

Alb. Let us then determine

With the ancient of war on our proceedings.

Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'Tis most convenient: pray you, go with us.

Gon. O, ho, I know the riddle: [Aside.] I will

As they are going out, enter Edgar, disguised.

Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man

Hear me one word.

Alb. I'll overtake you.—Speak.

[Exeunt Edmund, Regan, Goneril, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this let-ter: If you have victory, let the trumpet sound.

For him that brought it: wretched though I seem.

I can produce a champion, that will prove
What is avouch'd there: If you miscarry,

Your business of the world lieth so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune loves you!

Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry.

And I'll appear again.

Alb. Why, fare thee well: I will o'erlook thy paper

Edg.

Re-enter Edmund.

Edm. The enemy's in view, draw up your powers.

Here is the guess of their true strength and
By diligent discovery:—but your haste

Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my
Each jealous of the other, as the stung

Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?

Both! one! or neither! Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive: To take the widow,

Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;

And hardly shall I carry out my side.

Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle: which being

Let her, who would be rid of him, devise

His speedy taking off. As for the merry
Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia,—

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon: for my state

Stands on me to defend, not to debate.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Field between the two Camps.

Alarm within. Enter, with drum and colours

Lear, Cordelia, and their Forces; and exeunt.

Enter Edgar and Gloucester

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:

If ever I return to you again,

I'll bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you, sir!

[Exit Edgar.]

As dutieous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire.

Glo. What, is he dead?
Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you—Let's see his pockets: these letters that he speaks of, (sorry)
May be my friends. — He is dead; I am only
He had no other death's-man. — Let us see: —
Leave, gentle wax: and, manners, blame us not:
To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their
Their papers, is more lawful. (hearts;)

[Heads.] Let our reciprocal vows be remembered.
You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully afforded. There is nothing done, if he return the compasser; Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal; from the leath'd warmth wherof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.

Your wife, (so I would say,) and your affectionate servant, Goneril.

O undistinguish'd space of woman's will! —
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange, my brother! — Here, in the seeds
Thou'lt rake up, the post unsanctified
Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practic'd duke: For him 'tis well,
That of thy death and business I can tell.

[Exit Edgar, dragging out the body.]
Glo. The king is mad: How stiff is my vile

That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woe, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

Re-enter Edgar.

Edg. Give me your hand: —
For oil, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. — A Tent in the French Camp. Lear on a bed, asleep; Physician, Gentlemen, and others, attending.

Enter Cordelia and Kent.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live, and work, [short,]
To match thy goodness! My life will be too
And every measure fail me. [paid.]
Kent. To be acknowledged, madam, is o'er-
All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited:
These weeds are memories of those worses
I prythee, put them off. [hours:]

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam;
Yet to be known, shortens my made intent:
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord. — How does the king? [To the Physician.]

Phys. Madam, sleeps still.
Cor. O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father!

Phys. So please your majesty,
That we may wake the king! he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed

'Tis the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?
Gent. Ay, madam: in the heaviness of his
We put fresh garments on him. [sleep,]

Phys. Be by, good madam, when we do awake
I doubt not of his temperance. [him;]

Cor. Very well.
Phys. Please you, draw near. — Louder the music! there.

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration, hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!
Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Had challeng'd pity of them. Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep dread-holted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross-lightning! to watch (poor
Of quick, cross-lightning! to watch (poor peru!)

With this thin helm! Mine enemy's dog, Though he had bit me, should have stood that night (ther,)

Against my fire: And wast thou fain, poor fa-
To hovel thee with swine, and ruges forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!

'Tis wonder, that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all — He wakes; speak to Phys. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest (him.)

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty? [grave:]

Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o'the
Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?
Lear. You are a spirit, I know; When did you Cor. Still, still far wide! [die!]

Phys. He's scarce awake; let him alone awhile.

Lear. Where have I been? Where am I? — Fair day-light! — [only,]

I am mightily abus'd. — I should even die with
To see another thus — I know not what to say. —
I will not swear, these are my hands: — let's see;
I feel this pin prick. 'Would I were assur'd
Of my condition.

Cor. O, look upon me, sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me: —
No, sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward; and, to deal plainly,
I fear, I am not in my perfect mind. [man;]

Methinks, I should know you, and know this
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is: and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at
For, as I am a man, I think this lady [me;]

To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I pray,
Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, faith. I pray, weep not.

If you have power for me, I will drink it.
I know, you do not love me: for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.
Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.
Lear. Do not abuse me.

Cupid; I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters suns, I could not see one.

Edg. I would not take this from report;—it is, and my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case of eyes!

Lear. O, ho, are you there with me! No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse! Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: Yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears: see how you! justice rails upon you! simple thief! Hark, in thine ear: Change places; and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief!—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar!

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur! There thou might'st behold the great image of authority: a dog's obeyed in office.—

Thou rascal handle, hold thy bloody hand! Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back;

Thou hast but't to use her in that kind For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear; Robes, and furr'd gowns, hide all. Plate sin with gold.

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks: Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it. None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll able 'em.

Take that of me, my friend, who have the power To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes; And, like a scurvy politician, seem To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now, now, now.

Pull off my boots:—harder, harder: so. Edg. O, matter and impertinency mix'd! Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloucester. Thou must be patient; we came crying hither. Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,

We wawl, and cry:—I will preach to thee; Glo. Alack, alack the day!

Lear. When we are born, we cry, that we are come

To this great stage of fools:—This a good it were a delicate stratagem, to shoe

A troop of horse with felt: I'll put it in proof; And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law,

Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Genl. O, here he is: lay hand upon him.—Sir, Your most dear daughter.

Lear. No rescue! What a prisoner! I am even The natural fool of fortune.—Use me well; You shall have ransom. Let me have a I am cut to the brains.

Genl. You shall have any thing. Lear. No second! all myself!

Why, this would make a man, a man of salt, To use his eyes for garden water-pots, Ay, and for laying autumn's dust.

Genl. Good sir,— Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridegroom; What!

I will be jovial; come, come: I am a king, My masters, know you that?

Genl. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in it. Nay, as you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.

(Exit running. Attendants follow.) Genl. A slight most pitiful in the meanest wretch;

(daughter, Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one Who redeems nature from the general curse

Which twain have brought her to. Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Genl. Sir, speed you: What's your will? Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward? Genl. Most sure, and vulgar: every one hears Which can distinguish sound. Edg. Bat, by your favour,

How near's the other army? Genl. Near, and on speedy foot; the main desery Edg. Stand on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir: that's all. Genl. Though that the queen on special cause

Her army is mov'd on. Edg. I thank you, sir.

(Exit Genl.) Glo. You ever gentle gods, take my breath from me. Let not my worsen spirit tempt me again

To die before you please! Well pray you, father. Edg. Now, good sir, what are you?

Glo. A most poor man, made lame by fortune's blows;

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows, Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,

I'll lead you to some biding. Glo. Hearty thanks:

The bounty and the benison of heaven To boot, and boot!

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclamation! prize! Most happy! That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh

To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor, Briefly thyself remember:—The sword is out

That must destroy thee. Glo. Now let thy friendly hand

Put strength enough to it. Edg. Wherefore, bold peasant,

Dar'st thou support a pious'd traitor! Hence: Let that the infection of his fortune take

Like hold on thee. Let go his arm. Edg. Chill not let go, sir, without further Stew. Let go, slave, or thou diest. Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor folk pass. And ch'old ha' been swagge'd out of my life, 'twould not ha' been so long as

'tis by a vortnight. Nay, come not near the old man; keep out, che vortnight, or see try whether your costard or my bat be the harder: Stew. Chill pick your teeth, sir: Come: no matter vor your fains. (They fight; and Edgar knocks him down.)

Stew. Slave, thou hast slain me:—Villain, take my purse:

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body: And give the letters, which thou find'st about me,

To Edmund earl of Gloucester; seek him out: Upon the British party:—O, untimely death!

Edg. I know thee well: A serviceable villain,

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and you 'll tail anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight: The murmuring surge,

That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high:—I'll look no more;
Lost my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand: You are now within a foot

Of the extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse; in it, a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking: Fairies and gods.

Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off;
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir.

Glo. With all my heart. (Seems to go)

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo. O you mighty gods!

This world I do renounce; and, in your sights,

Shake patiently my great affliction off;

If I could bear it longer, and not fall

To quarrel with your great opposess wills,

My soul, and kindest part of nature, should

Burn itself out. If I durst live, O, bless him!

Now, farewell, fare thee well. (He leaps and falls along)

Edg. Goe, sir! farewell—

And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The treasury of life: when life itself

Yields to the thief: Had he been where he thought,

By this, had thought been past—Alive, or dead!

Ha, you sir! friend!—Hear you, sir!—speak!

This might he pass indeed:—Yet he revives:

What are you, sir!

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Had'st thou been sought but gossamer, feathers, air,

So many fathoms down precipitating.

Thou had'st stiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breath; (sound.)

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art

Ten masters at each make not the altitude,

Which thou hast perpendicularly fell;

Thy life's a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky barn.

Look up a height:—the shrill-gurg'd lark so far

Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes.—

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,

To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,

When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,

And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm:

Up:—So:—How is't? Feel you your legs? You

(stand.)

Edg. This is above all strangeness.

Upon the crown o'the cliff, what thing was that

Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes

Were two full moons: he had a thousand noses,

Horns whelk'd, and wad'd like the enriden sea;

It was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,

Think that the clearest gods, who make them
honours

Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee

Glo. I do remember now: henceforth I'll bear Affliction, till it do cry out itself. (Of,

Enough, enough, and die. That thing you speak

I took it for a man; often twould say,

The fiend, the fiend: he led me to that place.

Edg. Bear froe and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

Enter Lear, fantastically dressed up with flowers.

The safer sense will ne'er accommodate

His master thus

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining.

I am the king himself

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.—

There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.—Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace;—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.—There's my gauntlet: I'll prove it on a giant.—Bring up the brown bills.—O, well flown, bird!—'t the cloot,

if the cloot: hewah!—Give the word

Edg. Sweet auricular

Lear. Puss

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goners!—with a white beard!—

They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say ay, and no, to every thing I said—

ay and no too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace

at my bidding; there I found them, there I smelt them out. Go to, they are not men o'th'ir words: they told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie: I am not agree-proof.

Glo. If the trick of that voice I do well remember, 't not the king? (Ber:)

Lear. Ay, every inch a king:

When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.

I pardon that man's life: What was thy cause?

Adultery—

Thou shalt not die: Die for adultery! No:

The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly

Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive, for Gloucester's bastard son

Was kinder to his father, than my daughters

Gut 'twixt the lawful sheets

To't, luxury, pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—

Behold you 'supping daws,

Whose face between her forks presereth snow;

That mirror virtue, and doer shake the head

To't hear of pleasure's name;

The fickle-wit, and the soiled horse, goes to't

With a more riotous appetite

Down from the waist they are centaurs,

Though women all above:

But to the virgins do the gods inherit.

Beneath is all the fiends'; there's hell, there's darkness, there is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption;—Fye, fye, fye!

pah! pah! Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand!

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality

Glo. O ruin'd piece of nature! This great

Shall so wear out to nought.—Dost thou know

me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough

Dost thou quibble at me? No, do thy worst, blind

Kent. Well, sir; the poor distressed Lear is
 'Tis the town;
 Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers
 What we are come about, and by no means
 Will yield to see his daughter.

Genl. Why, good sir?
Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him: his own unkindness,
 That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
 To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
 To his dog-hearted daughters;—these things
 sting
 His mind so venomously, that burning shame
 Detains him from Cordelia.

Genl. Alack, poor gentleman!
Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you heard not?

Genl. 'Tis so; they are afout.
Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master
 Lear.

And leave you to attend him: some dear cause
 Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
 When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
 Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me. [Exit Kent.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Tent.

Enter Cordelia, Physician, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why he was met even
 now

As mad as the vex'd sea: singing aloud;
 Crown'd with rank fumet, and furrow weeds,
 With barlocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
 Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
 In our sustaining corn.—A century send forth;
 Search every acre in the high-grown field;
 And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.]

What can man's wisdom do,
 In the restoring his bereaved sense?
 He, that helps him, take all my outward worth.

Phy. There is means, madam:
 Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
 The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
 Are many simples operative, whose power
 Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets,
 All you unublish'd virtues of the earth,
 Spring with my tears! be adiant, and remediate,
 In the good man's distress!—Seek, seek for him;
 Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
 That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Madam, news;
 The British powers are marching hitherward.
Cor. 'Tis known before; our preparation stands

In expectation of them.—O dear father,
 It is thy business that I go about;
 Therefore great France
 My mourning, and important tears, hath pitied.
 No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
 But love, dear love, and our aged father's right:
 Soon may I hear, and see him! [Exit Mess.]

SCENE V.—A Room in Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Regan and Steward.

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth?

Stew. Ay, madam.
Reg. Himself
 In person there?

Stew. Madam, with much ado:
 Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord
Stew. No, madam. [at home]

Reg. What might import my sister's letter to Stew. I know not, lady. [him]

Reg. 'Faith, he is poded hence on serious matter.

It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
 To let him live; where he arrives, he moves
 All hearts against us; Edmund, I think, is gone,
 In pity of his misery, to despatch
 His nighted life; moreover, to desecry
 The strength of the enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow; stay with
 The ways are dangerous.

Stew. I may not, madam;
 My lady charg'd my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund?
 Might not you

Transport her purposes by words? Belike,
 Something—I know not what:—I'll love thee
 Let me unseal the letter. [much,

Stew. Madam, I had rather—
Reg. I know your lady does not love her husband;

I am sure of that; and, at her late being here,
 She gave strange oracles, and most speaking looks [husband]

To noble Edmund: I know, you are of her
Stew. I, Madam? [it]

Reg. I speak in understanding; you are, I know
 Therefore, I do advise you, take this note:

My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd;
 And more convenient is he for my hand,

Than for your lady's:—You may gather more.
 If you do find him, pray you, give him this;

And when your mistress hears thus much from
 you,

I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.
 So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
 Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Stew. 'Would I could meet him, madam! I
 What party I do follow. [would show

Reg. Fare thee well. [Exit Stew.]

[Exit Reg.]

SCENE VI.—The country near Dover.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar dressed like a peasant.

Glo. When shall we come to the top of that same hill? [labour]

Edg. You do climb up it now: look how we
Glo. Methinks the ground is even.

Edg. Horrible steep:
 Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glo. No, truly.

Edg. Why, then your other senses grow un-
 By your eyes' anguish. [perfect

Glo. So may it be, indeed:
 Methinks, thy voice is sherr'd; and thou speak'st in better phrase, and matter, than thou dost.

Edg. You are much deceiv'd; in nothing am I
 But in my garments. [change'd,

Glo. Methinks, you are better spoken.
Edg. Come on, sir; here's the place;—stand still—How fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
 The crows, and choughs, that wing the midway
 air,

Show scarce so gross as beetles: Half way down Hangs one that gathers sampshire; dreadful trade!

Methinks, he seems no bigger than his head.

A woman's services are due; my foul
Usurps my bed.

Stew. Madam, here comes my lord
[Exit Steward.]

Enter Albany.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.

Alb. O Goneril!
You are not worth the dust which the rude wind
Blows in your face—I fear your disposition:
That nature, which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself:
She that herself will silver and unbranch
From her maternal sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile:

Filth's not our but themselves. What have you
Tears, not daggers,—what have you perform'd!
A father, and a gracious aged man, Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick,

Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you mad—
Could my good brother suffer you to do it!
A man, a prince, by him so benefited!
If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
I'll come.

Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep
Gon. Milk-liver'd man!

That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs:

Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning Thine honour from thy suffering; that not know'st,

Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum!

France spreads his banners in our noseless land;
With pious helm thy slayer begins threats;
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and cry'st,
Alack! why does he so!

Alb. See thyself, devil!
Proper deformity seems not in the fæd
So horrid, as in woman

Gon. O vain fool!
Alb. Thou chang'd and self-cover'd thing, fur slime,

Be-monster but thy feature. Were it my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,
They are apt enough to delocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones.—Howe'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Worry, your manhood now!—

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news? [dead:]

Mess. O, my good lord, the duke of Cornwall's slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrif'd with reserves,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his master; who therewith enrag'd,
Flaw on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead:
Not out without that harmful stroke, which since Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
For actions, that these our mother crimes
So speedily can vengeance!—But, O, poor Gloucester!
Lend he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.—

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer
'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well;
But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,
May all the building in my fancy pluck
Upon my hateful life: Another way,
The news is not so tart.—I'll read and answer.

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punish-
Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'd'st the king.

And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither.
Tell me what more thou knowest.

SCENE III.—The French Camp, near Dover.

Enter Kent and a Gentleman.

Kent. Why the king of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state, Which saucy his coming forth is thought of;
which

Imports to the kingdom so much fear and
That his personal return was most requir'd,
And necessary.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Gent. The Marschal of France, Monsieur le Fer.

Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen
Over her passion; who, must rebel-like,
Sought to be the king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strive

Who should express her griefliest. You have Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
Were like a better thy: Those happy smiles,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted
thence,

As pearls from diamonds dropp'd.—In brief,
Would he a rarity must be lov'd, if all
Could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question?

Gent. Faith, once, or twice, she heav'd the name of father

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;

Cried, Sisters! sisters!—Shame of ladies! sisters!

Kent! father! sisters! What! 'tis the storm! 'tis
night!

*Let pity not be lov'd!—There she shook
The holy water from her heavenly eyes.*

And clamour mov'd on'd;—then away she started
To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,

The stars above us, govern our conditions;
Else one self mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. You spoke not with her

Gent. No.

Kent. Was this before the king return'd?

Gent. No; since

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Heath.Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be contemn'd,
Than still contemn'd and flatter'd. To be worst,
The lowest, and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in expectation, lives not in fear;
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace!
The wretch, that thou hast blown into the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. — But who comes

Enter Gloucester led by an Old Man.

My father, poorly led! — World, world, O world!
But that thy strange mutations make us hate
Life would not yield to age. [toe].

Old Man. O my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone.

Thy comforts can do me no good at all,
Thou they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no
eyes.

I stumbled when I saw: Full oft 'tis seen,
Our mean secures us; and our mere defects
Prove our commodities — Ah, dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now! Who's there?

Edg. [Aside.] O gods! Who n't can say, I am
I am worse than e'er I was. [at the worst!]

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet: The worst is not.

So long as we can say, This is the worst.

Old Man. Follow, where goes?

Glo. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

'T the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm: My son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him: I have heard more since:

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods;

They kill us for their sport.

Edg. How should this be?

Red is the trade must play the fool to sorrow.

Arise, my friend, and others. [Aside.] Bless thee,

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glo. Then, pr'ythee, get thee gone: If, for my sake,

Thou wilt undertake us, hence a mile or twain,

I'll the way to Dover, do it for ancient love;

And bring some covering for this naked soul.

Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he's mad.

Glo. 'Tis the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure:

Above the rest, be gone. [have,]

Old Man. I'll bring him the best apparel that I Come on! what will.

Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom's a cold — I cannot daub it further.
[Aside.]

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must. — Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way, and footpath. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: Bless the good man from the foul fiend; Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obdurate; Hiddeousness, prince of dumbness; Mahn, of stealing; Modo, of murder;
and Phrygian, of moping and howling;
who since possesses chaste maidens and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier: — Heavens deal so still!

Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man,
That slaves your ordinance, that will not see
Because he doth not feel, feel your power

So distributive should undo excess, [quickly];
And each man have enough. — Dost thou know

Edg. Ay, master. [Dover?]

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bounding Looks fearfully in the confined deep: [head]

Bring me but to the very brim of it,
And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear,
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm;
Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of Albany's Palace.

Enter Goneril and Edmund; Steward meeting them.

Gon. Welcome, my lord; I marvel our mild
husband

Not met us on the way: — Now, where's your master? [changed:]

Stew. Madam, within; but never man so
I told him of the army that was landed;

He smil'd at it: I told him you were coming;
His answer was, The worse: of Gloucester's treach-

And of the loyal service of his son. [cry,]

When I inform'd him, then he call'd me not;
And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side out: —

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to
him;

What like, offensive.
Gon. Then shall you go no farther.
[To Edmund.]

It is the cowardly terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs,

Which he him to an answer: Our wishes, on the way, [then;]

May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother-
Hasten his musters and conduct his powers:

I must change arms at home, and give the distaff into my husband's hands. This trusty servant

Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,

If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;

Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air; —

Conceive, and fare thee well.
Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloucester
[Exit Edmund.]

O, the difference of man, and man! To thee

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gos. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festive preparation; we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift, and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister;—farewell, my lord of Gloucester.

Enter Steward.

How now! Where's the king? [Hence:]

Stew. My lord of Gloucester hath convey'd him Some five or six and thirty of his knights, Hot questrists after him, met him at gate; Who, with some other of the lord's dependants, Are gone with him towards Dover; where they To have well-armed friends. [Hence:]

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Gos. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exeunt Gosnell and Edmund.]

Corn. Edmund, farewell,—Go, seek the traitor Gloucester,

Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us:

[Exeunt other Servants.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life Without the form of justice; yet our power Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men May blame, but not control. Who's there? The traitor!

Re-enter Servants, with Gloucester.

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky arms.

Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider.

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.]

Reg. Hard, hard!—O filthy traitor!

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I am none.

Corn. 'To this chair bind him:—Villain, thou shalt find—

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glo. Naughty lady, These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken, and accuse thee: I am your host;

With rubbers' hands, my hospitable favours

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple-answer'd, for we know the truth. [The traitors

Corn. And what confederacy have you with

Reg. Laid footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunaspeak?

Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down,

Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,

And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore

To Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at thy peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that. [The course,

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails

Pluck out his poor old eyes: nor thy fierce sister

In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up,

And quench'd the starv'd fires: yet, poor old He help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time, Thou should'st have said, Good porter, turn the key;

All cruels else subscrib'd:—But I shall see The wing'd vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shaft thou never:—Fellows, hold the chair:—

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

[Gloucester is held down in his chair, while Cornwall plucks out one of his eyes; and sets his foot on it.]

Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old,

Give me some help:—O cruel! O ye gods!

Reg. One nail will muck another; the other

Corn. If you see vengeance.— [too.]

Serv. Hold your hand, my lord;

I have serv'd you ever since I was a child;

But better service have I never done you

Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog?

Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,

I'd shake it on this quarrel: What do you mean?

Corn. My villain! [Draws, and runs at him.]

Serv. Nay, then come on, and take the chance

Of anger.

[Draws. They fight. Cornwall is wounded.]

Reg. Give me thy sword.— [To another Servant.] A peasant stand up thus!

[Snatches a sword, comes behind, and stabs him.]

Serv. O, I am slain!—My lord, you have one eye left.

To see some mischief on him:—O!

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it:—Out, vile

Where is thy lustre now? [jelly]

[Tears out Gloucester's other eye, and throws it on the ground.]

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,

To quit this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain

Thou call'st on him that hates thee: it was he

That made the overture of thy treasons to us;

Who is too good to pity thee.

Glo. O my follies!

Then Edgar was abus'd.—

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him

smell

His way to Dover.—How't, my lord! How look

you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt:—Follow me,

Turn out that eyesore villain;—throw this slave

Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed apace:

Untimely comes this hurt. Give me your arm.

[Exit Cornwall, led by Regan;—Servants

unbinding Gloucester, and lead him out.]

1 Serv. I'll never cure what wickedness I do

If this man come to good.

2 Serv. If she live long,

And, in the end, meet the old course of death,

Women will all turn monsters.

1 Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam.

To lead him where he would; his raguish need—

Allows itself to any thing. [Whites of eyes,

2 Serv. Go thou; I'll fetch some flux, and

To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him! [Exeunt.]

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No; he's a yeoman, that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman, that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning Come hizzing in upon them:—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.

Fool. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them straight:—

Come, sit thou here, most learned justice:—

[To Edgar.] Thou, sapient sir, sit here. [To the Fool.]—Now, you she fixes!—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares!—

Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam!

Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me:—

Fool. Her boat hath a leak,

And she must not speak

Why she dares not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly for two white herring. Crank not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amaz'd:

Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

Lear. I'll see their trial first:—Bring in the evidence:—

Thou rob'd man of justice, take thy place:—

[To Edgar.] And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity,

[To the Fool.] Bench by his side:—You are of the commission,

Sit you too. [To Kent.]

Edg. Let us deal justly.

Sleepest or wakest thou jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,

Thy sheep shall take no harm.

For! the cat is grey.

Lear. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress; Is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool. [proclaim]

Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks

What store her heart is made of.—Stop her

there! [place!]

Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the false justice, why hast thou let her 'scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits!

Kent. O pity!—Sir, where is the patience now,

That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much,

They'll mar my counterfeit. [Aside.]

Lear. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them:—

Avant, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, grey hound, mongrel grim,

Hound, or spaniel, brace, or lynx;

Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail;
Tom will make them weep and wail
For, with throwing thus my head,
Dogs leap the hatch, and all are dead

Do de, do de. Sessa. Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns:—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.

Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan, see what breeds about her heart: Is there any cause in nature, that makes these hard hearts?—You, sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments: you will say, they are Persian attire; but let them be changed. [To Edgar.]

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise: draw the curtains: So, so, so: We'll go to supper i'the morning: So, so, so.

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter Gloucester.

Glo. Come hither, friend. Where is the king my master?

Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not, his wits are gone. [arms;]

Glo. Good friend, I prythee take him as thy I have o'er-heard a plot of death upon him:

There is a letter ready: lay him in't,

And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy if thou should'st daily half an hour, his life,

With thine, and all that offer to defend him.

Stand in assured loss: Take up, take up;

And follow me, that will to some provision Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:— This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken causes, Which, if convenience will not allow,

Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy master; [To the Fool.]

Glo. Come, come, away. [Exeunt Kent, Gloucester, and the Fool, bearing off the King.]

Edg. When we our betters see bearing our woes,

We scarcely think our miseries our foes.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i'the mind;

Leaving free things, and happy shows, behind:

But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip. [ship.] When grief hath mates, and bearing fellows—

How light and portable my pain seems now,

When that, which makes me bend makes the king bow; He childed, as I father'd!—Tom, away:

Mark the high noises: and thyself bewray:

When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee, In thy just proof, repeals, and reconciles thee.

What will hap more to-night, safe scape the king!

Lark, lark. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.—A Room in Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Goneril, Edmund, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband; show him this letter:—the army of France is landed.—Seek out the villain Gloucester.

[Exeunt some of the Servants.]

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies — Is man no more than this? Consider him well: 'Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the out an perfume: — Ha! here's three of us are sophisticated! — Thou art the thing itself; uncombed, uncut, unshaven; like a poor bare, forked animal as thou art — O! off, you lendings: — Come; unbatten here —

[Tearing off his clothes.]
Fool. Fry'thee, nuncle, be contented; this is a naughty night to swim in. — Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest of his body cold — Look, here comes a walking fire.

Edg. 'Tis the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet: he bows at the ewew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squats the eye, and makes the bare-lip; milkeads the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

*Sent Withold footed thrice the world.
He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold;
But her alight,
And her troth plight,
And, ereast thee, witch, ereast thee!*

Kent. How fares your grace?

Enter Gloucester, with a torch.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Who's there? What art thou seek?

Glo. What are you there? Your names?

Edg. Poor Tom: that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt, and the water; that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rases, eats cow-dung for sallies; swallows the old rat, and the ditch-dug; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipped from tithing to tithing, and stocked, punished, and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapons to wear,

*But mice, and rats, and such small drev,
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.*

Beware my follower: — Peace, Smolkin; peace, thou fiend!

Glo. What, hath your grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman; Nuncle's owl, and Mahu.

Glo. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so that it doth hate what goes it. [To Edg.]

Edg. Poor Tom's a cold.

Glo. Go in with me: my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughters' hard commands: Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you; Yet have I ventur'd to come seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher: — What is the cause of this?

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer:

[Theban:]
Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill ver-

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord, He was begin to unsettle

Glo. Canst thou blame him?

Lear. His daughters seek his death: — Ah, that good

Kent. —

He said it would be thus: — Poor banish'd man! — Thou say'st, the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, I am almost mad myself: I had a son, [Friend,] Now outlaw'd from my blood: he sought my life.

But lately, very late; I lov'd him, friend. —

No father has son dearer: true to tell thee, [Storm continues.]

The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night's I do beseech your grace, — [This!]

Lear. O, cry you mercy.

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold. [Warm.]

Glo. In, fellow, there, to the hovel: keep thee

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, soothe him; let him take

Glo. Take him you on. [The fellow.]

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian

Glo. No words, no words:

Hush.

Edg. Child Rowland to the dark tower come,
His word was still, — Fir, foh, and fum,
I smell the blood of a British man.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. — A Room in Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Cornwall and Edmund.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reprovable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! 'Tis in the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True, or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloucester. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully. — I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love. [Re-enter.]

SCENE VI. — A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle.

Enter Gloucester, Lear, Kent, Fool, and Edgar.

Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully: I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience: — The gods reward your kindness! [Exit Gloucester.]

Edg. Frateretto calls me; and tells me, Nunc is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, incontinent, and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. Fry'thee, nuncle, tell me, whether a madman be a gentleman, or a yeoman!

King Lear.—I have full cause of weeping ; but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,
Or ere I'll weep. — O fool, I shall go mad !

KING LEAR. ACT III., SCENE IV.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing: There is division between the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night:—'tis dangerous to be spoken:—I have locked the letter in my closet: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged home: there is part of a power already footed: we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him; go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as so less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund: pray you, be careful.

[Exit.]

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke instantly know; and of that letter too:—This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses; no less than all: The younger rises, when the old doth fall.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Part of the Heath, with a Howl.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, enter:
The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. [Storm still.]

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Will break my heart!

Kent. I'd rather break mine own: Good my lord, enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm invades us to the skin: so 'tis to thee;

But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. 'Thou'd'st shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea,
'Thou'd'st meet the bear i'the mouth. When the mind's free,

The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what boils there.—Filial ingratitude!
Is it not as this month should tear this hand,
For lifting foul to't?—But I will punish home:—
No, I will weep no more.—In such a night
To shut me out!—Pour on: I will endure:—
In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril!—
Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,—

O, that way madness lies; let me shun that;
No more of that,—

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.
Lear. Pr'ythee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease.

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more.—But I'll go in:
In, boy; go first.—[To the Fool.] You houseless poverty,—

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.—
[Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you

From suchness such as these? O, I have ta'en Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel;
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom!

[The Fool runs out from the howl.]
Fool. Come not in here, uncle, here's a spirit.
Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit; he says his name's poor Tom. [The straw.]

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there Come forth.

Enter Edgar, disguised as a madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me!—
Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind—

Humph! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters.
And art thou come to this? [The Fool.]

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? when the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, over bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow, and hidden in his bow; set redburn by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-uched bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor:—Bless the five wits! Tom's a cold.—O, do de, do de, do de.
—Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blastings, and taking! Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes: There could I have him now,— and there,—and there,—and there again, and there. [Storm continues.]

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass? [The Fool.]

Kent. Could'st thou save nothing? Did'st thou give Fool. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all shamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air [The Fool.]

Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughter!

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir. [The Fool.]

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.—

Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers

Should have thus little mercy on their flesh?

Judicious punishment! 'Twas this flesh hogst

Thou pelican daughters

Edg. Pillicock sat on pillicock's-bill;—

Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o'the foul fiend: Obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array: Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind;
that carried my hair, swore givers in my cap, swore the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spoke words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it: Wine I used
I deeply; dice dearly; and in woman, out-para-moured the Turk: False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; Dog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, hog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women: Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend.—Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says aun, nun, ha no money, dolphin my boy, my boy, says: let him trot by!

[Storm still continues.]

Grat. I will talk further with you.

Kent. No, do not.
For confirmation that I am much more Than my out wall, open this purse, and take
What it contains: If you shall see Cordelia,
(As fear not but you shall,) show her this ring;
And she will tell you who your fellow is
That yet you do not know. Eye on this storm!
I will go seek the king. (To say.)

Grat. Give me your hand: Have you no more Kent. Few words, but, to effect, more than all yet; (your pain)
That, when we have found the king, (in which
That way; I'll this:) he that first lights on him,
Holds the other. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Heath. Storm continues.

Enter Lear and Fool.

Lear. Blow wind, and crack your cheeks! rage!
blow!
You cataracts, and hurricanoes, spout (rocks!)
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the
You sulphurous and thought-executing fires,
Vault couriers to oak-cleaving thunder bolts, Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder
Strike flat the thick rotundity o'the world!
Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once,
That make ingrateful man!

Fool. O nuncle, court holy-water in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o'door:
Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughters' blessing;
here's a nimble pities neither wise men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyfull! Spit, fire! spout,
rain!

Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness,
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,
You owe me no subscription; why then let fall
Your horrible pleasure: here I stand, your slave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man:—
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. O O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put his head in,
has a good head-piece.

*The cod piece that will house,
Before the head has any,
The head and he shall loose:—
So beggars marry many.*

*The man that makes his bed
Went he his head should make,
Shell of a corn cry we,
And turn his sleep to wake.*

—for there was never yet fair woman, but she made mouths in a glass.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience,
I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Fool. Marry, here's grace, and a cod-piece;
that's a wise man, and a fool.

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love
night,

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies
Unlull the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves: Since I was
man

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot
The affliction, nor the fear. [Carry

Lear. Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou
wretch,

That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice: Hail thee, thou bloody
hand;

Thou perjur'd, and thou simular man of virtue
That art incestuous: Cuitif, to pieces shake,
That under covert and convenient seeming,
Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close pent up guilt,

Rive your concealing continents, and cry
These dreadful summoners grace.—I am a man,
More sinned against, than sinning.

Kent. Alack, bare-headed!
Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest:

Repose you there: while I to this hard house,
(More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd);
Which even but now, demanding after you,
Denied me to come in,) return, and force
Their scantied courtesy

Lear. My wits begin to turn — Come on, my boy: How dost, my boy? Art cold? (low!)

I am cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow?

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel.

Fool fool and knave, I have one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. He that has a little tiny wit,—

With brigh, ho, the wind and the rain,—
Must make content with his fortunes fit,
For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. True, my good boy. — Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt Lear and Kent.]

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courte-an.—
I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:

When priests are more in word than matter;
When brewers mar their malt with water;
When nobles are their tailors' tutors;
No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors;
When every case in law is right;
No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;
When slanders do not live in tongues;
Nor cutpurses come not to throngs;
When usurers tell their gold i'the field;
And bawds and whores do churches build;—
Then shall the realm of Albia
Come to great confusion
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Room in Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Gloucester and Edmund.

Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this or-natural dealing: When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity! 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance

From those that she calls servants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not, my lord! If then they chanc'd
To slack you,

We could control them: If you will come to me,
(For now I spy a danger,) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty; to no more
Will I give place, or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number: What, must I come to you
With five and twenty, Regan! said you so!

Reg. And speak it again, my lord; no more with me. [favour'd.]

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well
When others are more wicked; not being the worse,

Stands in some rank of praise:—I'll go with thee;

[To Goneril.]

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty.

And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord:

What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house, where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need: our basest beg-are in the poorest thing superfluous: [Gon.]

Allow not nature more than nature needs,

Man's life is cheap as beast's: thou art a lady;

If only to go warm were gorgeous.

Why, nature needs not that thou gorgeous wear'st. [need,—]

Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true

You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need!

You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,

As full of grief as age; wretched in both!

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts

Against their father, fool me not so much

To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger!

O, let not women's weapons, water-drops,

Stain my man's cheeks!—No, you unnatural

I will have such revenges on you both, [hugs,

That all the world shall—I will do such things.—

What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be

The terrors of the earth. You think, I'll weep;

No, I'll not weep:—

I have full cause of weeping; but this heart

Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,

Or ere I'll weep:—O, fool, I shall go mad!

[Exit Lear, Goneril, Kent, and Fool]

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

[Storm heard at a distance]

Reg. This house

Is little; the old man and his people cannot

Be well bestow'd.

Gon. 'Tis his own blame: he hath put Himself from rest, and must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,

But not his follower.

Gon. So am I purpos'd.

Where is my lord of Gloucester?

Re-enter Gloucester.

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth:—he is re-turn'd.

Gon. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horses; but will I know not whither. [self.]

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads him-Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay. [winds]

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak
Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men,
The injuries that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters: Shut up your
He is attended with a desperate train; [doors;]

And what they may incense him to, being apt
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild
night:

My Regan counsels well: come out o'the storm.
[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Heath.

A storm is heard, with thunder and lightning. Enter Kent and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most un-quietly.

Kent. I know you; Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful element:

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,

That things might change, or cease: tears his white hair;

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,

Catch in their fury, and make nothing of:

Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn

The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf [couch]

Keep their fur dry, unbanned he runs,

And bids what will take all!

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to out-

His heart-struck injuries. [Just]

Kent. Sir, I do know you:

And dare, upon the warrant of my art,

Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,

Although as yet the face of it be cover'd

With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;

Who have (as who have not, that their great stars [less;]

Thru'd (and set high!) servants, who seem to

Which are to France the spies and speculations

Intelligent of our state: what hath been seen

Either in snuffs and packings of the dukes;

Or the hard rein which both of them have borne

Against the old kind king; or something deeper,

Whereof, perchance, these are but furnishings;

But, true it is, from France there comes a power

Into this scatter'd kingdom: who already,

Wise in our negligence, have secret feet

In some of our best ports, and are at point

To show their open banner.—Now to you:

If on my credit you dare build so far

To make your speed to Dover, you shall find

Some that will thank you, making just report

Of how unnatural and bemoaning sorrow

The king hath cause to plain.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;

And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer

This office to you.

I have to think so: if thou should'st not be glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulch'ring an adulteress—O, are you free?
(To Kent.)

Some other time for that—Beloved Regan,
Thy sister's naught: O Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture, here.—
(Points to his heart.)

I can scarce speak to thee: thou'lt not believe,
Of how depriv'd a quality—O Regan!
Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience: I have You less know how to value her desert. (hope,
Than she to want her duty.)

Lea. Say, how is that?
Reg. I cannot think, my sister in the least
Would fail her obligation: If, sir, perchance,
She have restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lea. My curses on her!
Reg. O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine: you should be rul'd, and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself: Therefore, I pray you,
That to our sister you do make return:
Say, you have wrong'd her, sir.

Lea. Ask her forgiveness!
Do you but mark how this becomes the house!
Dear daughter, I confess that I am old:
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg (Kneeling.
That you'll vouchsafe me remission, heal, and find
Reg. Good sir, no more: these are unwisely Return you to my sister. (tricks:
Lea. Never, Regan:

She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me; struck me with her
tongue,
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:—
All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!

Cor. Fye, fye, fye!
Lea. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You sun-stick'd foxes, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride!

Reg. O the blest gods!
So will you wish on me, when the rash mood's
on. (curse:
Lea. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my Thy tender-softed nature shall not give These o'er to harshness; her eyes are fierce, but these

Do comfort, and not burn: 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words, to scout my sizes,
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in: thou better know'st
The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half of the kingdom hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.
(T' suspects within.
Lea. Who put my man 't' the stocks?
Cor. What trumpet's that?

Enter Steward.
Reg. I know't, my sister's: this approves her letter,
That she would soon be here—Is your lady come? (pride
Lea. This is a slave, whose easy-burrow'd

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows:—
Out, varlet, from my sight!

Cor. What means your grace?
Lea. Who stunk'd my servant? Regan, I have good hope (heavens
Thou dost not know of't.—Who comes here? O

Enter Goneril.
If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause; send down, and take my
part!
Art not ashamed to look upon this beard?—
(To Goneril.

O, Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?
Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?

All's not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Lea. O, sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?—How came my man 't' the stocks?

Cor. I set him there, sir: but his own disobedience much less advancement.

Lea. You'd do it!
Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.
If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and acquit with my sister,
Diminishing half your train, owe then to me:
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lea. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!
No, rather I'll argue all roads and choose
To wage against the enmity of the air:
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl—
Necessity's sharp pinch!—Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took

Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and, squire like, pennon beg
To keep base life afloat:—Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter
To this detested groom.

(Looks on the Steward.
Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lea. I prythee, daughter, do not make me mad:

I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another:—
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my
daughter;

Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine; thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;

Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove:

Mend, when thou canst; be better, at thy les-
sure:

I can be patient: I can stay with Regan,
I, and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so, sir;
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion,
Must be content to thank you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lea. Is this well spoken now?
Reg. I dare avouch it, sir: What fifty followers?

Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many? With that both charge and danger (shout,
Speak 'gainst so great a number! How, more

Lea. How!
 Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?
Kent. No, my lord.
Fool. Ha, ha; look! he wears cruel garters!
 Horses are tied by the heads; dogs, and bears, by the neck; monkeys by the loins; and men by the legs: when a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks. [mistake]
Lea. What's he, that hath so much thy place
 To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she,
 Your son and daughter.

Lea. No.
Kent. Yes.
Lea. No, I say.
Kent. I say, yes.
Lea. No, no; they would not.
Kent. Yes, they have.
Lea. By Jupiter, I swear, no.
Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.

Lea. They durst not do't. [murder,
 They could not, would not do't; 'tis worse than
 To do upon respect such violent outrage:
 Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way
 Thou might'st deserve, or they impose, this Coming from us. [usage,

Kent. My lord, when at their home
 I did commend your highness' letters to them,
 Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
 My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post,
 Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting
 From General his mistress, salutations; [forth
 Believ'd letters, spite of intermission,
 Which presently they read: on whose contents
 They summon'd up their meiny, straight took Commanded me to follow, and attend [horse:
 The leisure of their answer; gave me cold looks:
 And meeting here the other messenger,
 Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine,
 (Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness,)
 Having more man than wit about me, drew;
 He ruin'd the house with loud and coward cries:
 Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
 The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.

Fathers, that wear rags,
 Do make their children blind;
 But fathers, that bear bags,
 Shall see their children kind.
 Fortune, that arrant whore,
 Ne'er turns the key to the poor.—

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours for thy daughters, as thou can'st tell in a year.

Lea. O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio!—down, thou climbing sorrow,
 Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the earl, sir, here within.

Lea. Follow me not;
 Stay here. [Exit.

Gent. Made you no more offence than what Kent. None. [you speak of?

How chance the king comes with so small a train?

Fool. An thou hadst been set i'th' stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserved it.

Kent. Why, fool.

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring in the winter.
 All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking. Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.

That, sir, which serves and seeks for gain,
 And follows but for form,

Will pack, when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm.

But I will tarry; the fool will stay,

And let the wise men fly:

The knave turns fool, that runs away;

The fool no knave, perdy.

Kent. Where learn'd you this, fool?

Fool. Not i'th' stocks, fool.

Re-enter Lear with Gloucester.

Lea. Deny to speak with me? they are sick? ¹
 they are weary?

They have travell'd hard to-night! Mere fetches;
 The images of revolt and flying off!
 Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My dear lord,

You know the fiery quality of the duke;

How unremovable and fix'd he is

In his own course.

Lea. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!—

Fiery? what quality? why, Gloucester, Gloucester,

I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his wife. [two]

Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them

Lea. Inform'd them! Dost thou understand

Glo. Ay, my good lord. [me, man?

Lea. The king would speak with Cornwall:

the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands her service: [three]

Are they inform'd of this?—My breath and Fiery? the fiery duke?—Tell the old duke

that—

No, but not yet:—may be, he is not well:

Infirmity doth still neglect all office,

Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves. [indis-

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the

To suffer with the body: I'll forbear;

And am fallen out with my more headier will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man.—Death on my state! wherefore [Looking on Kent.

Should he sit here? This act persuades me,

That this remotion of the duke and her is practice only. Give me my servant forth:

Go, tell the duke and his wife, I'd speak with them. [two]

Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear

Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,

'Till it cry—Sleep to death.

Glo. I'd have all well betwixt you. [Exit.

Lea. O me, my heart, my rising heart!—but,

down.

Fool. Cry to it, uncle, as the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i'th' paste alive;

she ripp'd em o'th' coxcombs with a stick, and cry'd, Down, down, down: 'Twas her brother, that, in pure kindness to his horse, better'd his hay.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and Servants.

Lea. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace!

[Kent is set at liberty]

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lea. Regan, I thank you are; I know what remains

Cora. Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offence?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Cora. No more, perchance, does mine or his, or hers.

Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain; I have seen better faces in my time. Thus stands on any shoulder that I see before me at this instant.

Cora. This is some fellow, Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A sorry roughness; and constrains the garb, Quite from his nature: He cannot flatter, he!—An honest mind and plain,—he must speak truth, As they will take it, so; if not, he's plain. These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends, Than twenty sily ducking observants, That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity, Under the allowance of your grand aspect, Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire On flickering Phoebus' front,—

Cora. What mean'st by this! Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discommend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer: he that beguiled you, in a plain accent, was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it.

Cora. What was the offence you gave him?

Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards, But Ajax is their fool. Cora. Fetch forth the stocks, ho! You stubborn ancient knave, you reverent brag, We'll teach you—[Exit.] Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn: Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king; On whose employment I was sent to you: You shall do small respect, show too bold malice Against the grace and person of my master, Stocking his messenger.

Cora. Fetch forth the stocks: As I've life and honour, there shall he sit till he is dead.

Reg. Till none! till night, my lord; and all Kent! Why, madam, if I were your father's

You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will

[Stocks brought out.]

Cora. This is a fellow of the self-same colour Our sister speaks of:—Come, bring away the stocks.

Glo. Let me henceforth your grace not to do so: His fault is much, and the good king his master

Will check him for't: your purpose'd low correction

Is such, as basest and contempt'd wretches, For pilferings and most common trespasses, Are punish'd with: the king must take it ill, That he's so slightly valued in his messenger, Should have him thus restrain'd.

Cora. I'll answer that.

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse.

To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted, For following her affairs—Put in his legs.—[Kent is put in the stocks.]

Come, my good lord; away.

[Exeunt Regan and Cornwall.]

Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,

Whose disposition, all the world well knows, Will not be rubb'd, nor stopp'd: I'll entreat for thee [travell'd hard;]

Kent. Pray, do not, sir: I have watch'd and Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. A good man's fortune may grow out at heels: Give you good morrow!

Glo. The duke's to blame in this: 'twill be ill taken. [Exit.]

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common saw:

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st To the warm sun!

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe, That by thy comfortable beams I may Peruse this letter!—Nothing almost sees miracles,

But misery:—I know 'tis from Cordelia; Who hath most fortunately been inform'd Of my obscured course; and shall find time From this enormous state,—seeking to give Losses their remedies:—All weary and o'erwatch'd, Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good night; smile once more; turn thy wheel!

[He sleeps.]

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse.

To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted, For following her affairs—Put in his legs.—[Kent is put in the stocks.]

Come, my good lord; away.

[Exeunt Regan and Cornwall.]

Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,

Whose disposition, all the world well knows, Will not be rubb'd, nor stopp'd: I'll entreat for thee [travell'd hard;]

Kent. Pray, do not, sir: I have watch'd and Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. A good man's fortune may grow out at heels: Give you good morrow!

Glo. The duke's to blame in this: 'twill be ill taken. [Exit.]

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common saw:

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st To the warm sun!

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe, That by thy comfortable beams I may Peruse this letter!—Nothing almost sees miracles,

But misery:—I know 'tis from Cordelia; Who hath most fortunately been inform'd Of my obscured course; and shall find time From this enormous state,—seeking to give Losses their remedies:—All weary and o'erwatch'd, Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good night; smile once more; turn thy wheel!

[He sleeps.]

SCENE III — A part of the Heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;

And, by the happy hollow of a tree, Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place,

'That guard, and most unusual vigilance, Does not attend my taking. While I may escape I will preserve myself; and am betrougled To take the basest and most poorest shape,

'That ever penury, in contempt of man, Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth;

Blanket my loins; elf all my hair in knots; And with presented nakedness out-face

The winds, and persecutions of the sky. The country gives me proof and precedent

Of bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices, Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms

Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary; And with this horrible object, from low farms, Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes and mills,

Sometimes with lunatick bawls, sometimes with prayers, [Toen!]

Enforce their charity.—Poor Turf! good! poor That's something yet;—Edgar I nothing am. [Exit.]

SCENE IV — Before Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Lear, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange, that they should so depart from home,

And not send back my messenger. As I learn'd,

Gent. The night before there was no purpose in them of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Reg. No marvel then, though he were ill affected:

'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the waste and spoil of his revenues,
I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,

That, if they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan —
Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like office.

Edm. 'Twas my duty, sir.
Glo. He did bewray his practice; and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?
Glo. Ay, my good lord, he is.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own pursue,

How in my strength you please. — For you, Edmund,

Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.
Corn. You know not why we came to visit
you.

Reg. This out of season: threatening dark-eyed Occasions, while Gloucester, of mine prize,
Wherein we must have use of your advice: —
(Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home; the several messengers

From hence attend despatch. Our good old
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our business.

Which craves the instant use.
Glo. I serve you, madam: —
Your graces are right welcome.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — Before Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Kent and Steward severally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee, friend: Art of the house?

Kent. Ay.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I'll shew.

Stew. Pr'ythee, if thou love me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipbury pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Stew. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal, an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd, action-taking knave; a whorson, glass-gazing, super-serviceable, finical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that wouldst be a bawd, in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, bog-gar, coward, pander, and the son and heir of a bawling bitch: one whom I will beat into clam-orous whining, if thou deny'st the least syllable of thy addition.

Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee?

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou know'st me? Is it two days ago, since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee before the king? Draw, you rogue: for, though it be night, the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you: Draw, you whorson cullionly har-ber-monger, draw! [Drawing his sword.]

Stew. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with letters against the king, and take vanity the puppet's part, against the royalty of her father:
Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks: — draw, you rascal: come your ways.

Stew. Help, ho! murder! help!

Kent. Strike, you slave; stand, rogue, stand;
you nest slave, strike.

Stew. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter Edmund, Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and Servants.

Edm. How now! What's the matter? Part.

Kent. With you, goodman boy, if you please;
come, I'll fetch you; come on, young master.

Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter
here?

Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives:
He dies, that strikes again: What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.

Corn. What is your difference? Speak.

Stew. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee; a tailor made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir; a stone-cutter, or a painter, could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours at the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Stew. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spar'd,

At suit of his grey beard, —

Kent. Thou whorson zed! thou unnecessary letter! — My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted villain into a mortar, and dash the wall of a jakes with him. — Spare my grey beard, you wagtail!

Corn. Peace, sirrah!

Stew. Peace, sirrah!

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger has a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword.

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain
Which are too intrinsic 'unloose: smooth every passion

That in the natures of their lords rebels;
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. —
A plague upon your epilepticque vags!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?
Goose, if I had you upon Sarnum plain,
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.

Corn. What art thou mad, old fellow?

Glo. How fall you out?

Stew. That

Kent. No contraries hold more subpathy,
Than I and such a knave.

Enter Gentleman.

How now! are the horses ready?

Genl. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy.

Fool. She that is maid now, and laughs at my departure, Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter. (Exit.)

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Court within the Castle of the Earl of Gloucester.

Enter Edmund and Curan meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father; and given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not: You have heard of the news abroad; I mean, the whispered ones, for they are yet but our kindling arguments.

Edm. Not I: 'Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may then, in time. Fare you well, sir. (Exit.)

Edm. The duke he here to-night? The better! Best!

That weaves itself perforce into my business! My father hath set guard to take my brother; and I have one thing, of a quizzing question, Which I must ask:—Briefness, and fortune, work I—

Brother, a word;—dearest:—Brother, I say;

Enter Edgar.

My father watches:—O sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid; You have now the good advantage of the night:—

Have you not spoken 'gainst the duke of Cornwall's coming hither; now, i'th' night, i'th' house?

And Regan with him; Have you nothing said Upon his party 'gainst the duke of Albany?

Edm. Advise yourself.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.
Edm. I hear my father coming,—Pardieu me—

In coming, I must draw my sword upon you:—Draw: Seem to defend yourself: Now quit you well. (Here!—)

Yield: come before my father;—Light, ho, Fy, brother;—Torches! torches!—(Exit) Edgar well.—

Some blood drawn on me would best opinion.

(Wounds his arm)
Of my more fierce endeavor: I have seen

Do more than this in sport.—Father! father!

Stop, stop! No help!

Enter Gloucester and Servants with torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here, stand he in the dark, his sharp sword out.

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon To stand his unperceiv'd mistress:—

Glo.

Look, sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund?

Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—(Exit Serv.)
By no means,—what? (ship;)

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lord!

But that I told him, the revenging gods 'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;

Spike, with how manifold and strong a bond The child was bound to the father;—Sir, in fine,

Seeing how loathly opposite I stood To his unnatural purpose, in full motion,

With his prepared sword, he charges home My unprovided body, lanc'd mine arm:

But when he saw my best alarm'd spirits, Bold in the quarrel's right, run'd to the encounter,

Or whether gasted by the noise I made, Full suddenly he fled.

Glo.

Let him fly far. Not in this land shall he remain uncaught; And found—Despatch.—The noble duke my master,

My worthy arch and patron, comes to-night: By his authority I will proclaim it.

That he, which finds him, shall deserve our thanks.

Bringing the murderer coward to the stake; He that conceals him, death.

Edm. When I demould him from his intent, And found him right to do it, with cursed speech I threaten'd to discover him: He replied,

Thou'st possessing bastard! dost thou think, If I would stand against thee, would the repeal

Of any trust, virtue or worth, in thee Make thy words forth'd? No; what I should dread,

As this I would; no, though thou didst produce My very character, I'd turn it all

To thy suggestion, plot, and downward practice: And thou must make a dullard of the world,

If they not thought the profits of my death Were very pregnant and potential spurs

To make thee seek it.

Glo.

Strong and fasten'd villain! Would he deny his letter!—I never got him

Hark, the duke's trumpet! I know not why he comes: (Trumpets within.)

All ports I'll bar; the villain shall not scape; The duke must grant me that: besides, his pleasure

I will send far and near, that all the kingdom May have due note of him; and of my land,

Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came hither, (News.)

(Which I can call but now.) I have heard strange news. Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short.

Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my (Lord!)

Glo. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd, it is crack'd!

Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your He whom my father nam'd! your Edgar?

Glo. O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous That tend upon my father?

Glo. I know not, madam: It is too bad, too bad—

Edm. Yes, madam, he was.

Dear goddess, hear! Suspend thy purpose, if Thou didst in end to make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!
Dry up in her the organs of increase;
And from her desperate body never spring
A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And he a thwart disnatur'd torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's pains and benefits,
To laughter and contempt; that she may feel How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!—Away, away!

[Exit.]
Alb. Now, gods, that we adore, whereof comes this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter Lear.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers, at a clap!
Within a fortnight?

Alb. What's the matter, sir?

Lear. I'll tell thee:—Life and death! I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood
thus: [To Goneril.]

That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
Should make thee worth them.—Blush and fume upon thee!

The untented woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes,
Bewep this cause again, I'll pluck you out;
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay.—Ha! is it come to this!
Let it be so:—Yet have I left a daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable;
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll flay this wolfish visage. Thou shalt find,
That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think [Thee.]

I have cast off for ever; thou shalt. I warrant [Exeunt Lear, Kent, and Attendants.]

Gon. Do you mark that, my lord?

Alb. I cannot be so partial. Goneril,
To the great love I bear you,—

Gon. Pray you content.—What, Oswald, ho!
You, sir, more know than fool, after your master.

[To the Fool.]
Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry, and take the fool with thee.

A fox when one has caught her,
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a halter;
So the fools follow after.

Gon. This man hath had good counsel:—A hundred knights!
'Tis politic, and safe, to let him keep
At point a hundred knights. Yes, that on every drewin.

Each huz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may encure his dotage with their towers,
And hold our lives in mercy.—Oswald, I say!—
Alb. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust:
Let me still take away the harms I fear,
Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart:
What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister;
What he sustains him and his hundred knights,
When I have show'd the unfitness,—How now, Oswald!

Enter Steward.

What, have you writ that letter to my sister?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to Inform her full of my particular fear;
And therein add such reasons of your own,
As may compact it more. Get you gone;
And hasten your return. [Exit Stew.] No, no,
my lord.

This milky gentleness, and course of yours,
Though I condemn it not, yet, under pardon,
You are much more attack'd for want of wisdom,
Than punish'd for harmful mildness. [Tell:]

Alb. How far your eyes may pierce, I cannot Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gon. Nay, then—

Alb. Well, well; the event.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Court before the same.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters: acquaint my daughter no further with any think you know, than comes from her demand out of the letter: If your diligence be not speedy,
I shall be there before you.

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter.

Fool. If a man's brains were in his heels, were't not in danger of kibes!

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then, I pray thee be merry; thy wit shall not go slipshod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see, thy other daughter will use thee kindly: for though she's as like this as a crab is like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell, why one's nose stands i'the middle of his face!

Lear. Na.

Fool. Why, to keep his eyes on either side his nose: that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong:—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!—Be my horses ready!

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight!

Fool. Yes, indeed: Thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take it again perforce!—Monster un-gratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have these bastards for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou should'st not have been old before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven! Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!

have part on't: and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be snatching.—Give me an egg, nunce, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i'th' middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i'th' middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thine ass on thy back over the dirt: Thou had'st little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

Fools had ne'er less grace in a year; (Singing)
For wise men are grown foppish;
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish.

Lear. When were you want to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nunce, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mother: for when thou gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

Then they for sudden joy did weep, (Singing.)
And I for sorrow sang,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among.

Pr'ythee, nunce, keep a school-master that can teach thy fool to lie; I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. If you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.

Fool. I marvel, what kin thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou't have me whipp'd for lying; and, sometimes, I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind of thing, than a fool: but yet I would not be thee, nunce: thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing in the middle: Here comes one o'the parings.

Enter Goneril.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that fretful on't? Methinks, you are too much of late i'th' frown.

Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou had'st no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure: I am better than thou art now: I am a fool, thou art nothing.—Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue; so your face (to G.) bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum.

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,

Wary of all, shall want some.—

That's a shen'd peascul. (Pointing to Lear.)

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licious fool,

But other of your insolent retinue

Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth

In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,

I had thought, by making this well known unto

you,

To have found a safe redress; but now grow fear-

By what yourself too late have spoke and done,

That you protest this course, and put it on

By your allowance; which, if you should, the fault

Would not escape censure, nor the redresses

sleep;

Where, in the tender of a wholesome weal,

Might in their working do you that offence,

Which else were shame, that then necessity

Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For you trow, nunce,

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,

That it had its head bit off by its young,

So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. Come, sir, I would you would make use of that good wisdom whereof I know you are fraught; and put away these dispositions, which of late transform you from what you rightly are.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse?—Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Does any here know me?—Why this is not Lear: does Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes? Either his notion weakens, or his discernings are lethargied.—Sleeping or waking?—Ha! sure 'tis not so.—Who is it that can tell me who I am?—Lear's shadow! I would learn that; for by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.—

Fool. Which they will make an obedient father.

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. Come, sir;

This admiration is much o'the favour

Of your other new pranks. I do beseech you

To understand my purposes aright:

As you are old and reverend, you should be wise:

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

Shows like a riotous inn: epicurism and lust

Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,

Than a graced palace. The shame itself doth

For instant remedy: Be then dear'd! (speak)

By her, that else will take the thing she begs,

A little to disquantity your train;

And the remainder, that shall still depend,

To be such men as may bestow your age,

And know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils!

Saddle my horses: call my train together—

Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee;

Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd rabble

Make servants of their betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Wee, that too late repents.—O, sir, are you come?

Alb. I have, my lord.

Is it my will? (To Alb.) Speak, sir.—Prepare

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,

More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,

Than the sea-monster!

Alb. Pray, sir, be patient.

Lear. Detested kite! thou liest: (To Goneril.)

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,

That all particulars of duty know;

And in the most exact regard support

The worship of their name.—O most small

fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!

Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature (love)

From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all

And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!

Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in,

(Striking his head.)

And thy dear judgment out!—Go, go, my people.

Alb. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant

Of what hath mov'd you.

Lear. It may be so, my lord.—Hear Nature,

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve?
Kent. You.
Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?
Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would fain call master.
Lear. What's that?
Kent. Authority.
Lear. What services canst thou do?
Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly; that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualify'd in: and the best of me is diligence.
Lear. How old art thou?
Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing; I have years on my back forty-eight.
Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me; if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner.—Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither:

Enter Steward.

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

Stew. So please you,—
Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clot-poll back.—Where's my fool, ho!—I think the world's asleep.—How now! where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answer'd me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertain'd with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! say'st thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken: for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your highness is wrong'd.

Lear. Thou hast remember'd me of mine own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't.—But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.—Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, call hither my fool.—

Re-enter Steward.

O, you sir, you sir, come you hither: Who am I?
Stew. My lady's father.

Lear. My lady's father! my lord's knave: you whoreson dog! you slave! you cur!

Stew. I am none of this, my lord; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you handy looks with me, you rascal!

Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripp'd neither; you base foot-ball player.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow: thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away: I'll teach you differences; away, away: if you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry: but away: go to; Have you wisdom? I see.

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest of thy service.

[Giving Kent money.]

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too;—Here's my cockcomb.

Lear. How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my cockcomb.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. Why! For taking one's part that is out of favour: Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: There, take my cockcomb: Why, this fellow has banish'd two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my cockcomb.—How now, nuncle! 'Would I had two cuxens, and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my cockcombs myself: There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog that must to kennel; he must be whipp'd out, when Lady, the brach, may stand by the fire and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle:—

Have more than thou showest,
 Speak less than thou knowest,
 Lend less than thou owest,
 Ride more than thou guest,
 Learn more than thou trowest,
 Set less than thou throwest;
 Leave thy drink and thy whore,
 And keep in-a-door,
 And thou shalt have more
 Than two tens to a score.

Lear. This is nothing, fool.

Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfeeling lawyer; you give me nothing for't: Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. Pr'ythee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

[To Kent.]

Lear. A bitter fool!

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

Lear. No, ind; teach me.

Fool. That fool that counsel'd thee

To give away thy land.

Come place him here by me.—

Or do thou for him stand:

The sweet and bitter fool

Will presently appear;

The one in motley here,

The other found out there.

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away;

that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not alter'd; thou fool, my lord.

Fool. No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would

Edm. This is the excellent foppery of the world! that, when we are sick in fortune, (often the surfeit of our own behaviour,) we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars; as if we were villains by necessity; fools, by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and traitors, by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence; and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: An admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his greatest evasion to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my activity was under some major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous—Tut, I should have been that: Am, had the malignant star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter Edgar

and put he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy: My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam.—O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! Edm., in, in, in.

Edg. How now, brother Edmund! What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of, succeed unhappily; as of dissimilarity between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, seditions and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, disruption of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomer?

Edm. Come, come; when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spoke you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word, or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Betink yourself, wherein you may have offended him; and at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have a contentment forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes down; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging: from whence I will duly bring you to hear say I can speak: Pray you, go; there's my key:—If you do stir abroad, be armed.

Edg. Armed, brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; go armed: I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you: I have told you what I have seen and heard, but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it: Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you soon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—(Exit Edgar.)

A credulous father, and a brother subtle,
Whose nature is so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practises rule easy:—I see the business.—

Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
All with me's meet, that I can fashion fit. (Exit.)

SCENE III.—A Room in the Duke of Albany's Palace.

Enter Goneril and Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Stew. Ay, madam. (hour)

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me! every He flashes into one gross crime or other, That sets us all at odds: I'll not endure it! His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us

On every trifle:—When he returns from hunting, I will not speak with him; say, I am sick:—

If you come slack of former services, You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.

Stew. He's coming, madam; I hear him.

(Horns within.)
Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please.

You and your fellows: I'd have it come to question if he dislike it, let him to my sister,

Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one, Not to be over-ruled, the old man

That still would manage those authorities, That he hath given away!—Now, by my life;

Old fools are babes again; and must be used With checks, as flatteries,—when they are seen

Remember what I have said. (about.)

Stew. Very well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you:

What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall, That I may speak:—I'll write straight to my sister,

To hold my very course:—Prepare for dinner. (Re-enter.)

SCENE IV.—A Hall in the same.

Enter Kent, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow, That can my speech diffuse, my good intent

May carry through itself to that full issue For which I raz'd my likeness.—Now, demand!

Kent. If thou can'st serve where thou dost stand out:—(demand.)

(So may it come!) thy master, whom thou lov'st, Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter Lear, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner; go, get it ready. (Exit an Attendant.) How now, what art thou?

Kent. A man, sir.

Lear. What dost thou profess? What would'st thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly, that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight, when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What would'st thou?

Kent. Service.

taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit together: If our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last sur-render of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and it's the best.
(Exeunt.)

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Earl of Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Edmund, with a letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my godless; to thy law

My services are bound: Wherefore should I Stand in the plague of custom; and permit The curiosity of nations to deprive me, For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines

Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore When my dimensions are as well compact, My mind as generous, and my shape as true, As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base!

Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take More composition and fierce quality, Than doth within a dull, stale, tired bed, Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops, Got 'tween asleep and wake!—Well then, Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land: Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund, As to the legitimate: Fine word—legitimate! Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed, And my invention thrive, Edmund the base Shall top the legitimate; grow; I prosper:—Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! And France in choler parted!

And the king gone to-night! suborn'd him Comin'd to exhibition! All this done Upon the god!—Edmund! How now; what news!

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading?

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No? What need'd then that terrible dispatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your over-looking.

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads.] This policy, and reserve of age, makes the world's ball to the best of our fancy; keeps our fortunes from us, till our oldness cannot resist them. I bourn to find an idle and fond bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it becometh power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I wak'd him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar.—Humph!—Conspiracy!—Sleep till I wak'd him.—you should enjoy half his revenue.—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in? When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my chest.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish! Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where, if you suddenly proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to test my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an articular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and carefully loves him.—Heaven and earth!—Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him, I pray you; frame the business after your own wisdom: I would outstate myself, to be in a due resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently: convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects: love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide; in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked between son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: Macinations, hollownests, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disqually to our graves!—Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully.—And the noble and true-hearted Kent banish'd! his offence, honesty!—Strange! strange!

(Exit.)

Re-enter Gloucester; with France, Burgundy, and Attendants

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble Lear. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter: What, in the
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

Bar. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.

Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n: Sir, there she stands;

If aught within that little, seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure piec'd,
And nothing more, may fill up her grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Bar. I know no answer.

Lear. Sir,
Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new-adapted to our hate, (oath,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our
Take her, or leave her?

Bar. Pardon me, royal sir;
Electron makes not up on such conditions.

Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king.

(To France.)
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech
you

To avert your liking a more worthy way,
Than on a wretch whose nature is unsham'd
Almost to acknowledge here.

France. This is most strange!
That she, that even but now was your best object,

The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Must best, must dearest, should in this trice of
time

Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,

That wonders it, or your fore-vench'd affection
Fall into taint: which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your majesty,
(If for I want that glib and oily art, (tend,
To speak and purport not; since what I well in-till do't before I speak,) that you make known it is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
'That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour:
Best even for want of that, for which I am richer.

A still-convincing eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though, not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou
Had'st not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke.
That it intends to do!—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects, that stand Aloof from the entire point. Will you have her?

She is herself a derry

Bar. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing: I have sworn: I am firm.
Bar. I am sorry then, you have so lost a father,
That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife. (ing poor;

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art must rich, be Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despis'd!
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away.

neglect
My love should kindle to inflame'd respect.—
Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance.

Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy,
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind:
Thou lovest here, a better where to find.

Lear. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine; for we

Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again:—Therefore be gone,
Without our grace, our love, our benison.
Come, noble Burgundy.

(Flourish. Exeunt Lear, Burgundy, Cornwall, Albany, Gloucester, and Attendants.)
France. Bid farewell to your sisters

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd
eyes

Cordelia leaves you: I know you what you are;
And, like a sister, am most loath to call Your faults, as they are nam'd. Use well our father:

To your professed bosoms I commit him:
But yet, alas! stood I within his grace.
I would prefer him to a better place.

So farewell to you both.

Goa. Prescribe not us our duties.

Ray. Let your study
Be, to content your lord: who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience scanted,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plaited cunning
Who cover faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.
(Exeunt France and Cordelia.)

Goa. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think, our father will hence to-night.

Ray. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

Goa. You see how full of changes his age is;
the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he always lov'd our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off, appears too grossly.

Ray. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Goa. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition, but, therewithal, the unsuly waywardness that infirm and obliquit years bring with them.

Ray. Such uncertain starts as we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Goa. There is further compliment of leave-

Which the most precious square of sense possesses;

And find, I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love.

Cor. Then poor Cordelia! [Aside.]

And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More richer than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this simple third of our fair kingdom;
No less a space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that confid'd on Goneril. — Now, our joy,
Although the last, not least; to whose young
love

The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy, Strive to be interess'd; what can you say, to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing!

Cor. Nothing. [again.]

Lear. Nothing can come of nothing: speak
Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heaven
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond; nor more, nor less.

Lear. How, how, Cordelia? mend your speech
Lest it may mar your fortunes. [a little.]

Cor. Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and must honour you.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
They love you, all? Haply, when I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care, and duty:
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.

Lear. But goes this with thy heart?

Cor. Ay, good my lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so, — 'thy truth then by the dower:

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun;
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.

Lear. Good my liege. —

Kent. Peace, Kent!
Come not between the dragon and his wrath:
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. — Hence, and avoid my sight! [To Cordelia.]

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her! — Call France; —
Who stirs?

Call Burgundy. — Cornwall, and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third:

Let pride, which the calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty. — Ourselves, by monthly course,

With reservation of an hundred knights,

By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode Make with you by due turn. Only we still retain

The name, and all the additions to a king;

The sway,

Revenue, execution of the rest,

Belov'd sons, be yours: which to confirm,

This curious part between you.

[Giving the crown.]

Kent. Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,

Low'd as my father, as my master follow'd,

As my great patron thought on in my prayers, —

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What would'st thou do, old man? [speak.]

Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour's bound.

When majesty stoops to folly, Reverse thy doom;
And, in thy best consideration, check

This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment.

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sound
Reverbs no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn

To wage against thine enemies; nor fear to lose

Thy safety being the motive. [It.]

Lear. Out of my sight!

Kent. See better, Lear, and let me still remain

The true blank of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo, —

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king.

Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O vassal! miscreant!

[Laying his hand on his sword.]

Alb. Corn. Dear sir, forbear.

Kent. Do;

Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow

Upon the foul disease. Revok'st thy gift;

Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,

I'll tell thee, thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!

Ou thine allegiance hear me! —

Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow, [pride.]

(Which we durst never yet,) and, with strain'd

To come betwixt our sentence and our power;

(Which nor our nature nor our place can bear.)

Our potency made good, take thy reward.

Five days we do allot thee, for provision

To shield thee from diseases of the world;

And, on the sixth, to turn thy back back

Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following

Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,

The moment is thy death: Away! by Jupiter,

This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well, king: since thus thou wilt appear,

Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. —

The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid

[To Cordelia.]

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said! —

And your large speeches may your deeds approve,

[To Goneril and Goneril.]

That good effects may spring from words of

love. —

Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;

He'll shape his old course in a country new.

[Exit.]

SCENE.—Britain.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Room of State in King Lear's Palace.

Enter Kent, Gloucester, and Edmund.

Kent I thought, the king had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weigh'd, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd to it.

Kent I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: whereupon she grew round-womb'd; and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

Glo. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer, in my account: though this knave came somewhat saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My lord of Kent: remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glo. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again:—The king is coming.

[Trumpets sound within.]

Enter Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Goneril, Regan, Cordelia, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

Glo. I shall, my liege.

[Enter Gloucester and Edmund.]

Lear. Mean-time we shall express our darker purpose.

Give me the map there.—Know, that we have in three, our kingdom: and 'tis our fast intent To shake all cares and business from our age: Conferring them on younger strengths, while we Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany, We have this hour a constant will to publish Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,

And here are to be answer'd.—Till me, my (Since now we will divest us, both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state,) Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?

That we our largest bounty may extend Where merit doth most challenge it.—Goneril, Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon.

Sir, I [natter,

Do love you more than words can wield the Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty; Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare;

No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour:

As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found. A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;

Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Cor. What shall Cordelia do? Love, and be silent. [Aside.]

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd, With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads, We make these lady: To thine and Albany's issue.

Be this perpetual.—What says our second Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister,

And prize me at her worth. In my true heart I find, she names my very deed of love;

Only she comes too short,—that I profess Myself an enemy to all other joys,

Our king, and all his company.
That he can hither come so soon,
Is by your fancy's thankful boon. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Temple of Diana at Ephesus; Thaisa standing near the Altar, as high Priestess; a number of Virgins on each side; Cerimon and other Inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter Pericles, with his Train; Lysimachus, Helicanus, Marina, and a Lady.

Per. Hail, Dian! to perform thy just command,
I here confess myself the king of Tyre;
Who, frighted from my country, did wed
The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.
At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth
A maid-child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,
Wears yet thy silver livery. She at Tharsus
Was nurs'd with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
He sought to murder; but her better stars
Brought her to Mytilene; against whose shore
Educing her fortunes brought the maid aboard us.
Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thai. Voice and favour!—
You are, you are—O royal Pericles!—[She faints.]

Per. What means the woman? she dies! help
Cer. Noble sir, [gentleman]
If you have told Diana's altar true,
This is your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no;
I threw her o'erboard with these very arms.

Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.
Per. 'Tis most certain.

Cer. Look to the lady:—O, she's but o'erjoy'd.
Early, one blust'ring morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I up'd the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and Here in Diana's temple. [plac'd her]

Per. May we see them?
Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house.

Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is Recover'd.

Thai. O, let me look!
If he be none of mine, my sanctity
Will to my sense bend no licentious ear.
But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,
A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!
Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead,
And drown'd.

Per. Immortal Dian!
Thai. Now I know you better.—
When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring.

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness

Makes my past miseries sport: You shall do
That on the touching of her lips I may [well,
Melt, and no more be seen. O come, he buried
A second time within these arms.

Mar. My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.
[Kisses Thaisa.]

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;
Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina,
For she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd, and mine own!
Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thai. I know you not.
Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre,

I left behind an ancient substitute,
Can you remember what I call'd the man?
I have nam'd him oft.

Thai. 'Twas Helicanus then.

Per. Still confirmation:
Embrace him, dear Thaisa: this is he.
Now do I long to hear how you were found,
How possibly preserv'd; and whom to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man Through whom the gods have shown their power; that one

From first to last resolve you.

Per. Reverend sir,
The gods can have no mortal officer
More like a god than you. Will you deliver
How this dead queen re-lives?

Cer. I will, my lord.
Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with
her;

How she came placed here within the temple;
No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Diana!
I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer
My night oblations to thee. Thaisa,

This prince, the fair-betrothed of your daughter
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,

This ornament that makes me look so dismal,
Will I, my lov'd Marina, clip to form;

And what this fourteen years no razor touch'd,
To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit,
Sir, that my father's dead. [my queen,

Sir, that my father's dead. [my queen,
We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days;
Our son and daughter shall in Tyre reign.
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Gower.

Gow. In Antioch, and his daughter, you have heard

Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:
In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen (Although assail'd with fortune fierce and keen)

Virtue preserv'd from fell destruction's blast, Led on by heaven, and crown'd with joy at last.

In Helicanus may you well descry
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears
The worth that learned charity eye wears.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their owned deed, and honour'd
name

Of Pericles, to rage the city turn;
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them; although not done, but meant.

So on your patience evermore attending.
New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending. [Exit Gower.]

Per. O, stop there a little!
This is the rarest dream: that e'er I did sleep
Did mock and fool withal: this cannot be.
My daughter's buried. [Aside.] Well;—where were you bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mer. You'll scarce believe me; 'twere best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:—
How came you in these parts? where were you bred? [He.]

Mer. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave
Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd
A villain to attempt it, who having drawn,
A crew of pirates came and rescued me;
Brought me to Mitylene. But, now, good sir,
Whether will you have me? Why do you weep?
It may be.

You think me an impostor: no good faith;
I am the daughter of king Pericles,
If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!

Hel. Calls my gracious lord?

Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Must wise in general: Tell me, if thou canst,
What this maid is, or what is like to be.
That thus hath made me weep!

Hel. I know not: but

Here is the rosent, sir, of Mitylene,
Speaks nobly of her.

Per. She would never tell

Her parentage: being demanded that,
She would at still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir;
Give me a push, put me to present pain;
Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me,
O'erbear the shores of my mortality,
And drown me with their sweetness. O, come
hither,

Thou that begot'st him that did thee begot;
Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus,
And found at sea again!—O Helicanus,
Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as loud
As thunder threatens us: This is Marina.—
What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,
For truth can never be confirm'd enough,
Though doubts had all over sleep.

Mer. First, sir, I pray,
What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
(As in the rest thou hast been goodlike perfect.)
My drown'd queen's name, thou art the heir of kingdom.

And another life to Pericles thy father.

Mer. Is it no more to be your daughter, than
To say, my mother's name was Thaisa?
Thaisa was my mother, who did end,
The minutes I began.

Per. Now, blessing on thee, rise: thou art my child.

Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus,
(Not drest at Tharsus, as she should have been,
By savage Cleon,) she shall tell thee all:
To whom thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge,
She is thy very princess.—Who is this?

Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mitylene,
Who, hearing of your melancholy state,
Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you, sir.

Give me my robes; I am wild in my beholding
O heavens bless my girl! But hark, what music!—
Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him

O'er, point by point, for ye the seems to doubt.
How sure you are my daughter. — But what Hail My lord, I hear none. [Music!]

Per. None!

The music of the spheres: list, my Marina.

Per. It is not good to cross him; give him way.

Per. Rarest sounds!

Do ye not hear?

Per. Music! My lord, I hear—

Per. Most heavenly music!

It nips me unto list'ning, and thick slumber

Hangs on mine eye-lids: let me rest. [He sleeps.]

Per. A pillow for his head:

[The curtain before the pavilion of Pericles is closed.]

So leave him all. Well, my companion-friends,

If this but answer to my just belief,

I'll well remember you.

[Exit Lysimachus, Helicanus, Marina, and attendant Lady.]

SCENE II. — The same.

Pericles on the deck asleep; Diana appearing to him as in a vision.

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus; hie thee
And do upon mine altar sacrifice. [thither.]
There, when my maiden priests are met together,
Before the people all,

Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:

To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's call,

And give them repetition to the life.

Perform my bidding, or thou liv'st in woe:

Do't, and be happy, by my silver bow.

Awake, and tell thy dream. [Diana disappears.]

Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentine,

I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter Lysimachus, Helicanus, and Marina.

Hel. Sir,

Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to
The inhospitable Cleon; but I am [strike]

For other service first: toward Ephesus

Turn our blown sails; oft have I'll tell thee

why.— [To Helicanus.]

Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,

And give you gold for such provision

As our intents will need? [ashore.]

Per. With all my heart, sir; and when you come

I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail,

Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems

You have been noble towards her.

Per. Sir, lend your arm

Per. Come, my Marina. [Exit.]

Enter Gower, before the temple of Diana at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run,

More a little, and then done.

This, as my last boon, give me,

(For such kindness must relieve me.)

That you aptly will suppose

What pageantry, what fests, what shows

What minstrelsy, and pretty din.

The regent made in Mitylin.

To greet the king. So he has thriv'd,

That he is proud to be wiv'd

To fair Marina: but in no wise,

Till he had done his sacrifice.

As Dian bade: whereon heur bound,

The interin, pray you, all consume,

In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd

And wishes fall out as they're wiv'd.

At Ephesus, the temple sea,

And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,
Which now are midway stord;
She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow maidens, now within
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side

[He whispers one of the attendant Lords.—

Exit Lord in the barge of Lysimachus.

Hel. Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit

That bears recovery's name But, since your
We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you further.

That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O, sir, a courtesy
Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every graft would send a caterpillar,
And so inflict our province.—Yet once more Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir, I will recount it;—
But, see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the barge, Lord, Marina, and a young Lady.

Lys. O, here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!
Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. A gallant lady.

Lys. She's such, that were I well assur'd she came

Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish
No better child, and think me rarely wed.
Fair one, all goodness that cousin's in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:
If that thy prosperous artificial feat
Can draw him but to answer thee in ought,
Thy sacred physick shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her,
And the gods make her prosperous!

Lys. Mark'd he your music?

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear:—

Per. Hym! ha!

Mar. I am a maid,

My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, camest like: she speaks,
My lord, that, nay be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world and aukward casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak.

(Aside.)
Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine—was it not thus I what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage, you would not do me violence.

Per. I do think so.
I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me.—
You are like something that—What country—
Here of these shores?

[woman?]

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I'm great with woe, and shall deliver
My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square
brows;

Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight:
As silver-vein'd: her eyes as jewel-like,
And clad as richly: in pace another Juno:
Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hunger;

The more she gives them speech.—Where do you
Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?

Mar. Should I tell my history,
'Twould seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Pr'ythee speak;

Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Most as just, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crown'd truth to dwell in: I'll believe
And make my senses credit thy relation.—
These
To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st
Like one I lov'd indeed. What were thy friends?
Durst thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee,) that thou
From great descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st
Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing indeed
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story;
If thou consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look Like patience, gazing on kings' graves, and smiling
Extrinsically out of act. What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind friend?

Recount, I do beseech thee; come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, sir, is Marina.

Per. O, I am mock'd,
And thou by some increased god sent hither
To make the world laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good sir,

Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient;
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name Marina,
Was given me by one that had some power;
My father, and a king.

Per. How! a king's daughter!

Mar. Yea, you said you would believe me;
But, not to be a trouble of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are so fair?
No motion? Well; speak on. Where were you
And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Cal'd Marina,
For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea? thy mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychdona bath'd off
Deliver'd weeping.

Bowl. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mer. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art.

Since they do better thee in their command. Thou shalt not find a place, for which the pained'st send.

Of hell would not in reputation change: Thou'rt the damn'd door-keeper to every coasted That hither comes enquiring for his tib; To the cholerick fasting of each rogue thy ear is liable: thy very food is such As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.

Bowl. What would you have me? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one!

Mer. Do any thing but this thou dost. Empty Old receptacles, common sewers, of filth; Serve by indenture to the common hangman; Any of these ways are better yet than this; For that which thou professest, a baboon.

Could he but speak, would own a name too dear. O that the gods would safely from this place Deliver me! Here, here is gold for thee. If that thy master would gain aught by me, Prud'aim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance, With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast; And I will undertake all these to teach. I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Bowl. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mer. Prove that I cannot, take me home again, And prostitute me to the basest groom That doth frequent your house.

Bowl. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: If I can place thee, I will.

Mer. But, amongst honest women?

Bowl. 'Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have honour'd you, there's no going but by their consent; therefore I will make them acquainted with your person, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can: excuse your ways. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Marina thus the brother escapes, and chance into an honest house, our story says. She sings like one immortal, and she dances As goddess-like to her admur'd lays: Deep clerks she dances: and with her need compasses

Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry;

That even her art sisters the natural roses; Her inkle, silk, twine with the rubied cherry: That pearls lack'st she woe of noble race. Who pour their beauty on her; and her rain she gives the curd'ed lawd. Here we her place;

And to her father turn our thoughts again. Where we left him, on the sea. We there him lost;

Whence, driven before the winds, he is arriv'd [coast]

Here where his daughter dwells; and on this beach he now sits at anchor. The city striv'd

God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence

Lysimachus our Tyrian ship espies, His bunnies sable, trimm'd with rich expence; And to him in his barge with fervour hies. In your supposing once more put your sight; Of heavy Pericles think this the bark: Where, what is done in action, more, if might, Shall be discover'd; please you, sit, and hark. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—On board Pericles' Ship, off Mitylene. A close Pavilion on deck, with a curtain before it; Pericles within it, reclined on a Couch. A Barge lying beside the Tyrian Vessel.

Enter Two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian vessel, the other to the barge; to them Helicanus.

Tyr. Sail. Where's the lord Helicanus? he can resolve you. [To the Sailor of Mitylene.]

O here he is—

Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene, And in it is Lysimachus the governor, Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?

Hel. That he have his. Call up a new gentleman.

Tyr. Sail. No, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Doth your lordship call?

Hel. Gentlemen, [you, There is some of worth would come aboard; I pray To greet them fairly.]

[The Gentlemen and the Two Sailors descend, and go on board the barge.]

Enter from thence, Lysimachus and Lords; the Tyrian Gentlemen, and the Two Sailors.

Tyr. Sail. Sir,

This is the man that can, in aught you would, Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! The gods preserve you!

Hel. And you, sir, to out-live the age I am,

And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.

Being on shore, howwring of Neptune's triumphs, Seeing this gaudy vessel ride before us, I wou'd to it, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, sir, what is your place?

Lys. I am governor of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir,

Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;

A nun, who for this three months hath not spoken To any one, nor taken sustenance, But to prorogue his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperature?

Hel. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat; But the main grief of all springs from the loss Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then?

Hel. You may, indeed, sir.

But bootless is your sight; he will not speak To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him, sir: [Pericles discovered.] thus was a gaudy person,

Till the disaster, that, one mortal night,

Drive him to this. [Hail!]

Lys. Sir, king, all hail! the gods preserve you!

Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

1 Lord. Sir, we have a mad in Mitylene, I durst Would win some words of him [wager, Lys. 'Tis well betthought.

She, questionless, with her sweet harmony And other chaste attractions, would allure,

Lys. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou would'st say.

Baud. Your honour knows what 'tis to say, well enough.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth

Boul. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, pr'ythee?

Boul. O, sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter Marina

Baud. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;—never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you;—leave us.

Baud. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do

Baud. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man.

[To Marina, whom she takes aside.]

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Baud. Next he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Baud. 'Tis you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Baud. My lord, she's not paced yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together.

[Exeunt Baud, Pander, and Boul.]

Lys. Go thy way.—Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. What I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you think this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your hert-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else, look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place. Come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good.

Lys. That thought you worthy of it. [Be sage.]

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—

Mar. For me,

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune Hath plac'd me here within this loutsome ste, Where, since I came, diseases have been sold Dearer than physick,—O that the good gods Would set me free from this unhallow'd place, Though they did change me to the meanest bird That flies i'th' purer air!

Lys. I did not think

Thou could'st have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou could'st.

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind,

Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee:

Forever still in that clear way thou goest,

And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughtless

That I came with no ill intent: for to me

The very d'ors and windows favour vilely.

Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue, and

I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.—

Hold; here's more gold for thee—

A curse upon him, die he like a thief,

That rules thee of thy goodness! If thou hear'st from me,

It shall be for thy good

[As Lyndruchus is putting up his purse,

Boul. enters.]

Boul. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Avarit, thou damned door-keeper! Your house,

But for this virgin that doth prop it up,

Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away!

[Exit Lyndruchus.] How's this? We must take another course: with you, if your perish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope, shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boul. I must have your manhood taken off, or the common haggman shall execute it. Come your way. We'll have no more gentlemen drives away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Baud.

Baud. How now! What's the matter?

Boul. Worse and worse, mistress: She has here spoken holy words to the lord Lyndruchus.

Baud. O abominable!

Boul. She makes our profession as it were to stink afore the face of the gods.

Baud. Merry, hang her up for ever!

Boul. 'The noblemen would have dealt with her like a nobelman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too.

Baud. Boul, take her away; use her at thy pleasure: crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest nullable.

Boul. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Baud. She conjures: away with her. Would she had never come within my doors! Merry hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of woman-kind? Merry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays!

[Exit Baud.] How!

Boul. Come, mistress; come your way with us.

Mar. Whither would you have me? [Dear]

Boul. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee tell me one thing first.

Boul. Come now, your one thing

Mar. What canst thou wish thus enemy to be!

She did disclaim my child, and stood between
Her and her fortunes: None would look on her,
But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a malkin,
Not worth the time of day. It pierced me thorough;

And though you call my course unnatural,
You not your child well loving, yet I find,
It creaks me, as an enterprise of kindness,
Perform'd to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles,
What should he say? We wept after her hearse,
And even yet we mourn: her monument
Is almost finished, and her epitaphs
In glittering golden characters express
A general praise to her, and care in us
At whose expense 'tis done.

Cle. Then art like the harpy,
Which, to betray, doth wear an angel's face,
Seize with an eagle's talons.

Dion. You are like one, that superstitiously
Doth swear to the evils, that winter kills the flies;
But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

Enter Gower, before the monument of Marina at Tharsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short:

Snail seas in cockles have, and wish but for't;
Making, (to take your imagination.)

You burn to learn, reason to region,
By you being purg'd, we commit no crime

To use one language, in such several clime,
Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you (you

To learn of me, who stand i'th' gaps to teach
The stars of our story.

The stars of our story
Is now again thwarting the wayward seas,
(Attended on by many a lord and knight.)

To see his daughter, all his life's delight.
Old Escanes, whom Helicmus late

Adysac'd in time to great and high estate,
Is left to govern. Bear you it in mind,
Old Helicmus goes along behind.

Well-sailing ships, and bounteous winds have brought.

This king to Tharsus, (think his pilot thought;
So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow ou.)

To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone,
Like moles and shadows see them move

awhile;
Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

Dumb show.

Enter at one door, Pericles with his Train; Cleon and Dionysa, at the other. Cleon shows Pericles the tomb of Marina; whereat Pericles makes lamentation, puts on sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then Cleon and Dionysa return.

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show! [woe;]

This borrow'd passion stands for true old
And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,
With sighs shot through, and biggest tears

o'erflow'd.
Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;
He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears
A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears,
And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit
The epitaph is for Marina writ
By wicked Dionysa.

[Reads the inscription on Marina's monument.

*The fairest, sweet'st, and best, has here,
Who wither'd in her spring of youth,
She was of Tyros, the king's daughter,
On whom foul death hath made this slaughter:
Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,
Thetis, being proud, swallow'd some part o'the
earth,*

*Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd,
Hath Thetis' birth-child on the heavens bestow'd:
Wherefore she does, (and swears she'll never sind.)*

Make raging battery upon shores of flint.

No visor does become black villany,
So well as soft and tender flattery.
Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,
And bear his courses to be ordered
By lady fortune: while our scenes display
His daughter's woe and heavy wail-a-day,
In her unholy service. Penance then,
And think you now are all in Mitylen. [Exit.]

SCENE V. — Mitylene. A Street before the Brothel.

Enter, from the Brothel, Two Gentlemen.

1 Genl. Did you ever hear the like?

2 Genl. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone

1 Genl. But to have divinity preached there!
did not ever dream of such a thing!

2 Genl. No, no. Come, I am far more mure law-dy-houses: Shall we go hear the vesper sing?

1 Genl. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous;
but I am out of the road of rutting, for ever

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. — The same. A Room in the Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and Boult.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had ne'er come here

Bawd. Fye, fye upon her; she is able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation.

We must either get her ravished, or be rid of her.
When she should do for clients her fitness, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-reausons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a pur-tan of the devil, if he should cheapen a kism of her.

Boult. Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll dis-furnish us of all our cavaliers, and make all our sweaters priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. Faith, there's no way to be rid on't, but by the way to the pox. Here comes the lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and lowly, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers.

Enter Lysimachus.

Lys. How now! How a dozen of virginities!
Bawd. Now, the gods to bless your honour!

Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so: 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would—but there never came her like in Mitylene.

Para. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment.

[Exeunt Pander and Pirates.
Bond. Boul, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity: and cry, He that will give most, shall have her first. Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boul. Performance shall follow. [Exit Boul.
Mar. Alack, that Leontine was so slack, so slow! (He should have struck, not spoke;) or that these pirates,

(Not enough barbarous,) had not overboard thrown me, to seek my mother!

Bond. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Bond. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse thee not.

Bond. You are fit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault.

To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die.

Bond. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Bond. Yea, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Bond. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Bond. Marry, whip thee, quelling! I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Bond. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up—Boul's returned.

Enter Boul.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?
Boul. I have cried her almost to the number of her hours; I have drawn her picture with my voice.

Bond. And I pray thee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boul. Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very deep digestion.

Bond. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.

Boul. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers 't'he hams?

Bond. Who? monsieur Pericles?

Boul. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Bond. Well, well; as for him, he brought his dunsen luther: here he does but repair it. I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boul. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we shall lodge them with this sign.

Bond. Pray you, come luther awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me; you must seem to do that fearfully, which you commit willingly; to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pity in your lovers: Seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Boul. O, take her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Bond. Thou say'st true, 'faith, so they must, for your bride goes to that with alms, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boul. 'Faith, some do, and some do not.

Bond. mistress, if I have bargain'd for the just,— Bond. Thou may'st cut a morsel off the spit.

Boul. I may so.

Bond. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boul. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Bond. Boul, spend thou that in the town: report what a journey we have. You'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Boul. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels, as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Bond. Come your ways: follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep,

Untied I still my virgin knot will keep.

Diana. And my purpose!

Bond. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Tharass. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter Cleon and Dionysa.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be wisdom?

Cle. O Dionysa, such a piece of slaughter

'The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion.

I think

You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world,

I'd give it to undo the dead. O lady,

Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess

To equal any single crown o'the earth.

I'the justice of compare! O villain Leontine,

Whom thou hast poison'd too!

If thou hadst drunk to him, it had been a kindness

Becoming well thy feat: what canst thou say,

When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates,

To foster it, or ever to prevent it.

She died by night: I'll say so. Who can cross it?

Unless you play the impious innocent,

And for an honest attribute, cry out,

She died by foul play.

Cle. O, go to. Well, well,

Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods

Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think

The pretty wrens of Tharass will fly hence,

And open thus to Pericles. I do shame

To think of what a noble strain you are,

And of how coward a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding

Who ever but his approbation added,

Though not his pre-concent, he did not flow

From honourable courses.

Dion. Be it so then:

Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead,

Nor none can know, Leontine being gone.

He will repent the breadth of his great voyage:
Blame both my lord and me, that we have taken
No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you,
Walk, and be cheerful once again; reserve
That excellent complexion, which did steal
The eyes of young and old. Care not for me;
I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go;

But yet I have no desire to it.

Des. Come, come, I know 'tis good for you.

Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least;

Remember what I have said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.
Des. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while;

Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood:

What! I must have a care of you.

Mar. Thanks, sweet madam.—
(Exit Dionysa)

Is this wind westerly that blows?

Leon. South-west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.

Leon. Was't not?

Mar. My father as nurse said, did never fear,

But cry'd good seasons! to the sailors, galling

His kindly hands with hauling of the ropes;

And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea

That almost tost the deck, and from the ladder-tackle

Wash'd off a canvas-climber; Ha! says one,

Will out! and, with a dropping industry,

They skip from stern to stern: the boatswain whistles.

The master calls, and troubles their confusion.

Leon. And when was this?

Mar. It was when I was born:

Never was waves nor wind more violent.

Leon. Come, say your prayers speedily.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,

I grant it: Pray; but be not tedious.

For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn

To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.

Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?

Now, as I can remember, by my truth,

I never did her hurt in all my life;

I never spoke bad word, nor did ill turn

To any living creature: believe me, I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly;

I trod upon a worm against my will,

But I wept for it. How have I offended,

Whereas my death might yield her profit, or

My life imply her danger?

Leon. My commission

Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.

You are well favoured, and your looks foreshow

You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately.

When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:

Good south, it show'd well in you; do so now:

Your lady seeks my life: come you between,

And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,

And will despatch

Enter Pirates, wanting Marina is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain! (Leonine runs away.)

2 Pirate. A prize! a prize!

3 Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part. Come, let's have her aboard suddenly

(Enter Pirates, with Marina)

SCENE II. — The Same.

Re-enter Leonine.

Leon. These roving thieves serve the great pirate Valides;

And they have seiz'd Marina. Let her go:
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear she's dead

And thrown into the sea.—But I'll see further;
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her abroad. If she remain,

When they have ravish'd, must by me be slain.

(Exit.)

SCENE III. — Mitylene. A Room in a Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and Boult.

Pand. Boult.

Boult. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this morn, by being too wenchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore let's have fresh ones, whatever we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be us'd in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Bawd. Thou say'st true; 'tis not the blemish up of poor bastards, as I think, I have brought up some eleven—

Boult. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again. But shall I search the market?

Bawd. What else, man? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully soddish.

Pand. Thou say'st true; they are too unwholesome conscience. The poor Transilvanian is dead, that lay with the little barge.

Boult. Ay, she quickly pond'd him; she made him roast meat for worms:—but I'll go search the market.

(Exit Boult.)

Pand. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.

Bawd. Why, to give over, I pray you? is it a shame to get when we are old?

Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity; nor the commodity waxes not with the danger; therefore, in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep our door hatch'd. Besides, the sure terms we stand upon with the gods, will be strong with us for giving over.

Bawd. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.

Pand. As well as we! ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade;
it's no calling:—but here comes Boult.

Enter the Pirates and Boult, dragging in Marina.

Boult. Come your ways. (To Marina.)—My masters, you say she's a virgin!

1 Pirate. O, sir, we doubt it not.

Boult. Master, I have gone thorough for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Bawd. Boult, has she any qualities?

Boult. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

Bawd. What's her price, Boult?

Boult. I cannot be lured one date of a thousand pieces.

Per. I believe you;
Your honour and your goodness teach me credit,
Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Unclear'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will in't. So I take my leave.
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself.
Who shall not be more dear to my respect,
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.
Cle. We'll bring your grace even to this edge
o'the shore;

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune, and
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dear'st madam—O, no tears,
Lychorida, no tears:
Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House.

Enter Cerimon and Thaisa.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,
Lay with you in your coffer: which are now
At your command. Know you the character?
Thai. It is my lord's.

That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,
Even on my yearning time; but whether there
Deliver'd or no, by the holy gods,
I cannot rightly say: But since king Pericles,
My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again,
A vestal livery will I take me to,
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as you speak,
Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may bide until your date expire.
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks, that's all:
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Imagine Pericles at Tyre,
Welcom'd to his own desire.
His woful queen leave at Ephesus,
To Doun there a votaress.
Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast growing scene must find
At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters: who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,
Which makes her both the heart and place
Of general wonder. But alas!
That monster envy, oft the wrack
Of earned praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife.
And in this kind hath our Cleon
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
Even ripe for marriage fight; this maid
Hight Philoten: and it is said
For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be:
Be't when she woad'd the sleided silk
With fingers, long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp needl wound
The caubrick, which she made more sound

By hurting it; or when to the lute
She sung, and made the night-bird mute,
That still records with moon; or when
She would with rich and constant pen
Vail to her mistress Dian: still
This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute Marina: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter.
The sooner her vile thoughts to stand,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead;
And curs'd Dionyza hath
The pregnant instrument of wrath
Prepar'd for this blow. The unborn event
I do commend to your content:
Only I carry winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;
Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my way.—
Dionyza does appear,
With Leonne, a murderer. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Tharsus. An open Place, near the Sea-shore.

Enter Dionyza and Leonne.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do it;

'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing i'the world so soon.
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom,
Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose.

Leone. I'll do't: but yet she is a goodly creature
Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her.

Here
Weeping she comes for her old nurse's death.
Thou art resolv'd!

Leone. I am resolv'd.

Enter Marina, with a basket of flowers.

Mar. No, no, I will rob Tellus of her weed,
To strew thy green with flowers: the yellows,
The purple violets, and marigolds, (blows,
Shall, as a chaplet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer days do last. Ah me! poor maid,
Born in a tempest, when my mother died,
This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring me from my friends.

Dion. How now, Marina! why do you keep alone?

How chance my daughter is not with you? I do not Consume your blood with sorrowing: you have
A nurse of me. Long! how your favour's chang'd
With this unprofitable woe! Come, come; (W,
Give me your wreath of flowers, ere the sun set
Walk forth with Leonne: the air is quick then, Piercing, and sharpens well the stomach. Come;—
Leonne, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you:

I'll not berave you of your servant.

Dion. Come, come;
I love the king your father, and yourself,
With more than foreign heart. We every day
Expect him here: when he shall come, and find
Our paragon to all reports, thus blasted,

Rich ture about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.

'Tis most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cor. I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have (Together with my practice,) made familiar
To me and to my aid, the best infusions
That dwell in vegetables, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the disturbances [me
That nature works, and of her cures: which gives
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death. [forth

2 Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus pour'd
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restor'd:
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built lord Corinno
Such strong renown as time shall never—

Enter Two Servants, with a chest.

Serv. So; lift there.

Cor. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even now
Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest;
'Tis of some work.

Cor. Set 't down, let's look on it.
2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, sir. What'er it be,
'Tis woondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight;
If the sea's stomach be o'ercharg'd with gold,
It is a good constraint of fortune, that
It belches upon us.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.
Cor. How close 'tis caulk'd and buttin'd!—
Did the sea cast it up?

Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As to send it upon shore.

Cor. Come, wrench it open;
Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.
2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Cor. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it,
O you most potent gods! What's here! a corpse!

1 Gent. Most strange!
Cor. Shroud in cloth of state; balm'd and entreasur'd

With hags of spices full! A passport too!
Apollo, perfect me 'the characters!

[Unfolds a scroll.

Reads. Here I give to understand,

If e'er this coffin drive a-land,

I king Pericles, have lost

This crown, worth all our mundane cost.

Who finds her, give her burials.

She was the daughter of a king:

Burial thus treasure for a fee,

The gods requite his charity!

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for woe!—I have chanc'd to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.
Cor. Nay, certainly to-night;
For look, how fresh she looks!—They were too rueful.

Must throw her in the sea. Make fire within;
Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,
And yet the fire of life kindle again
The overpress'd spirits. I have heard
Of an Egyptian, had nine hours lien dead,
By good appliance was recovered.

Enter a Servant, with boxes, napkins, and fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths—
The rough and woful music that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you. [block!
'The viol once more;—How thou stirr'st, thou
The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—
Gentlemen,
This queen will live: nature awakes: a warmth
Breathes out of her: she hath not been entranc'd
'Above five hours. See, how she 'gins to blow
Into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The heavens, sir,
Through you, increase our wonder, and set up
Your fame for ever.

Cor. She is alive; behold,
Her eyelids, cease to those heavenly jewels,
Which Pericles hath lost,
Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;
The diamonds of a most prais'd water
Appear, to make the world twice rich. O live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
Rare as you seem to be! [She moves.

Thai. O dear Dinnu,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world's
This? Is not this strange! [this!
1 Gent. Most rare.

Cor. Hail, gentle neighbours;
Lend me your hands: to the next chamber bear
her.

Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come;
And Esculapius guide us!

[Exit, carrying Thaisa away.

SCENE III.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter Pericles, Cleon, Dionyza, Lychorida, and Marina.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expir'd, and Tyrus stands
In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt
you mortally,

Yet glance full wondrously on us.
Dion. O your sweet queen!

That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,

To have bless'd mine eyes!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end

Must be as 'tis. My wife Marina (whom,
For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so,) here
I charge your charity withal, and leave her

The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord;
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
(For which the people's prayers still fall upon you,
Must in your child be thought on. If neglectful,

Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By your reward, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,

The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

That, as a duck for life that dives,
So up and down the poor ship drives,
The lady shrieks, and, well-a-weir!
Doth fall in travail with her fear:
And what ensues in this foul storm,
Shall, for itself, itself perform.
I will relate, action may Conveniently the rest convey:
Which might not what by me is told,
In your imagination hold
This stage, the ship, upon whose deck
The sea-lost prince appears to speak [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Enter Pericles, on a ship at sea.

Per. Three God of this great vast, rebuke these surges, [Heat]
Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou that Upon the wide command, bend them in brass, Having call'd them from the deep! O still thy deafning. [He]
Thy dreadful thunders: gently quench thy unsolphtuous flashes!—O how, Lychorida,
How does my queen!—Thou storm, thou! venom-
ously
Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard.—Lychorida!—Lucina, O
Divinest patroness, and midwife, gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
Aboard our dancing boat: make swift the pangs
Of my queen's travails!—Now, Lychorida—

Enter Lychorida, with an infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing
Too young for such a place, who, if it had Conceit, would die as I am like to do.
Take in your arms this piece of your dead queen.
Per. How! how, Lychorida!
Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left living of your queen,—
A little daughter for the sake of it,
Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods!
Why do you make us love your costly gifts,
And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
Recall not what we give, and therein may
Vie honour with yourselves.

Lyc. Patience, good sir,
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life,
For a more beautiful birth had never babe:
Quiet and gentle thy conditions!
For thou'rt the rudest welcome'd to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what kal-lows!

Thou hast as chiding a nativity,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first,
Thy lum is more than can thy portage quik,
With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter Two Sailors.

1 Sail. What courage, sir! God save you.
Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw:
It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer,
I would it would be quiet.
1 Sail. Slack the bulins there; thou wilt not wilt thou! Blow, and split thyself.
2 Sail. But sea-room, an the brine and cloudy billow kiss the moon, I care not.
1 Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard; the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.
1 Sail. Pardon us, sir: with us at sea it still hath been observed; and we are strong in earnest.
Therefore briefly yield her: for she must overboard straight. [Queen!]

Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched
Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible child had hast thou had, my dear;
No light, no fire: the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time
To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ooze:
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And eye-remaining lamps, the belching whale
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Lying with simple shells. Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink, and paper,
My casquet and my jewels; and bid Alexander
Bring me the satins cooler: lay the babe
Upon the pillow; he thee, whilst I say
A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit Lychorida.]

2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatch-cocks, and bitumened ready. [Thus]

Per. I thank thee. Manner, say what coast is 2 Sail. We are near Tharsus.

Per. Thither, gentle manner, [reach it!]
Alter thy course for Tyre. When canst thou
2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind ceases.

Per. O make for Tharsus.
There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyrrus: there I'll leave it
At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good manner!
I'll bring the body presently. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House.

Enter Cerimon, a Servant, and some persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter Philemon.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men:
It has been a turbulent and stormy night.
Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as this,

'Till now, I ne'er endur'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return,
There's nothing can be minister'd to nature,
That can recover him. Give this to the 'pothecary.

And tell me how it works [To Philemon.
(Exeunt Philemon, Servant, and those who had been shipwrecked.)

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Good morrow, sir.

2 Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.
Cer. Gentlemen,

Why do you stir so early?

1 Gent. Sir,
Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals did seem to reel,
And all to topple; pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house. [early:]

2 Gent. 'That is the cause we trouble you so
'is not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well.
1 Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship having

Or never more to view nor day nor light.
 Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with mine;
 I like that well:—nay, how absolute she's in't,
 Not minding whether I dislike or no!
 Well, I commend her choice;
 And will no longer have it be delay'd.
 Soft, here he comes:—I must dissemble it.

Enter Pericles.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!

Sim. To you as much, sir! I am beholden to you,

For your sweet music this last night: my ears,
 I do protest, were never better fed
 With such delightful pleasing harmony.

Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend;
 Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.

Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord.

Sim. Let me ask one thing. [think, sir, of] What do you
 My daughter?

Per. As of a most virtuous princess.

Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?

Per. As a fair day in summer: wondrous fair.

Sim. My daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;
 Ay, so well, sir, that you must be her master.

And she'll your scholar be; therefore look to it.

Per. Unworthy I to be her schoolmaster.

Sim. She thinks not so; pursue this writing.

Per. What's here! [else.]
 A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre!

'Tis the king's subtilty, to have my life. [Aside.]
 O, seek not to intrap, my gracious lord,

A stranger, and distressed gentleman,
 That never aim'd as high, to love your daughter,
 But bent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter and
 A villain. [Thou art]

Per. By the gods I have not, sir.
 Never did thought of mine levy offence;

Nor never did my actions yet commence
 A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.

Sim. Traitor, thou hast.

Per. Traitor!

Sim. Ay, traitor, sir.
 Per. Even in his throat, (unless it be the king's).
 That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage. [Aside.]

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
 That never relish'd of a base descent.

I came unto your court, for honour's cause,
 And not to be a rebel to her state;

And he that otherwise accounts of me,
 This sword shall prove, he's honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—
 Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter Thaisa.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair
 Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
 Did e'er speak, or my hand subscribe
 To any syllable that made love to you?

Thaisa. Why, sir, as if you had,
 Who takes offence at that would make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?—
 I am glad of it with all my heart. [Aside.] I'll I'll bring you in subjection. [tame you]

Will you, not having my consent, bestow
 Your love and your affections on a stranger?

[Who, for aught I know to the contrary,
 Or think, may be as great in blood as I.] [Aside.]
 Hear the refuse, mistress: frame your will to
 mine,—

And you, sir, hear you.—Either be rul'd by me,
 Or I will make you—man and wife — [tum]—
 Nay, come; your hands and lips must seal it
 And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy:—
 And for a further grief.—God give you joy!
 What, are you both pleas'd?

Thaisa. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, 'please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, I'll see you wed;
 Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.
 [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter Gower.

Goss. Now sleepy slaked hath the rout;
 No din but moans, the house about,
 Made louder by the o'er-fed breast.
 Of this most pompous marriage feast.
 The cat, with eyes of burning coal,
 Now crouches 'fore the mouse's hole;
 And crickets sing at th' oven's mouth,
 As the blither for their drowth.
 Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
 Where, by the loss of maidenhood,
 A babe is moulded;—Be silent,
 And time that is so briefly lent,
 With your fine fancies quietly eche;
 What's dumb in show, I'll plain with speech.

Enter Pericles and Simonides at one door, with A attendant; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives Pericles a letter. Pericles shows it to Simonides; the latter kneels to the former. Then enter Thaisa with child, and Lychorida. Simu-nides shows his daughter the letter; she rejoices:
 she and Pericles take leave of her father, and depart. Then Simonides, &c. retire.

Goss. By many a dear and painful perch,
 Of Pericles the careful search
 By the four opposing cunes,
 Which the world together join,
 Is made, with all due diligence,
 That horse and sail, and high expence,
 Can stand the quest. At last from Tyre (Fame answering the most strong inquire,)
 To the court of king Simonides
 Are letters brought; the honour thence:
 Antiochus and his daughter's dead;
 The men of Tyre, on the head
 Of Helicanus would set on
 The crown of Tyre, but he will none;
 The mourning there he hastens 't'appease;
 Says to them, if king Pericles
 Come not, in twice six months, home,
 He obedient to their doom,
 Will take the crown. The sum of this,
 Brought hither to Pentapolis,
 Y-revealed the regions round,
 And every one with claps, gasp sound,
 Our hear apparent is a king.
 Who dream'd of, who thought of such a thing?
 Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre:
 His queen with child makes her desire
 (Which who shall cross!) alone to go;
 (Omit we all their dole and woe.)
 Lychorida, her nurse, she takes,
 And so to sea. Their vessel shakes
 On Neptune's billow; half the fleet
 Hath their keel out; but fortune's mood
 Vexes again; the grizzled north
 Disgorges such a tempest birth,

Per. I thank him.
Thet. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.
Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thet. And further he desires to know of you, of whence you are, your name and parentage.
Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name, Pericles; My education being in arts and arms:— Who looking for adventures in the world, Was by the rough seas rest of ships and men, And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thet. He thanks your grace; names himself A gentleman of Tyre, who only by [Pericles, Misfortune of the seas has been bereft. Of ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now by the gods, I pity his misfortune, And will awake him from his melancholy. Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles, And waste the time, which looks for other revels.

Even in your armour, as you are address'd, Will very well become a soldier's dance. I will not have excuse, with saying, this Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads; Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.

[The Knights dance]
 So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd. Come, sir;

Here is a lady that wants breathing too; And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre Are excellent in making ladies trip; And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my lord.

Sim. O, that's as much as you would be denied [The Knights and Ladies dance. Of your fair courtesy—Unclass, unclasp: Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well. But you the best. [To Pericles.] Pages and lights, conduct These knights unto their several lodgings: Yours, We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.
Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love. For that's the mark I know you level at: Therefore each one betake him to his rest; To-morrow, all for speeding do their best.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tyre. A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter Helicanus and Escanes.

Hel. No, no, my Escanes; know this of me,— Antiochus from incest liv'd not free; For which, the most high gods not minding longer To withhold the vengeance that they had in Due to this heinous capital offence; Even in the height and pride of all his glory, When he was seated, and his daughter with him, In a chariot of unestimable value, A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk, That all these eyes ador'd them are their fell, Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Eca. 'Twas very strange.
Hel. And yet but just; for though This king were great, his greatness was no guard To his heaven's shaft, but sin had his reward.
Eca. 'Tis very true.

Enter Three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference, Or counsel, has respect with him but he.

2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve, without reproof.

3 Lord. And ours'd be he that will not second 1 Lord. Follow me then: Lord Helicanus, a word.

Hel. With me! and welcome: Happy day, my lords.

1 Lord. Know, that our griefs are risen to the And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your griefs, for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself then, noble Helic: But if the prince do live, let us salute him. Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.

If in the world he live, we'll seek him out; If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there; And be resolv'd, he live to govern us, Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral, And leaves us to our free election.

2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our censure.

And knowing this kingdom, if without a head, (Like goodly buildings left without a roof), Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,

That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign, We thus submit unto—our sovereign.

All Live, noble Helicanus!

Hel. Try honour's cause; forbear your suffrages: If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.

Take I your wish, I leap into the seas, Where's hourly trouble, for a minute's ease.

A twelvemonth longer, let me then entreat you To forbear choice: the absence of your king;

In which time exclud'd, he not return, I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.

But if I cannot win you to this love, Go search like noblemen, like noble subjects, And in your search, spend your adventurous worth;

Whom if you find, and win unto return, You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

1 Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield;

And, since Lord Helicanus enjoined us, We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands;

When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Pentapolis. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Simonides, reading a letter, the Knights meet him

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.

Sim. Knights, from my daughter thus I let you know,

That for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake A married life.

Her reason to herself is only known, Which from herself by no means can I get.

2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my lord?

Sim. 'Faith, by no means; she hath so strictly To her chamber, that it is impossible.

One twelve moons more she'll wear Diana's livery;

This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd, And on her virgin honour will not break it.

3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves.

[Exeunt.]

Sim. So. They're well despatch'd: now to my daughter's. She tells me here, she'll wed the stranger king.

Enter a Knight; he passes over the stage, and his Spurs presents his shield to the Princess

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?
Thas. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Strophos, resembling at the sun;
The word, Less tes wia maki.

Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you.
[The second Knight passes.]
Who is the second, that presents himself?
Thas. A prince of Macedonia, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:
The motto thus, in Spanish, Pis per dulcra que per fuerca. [The third Knight passes.]

Sim. And what's the third?
Thas. The third of Antioch;
And his device, a wreath of chivalry:
The word, Me pompea pociendi apert.

[The fourth Knight passes.]
Sim. What is the fourth?
Thas. A burning torch, that's turned upside
The word, Quod me oit, me extinguit.

Sim. Which shows, that beauty hath his power
And will,
Which can so well inflame, as it can kill

[The fifth Knight passes.]
Thas. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds;
Holding out gold, that's by the touchstone tried:
The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.

[The sixth Knight passes.]
Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?
Thas. He seems a stranger; but his present is
A water'd branch, that's only green at top;
The motto, In hoc spe vivo.

Sim. A pretty moral;
From the dejected state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.

1 Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show
Can any way speak in his just commend:
For, by his rusty outside, he appears

To have practis'd more the whiptuck, than the lance [comes]

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he
To an honour'd triumph, strangely furnished.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust
Until this day, to sower it in the dust.

Sim. Openen's but a fool, that makes us scan
The outward habit by the inward man.
But stay, the knights are coming; we'll withdraw
Into the gallery. [Exeunt.]

[Great shouts, and all cry. The mean knight.]

SCENE III. — The same. A Hall of State. — A Banquet prepared.

Enter Simonides, Thais, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Knights,
To my joy are welcome, were superfluous.
To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms.
Were more than you expect, or more than's fit,
Since every worth in show commends itself.
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are my guests.

Thas. But you, my knight and guest:
To whom this wreath of victory I give,
And crown you king of this day's happenings.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.
Sim. Call it by what you will, 'he day is yours.'

And here, I hope, is none that envies it.
In framing artists, art has thus decreed,
To make mine good, but others to exceed,
And you're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen of the feast.

[For, daughter, so you are.] here take your place:
Marshall the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides.

Sim. Your presence glads our days; honour we
For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

Marak. Sir, you'd your place.
Per. Some other is more fit.
1 Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen.

That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,
Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.
Sim. Sit, sit, sit, sit.
Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,
These cares read me, she not thought upon.

Thas. By Jove, that is queen
Of marriage, all the vizards that I eat
Do seem unmov'd, wishing him my meat!
Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but
A country gentleman;
He has done us more than other knights have Broken a staff, or so; so let it pass.

Thas. To me he seems like diamond to glass.
Per. You king's to me, like to my father's po-ture,

Which tells me, in that glory once he was;
Had princes sit, like a star, about his throne,
And he the sun, for them to reverence.

None that beheld him, but like lower lights,
Did veil their crowns to his supremacy;
Where now his son's a glow-worm in the night,
The which hath fire in darkness, none in light;

Whereby I see that time's the king of men,
For he's their parent, and he is their grave.
And gives them what he will, not what they desire.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights? [crave.]
1 Knight. Who can be other, in this royal presence?

Sim. Here, with a cup that's stor'd unto the
[As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips.]
We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace
Sim. Yet pause a while;

You knight, methinks, doth sit too melancholy,
As if the entertainment in our court
Had not a show might countervail his worth.

Note it not you, Thais! What is it
That

To me, my father?
Sim. O, attend, my daughter;

Princes, in this, should live like gods above,
Who freely give to every one that comes
To honour them; and princes, not doing so,
Are like to goats, which make a sound, but kill'd
Are wonder'd at.

Therefore to make's entrance more sweet, here
We drink this standing-bowl of wine to him.

Thas. Alas, my father, it befits not me
Unto a stranger knight to be so bold
He may my proffer take for an offence.
Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How!
Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thas. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [And.]

Of whence he is, his name and parentage. [To.]
Thas. The king my father, sir, has drawn to he a day fits you, scratch it out of the calendar, and no body will look after it.

Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast—

2 Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea, to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind,

In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball For them to play upon, entreats you pity him; He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece, gets more with begging, than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes then?

Per. I never practis'd it.

2 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve sure; for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know; But what I am, want teaches me to think on; A man shrunk up with cold: my veins are chill, And have no more of life, than may suffice To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help: Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die quoth-a! Now gods forbid! I have a gown here; come put it on; keep these warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more o'er puddings and flap-jacks; and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did but crave.

2 Fish. But crave! Then I'll turn craver too, and so I shall escape whipping.

Per. Why, are all your beggars whipped then?

2 Fish. O, not sir, my friend, not all; for if all your beggars were whipped, I would wish no better office than to be whipp'd. But, master, I'll go draw up the net. [Exeunt Two of the Fishermen.]

Per. How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, sir! do you know where you are?

Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?

1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be so called, for his peaceable reign, and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since from his subjects He gains the name of good, by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey; and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourney for her love.

Per. Did but my fortunes equal my desires, I'd wish to make one there.

1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for—his wife's soul.

Re-enter the Two Fishermen, drawing up a net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help; here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 'twill hardly come out. Ha! bots on't, 'tis come at last, and 'tis t'ward to a racy armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.

Thanks, fortune, yet, that after all my crosses,

Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself: And, though it was mine own, part of mine heritage.

Which my dead father did bequeath to me, With this strict charge, (even as he left his life,) [Knew it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield.] 'Twas mine and death; (and pointed to this brace:) [For that it sav'd me, keep it; in like necessity.] Which gods protect thee from! [It may defend thee.] It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it; 'Till the rough seas, that spare not any man, Took it in rage, though calm'd, they giv't again: I thank thee for't; my shipwreck's now no ill, Since I have here my father's gift by will.

1 Fish. What mean you, sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth.

For it was sometime target to a king: I know it by this mark. He lov'd me dearly, And for his sake, I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court,

Where with't I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortunes better, I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest your debtor.

1 Fish. Why, wait thou tourney for the lady!

Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms.

1 Fish. Why, do ye take it, and the gods give the good on't!

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend: 'twas we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain commendments, certain vails. I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe't, I will.

Now, by your furtherance, I am cloth'd in steel; And spite of all the rupture of the sea.

This jewel holds fast being on my arm; Unto thy value will I mount myself.

Upon a corner, whose delightful steps Shall make the gazey joy to see him tread.—Only, my friend, I yet am unprovoked

Of a pair of bases.

2 Fish. We'll sure provide; thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair: and I'll bring thee to the court myself.

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will; This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A public Way, or Plain-Journ, leading to the Lists. A Pavilion by the side of it, for the reception of the King, Princes, Lords, &c.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?

1 Lord. They are, my liege;

And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them, we are ready; and our daughter.

In honour of whose birth these triumphs are, Sit here, like beauty's child, whom nature giv't For man to see, and seeing wonder at.

[Exit a Lord.]

Thais. It pleaseth you, my father, to express My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are A model, which heaven makes like to itself:

As jewels lose their glory, if neglected, So princes their renown, if not respected.

'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain The labour of each knight, in his device.

Thais. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter Pericles, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships and number of our men,
Be, like a beacon fir'd, to smaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And even the desolation of your streets:
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load:
And these our ships you happily may think
Are, like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within,
With bloody views, expecting overthrow,
Are stor'd with ruin, to make your needy bread.
And give them life, who are hunger-starv'd, half
dead.

All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise;
We do not look for reverence, but for love,
And harboursage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils!
Till when, (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen),
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept; least here a while,

Until our stars that frown, lend us a smile.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I was, to meet bring;
A better prince, and heaven his heir,
Prove awful both in deed and word.
Be quiet then, as men should be,
Till he hath pass'd his noisome reign,
I'll show you those in troubles reign,
Losing a mile, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation
(To whom I give my bounden)
Is still at Tharsus, where each man
Thanks all as wit he spoken can:
And, to remember what he does,
Gild his statue glorious;
But belongs to the contrary
Are brought your eyes: what need speak I!

Dumb show.

Enter at one door Pericles, talking with Cleon; all the Train with them. Enter at another door a Gentleman, with a letter to Pericles; Pericles shows the letter to Cleon; then gives the Gentleman a reward, and knights him. Exeunt Pericles, Cleon, &c. separately.

Gow. Good Helicone hath staid at home,
Not to eat honey like a drone,
From o'er her labours; forth he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive;
And, to fulfil his prince's desire,
Holds word of all that haps in Tyre:
How Thaliard came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was not best
Longer for him to make his rest:
His knowing so, put forth to sea,
Where where men loose, there's seldom ease:
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,

Make such unquiet, that the ship
Should house him safe, is wreck'd and split;
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is lost;
All perishes of man, of self,
Ne ought escapen but himself;
Till fortune, tird with doing bad,
Threw him ashore, to give him glad:
And here he comes: what shall be next,
Pardon old Gower: this long's the text. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Pentapolis. An open Place by the Sea Side.

Enter Pericles, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you:
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your war'y grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter Three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What ho, Fliche!
2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.
1 Fish. What Patch-bruach, I say!
2 Fish. What say you, master?
1 Fish. Look how thou stirrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wannion.
3 Fish. Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.

1 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it grieved my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us, to help them; when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus, how he bounced and tumbled?
I they say, they are half fish, half flesh: a plague on them, they ne'er come, but I look to be washed. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why, as men do a-land: the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale: 'a plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on a'the land, who never leave gaping, till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells, and all.

Per. A pretty moral.
3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man!
3 Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind—

Per. Simonides?
3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject of the sea
These fishers tell the infiniteness of men:
And from their watry empire reviveth
All that may men approve, or men detest!—
Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Huzzat! good fellow, what's that? if it

Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both:
But in our orbs we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince.
Thou show'st a subject's shine, I a true prince.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — Tyre. An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter Thaliard.

Thal. So this is Tyre, and this is the court. Here must I kill king Pericles; and if I do not, I am sure to be hanged at home 'tis dangerous — Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets. Now do I see he had some reason for it: for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the indenture of his oath to be one. — Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter Helicanus, Ercanus, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre, Further to question of your king's departure. His seal'd commission, left in trust with me, Doth speak sufficiently he's gone to travel.

Thal. How! the king gone!

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied, 'Why, as it were unknown'd of your loves, He would depart, I'll give some light unto you. Being at Antioch —

Thal. What, from Antioch? [Aside Hel. Royal Antiochus (on what cause I know not.)]

Took some displeasure at him; at least he judg'd And doubting lest that he had err'd or sinn'd, To show his sorrow, would correct himself: So puts himself unto the shipman's toil.

With whom such minute threatens life or death.

Thal. Well, I perceive.

I shall not be long'd now, although I would: But since he's gone, the king it sure must please, He 'scap'd the land, to perish on the seas —

But I'll present me, I leave to the lords of Tyre!

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come

With message unto princely Pericles: I put since my landing, as I have understood Your lord has took himself to unknown travels, My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it, since Committed to our master, not to us: Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire, —

A friends to Antioch, we may trust in Tyre.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. — Tharsus A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter Cleon, Dionyza, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here, And by relating tales of other's griefs, See if 'twill teach us to forget our own? [It]

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench For who digs hills because they do aspire, Throws down one mountain, to cast up a higher. O my distressed lord, even such our griefs; Here they're but felt, and seen with mistful eyes, But like to graves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyza,

Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it, Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish? Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our woes Into the air: our eyes do weep, till lungs Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; that,

If heaven alumhor, while their creatures want, They may awake their helps to comfort them, I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years, And wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Cle. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. Thus Tharsus, over which I have govern'd (A city, on whom plenty held full hand.) For riches, strew'd himself even in the streets: Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the clouds,

And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at; Whose men and dames so jettied and adorn'd, Like one another's glass to trim them by: Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the sight, And not so much to feed on, as delight: All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great, The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. O, 'tis too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our change,

These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air, Were all too little to content and please, Although they gave their creatures in abundance, As houses are desil'd for want of use, They are now starv'd for want of exercise: Those palates, who not yet two summers younger, Must have inventions to delight the taste, Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it: Those mothers who, to nurse up their babes, Thought nothing too curious, are ready now, To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd. So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife Draw lots, who first shall die to lengthen life: Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping; Here many sink, yet those which see them fall, Have scarce strength left to give them burial. Is not this true?

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it. Cle. O, let those cities, that of Plenty's cup And her prosperities so largely taste, With their superfluous riots hear those tears! The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st in haste. For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring shore,

A portly sail of ships make hitherward:

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir, That may succeed as his inheritor; And so in ours: some neighbouring nation, Taking advantage of our misery, Have stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,

To beat us down, the which are down already; And make a conquest of unhappy me, Whereas no glory's got to overcome. [blance]

Lord. That's the least fear; for, by the seam- Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace, And come to us as favourites, not as foes.

Cle. Thou speak'st like him's untutor'd to re- Who makes the fairest show, means most deceit. But bring they what they will, what need we fear? [there]

The ground's the lowest, and we are half way Go tell their general, we attend him here: To know for what he comes, and whence he comes, And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord.

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace comes; If war, we are unable to resist.

From a well-experience'd archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so ne'er return,
Unless thou say, Prince Pericles is dead.

Thet. My lord, if I
Can get him once within my pistol's length,
I'll make him sore : so farewell to your highness.

Ant. Thaland, adieu ! till Pericles be dead,
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.]

SCENE II. — Tyre. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Pericles, Helicanus, and other Lords.

Per. Let none disturb us : Why this charge of thoughts !

The sad rumour, dull-as-lead melancholy,
By me so us'd a guest is, not an hour,
In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,
(The tomb where grief should sleep,) can breed me quiet !

Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun them.

And danger, which I fear'd, is at Antioch,
Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here :
Yet needier pleasure's art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other's distance comfort me.

Then it is thus : the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by mis-dread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care ;
And what was first but fear what might be done,

Grows elder now, and cures it he not done,
And so with me : — the great Antiochus

(Gaiest whom I am too little to contend, Since he's so great, can make his will his act.)

Will think me speaking, though I swear to sit Nor boot it me to say, I honour him, (hence ;

If he suspect I may dishonour him ;
And what may make him blush in being known,

He'll stop the course by which it might be known ;
With hostile forces he'll overspread the land.

And with the scent of war will look so huge,
Amazement shall drive courage from the state ;

Our men be vanquish'd, ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd that ne'er thought offence :

Which care of them, not pity of myself,
(Who am no more but as the tops of trees,

Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them.)

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,
And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast !

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to Peaceful and comfortable !

Hel. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience
tongue

They do abuse the king, that flatter him :
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin ;

The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,
To which that breath gives heat and stronger glowing ;

Whereas reproof, obedient, and in order,
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.

When answer South here does procure a peace,
He flatters you, makes war upon your life :

Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please ;
I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else ; but let your cares o'erlook
What whipping, and what lading is in our haven.

And thou return to us. [Exeunt Lords.] Helicanus,
thou

Has't moved us : what seest thou in our looks !
Hel. As angry brow, dread lord

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,
How dost thy tongue move anger to our loss !

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment ?
Per. Thou know'st I have power

To take thy life.
Hel. [Kneeling.] I have ground the axe myself ;
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, pry thee rise :
Sit down, sit down ; thou art no flatterer :

I thank thee for it ; and high heaven forbid,
That kings should let their ears hear their faults

Fit counsellor, and servant for a prince, (hid !
Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant,

What would'st thou have me do ?
Hel. With patience bear

Such griefs as you do lay upon yourself.
Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus ;

Who minister'st a poison unto me,
That thou would'st tremble to receive thyself

Attend me then : I went to Antioch,
Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death,

I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,

Bring arms to princes, and to subjects joy,
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder,

The rest (dark in mine ear,) as black as incest ;
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father

Seem'd not to strike, but smooth : but thou know'st
this,

'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss,
Which fear as grow in me, I biter feed,

Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector ; and being here,

Bethought me what was past, what might succeed,
I knew him tyrannous ; and tyrants' fears

Decrease not, but grow faster than their years ;
And should he doubt it, (as no doubt he doth,) —

That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' blood were shed,

To keep his bed of blackness unadorn'd —
To top that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,

And make pretence of wrong that I have done him,
When all, for mine, if I may call it offence,

Must feel war's blow, who spare not innocence ;
Which love to all (of which thyself art one,

Who now reprov'st me for it) —
Hel. Alas, sir !

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

Musings into my mind, a thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest, ere it came ;

And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,

Freely I'll speak. Antiochus you fear,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant.

Who either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,

Or Destinies do cut his thread of life,
Your rule direct to say ; if to me.

Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be,
Per. I do not doubt thy faith :

But should he wrong my liberties in absence —
Hel. We'll mingle bloods together in the earth,

From whence we had our being and our birth.
Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to

Tharsus
Intend my travel, where I'll bear from thee ;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.

The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.

I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thee oaths ;

And with 'ad cheeks advise thee to desist
From going on death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hath taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must :
For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath ; to trust it, error.
I'll make my will then ; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling woe,
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did :
So I bequeath a happy peace to you,
And all good men, as every prince should do ;
My riches to the earth from whence they came :
But my unspotted fire of love to you.

[To the Daughter of Antiochus
Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow. Antiochus,
Scorning advice.

Ant. Read the conclusion then ;
Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee, thou thyself shalt bleed.
Draw. In all save that, may'st thou prove pros-
In all, save that, I wish thee happiness ! [perous !
Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness, and courage.

[He reads the Riddle.]

*I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh, which did me breed :
I sought a husband, in which labour,
I found that kindness in a father.
He's father, son, and husband mild,
I'mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve if you.*

Sharp physic is the last : but O you powers !
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,

Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it !
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still [Takes hold of the hand of the Princess.

Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill :
But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt ;
For he's no man on whom perfections wait,
That knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings ;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken :

But, being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only descends at so harsh a claim :

Good night, I care not for you.
Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd ;
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act :
'Twould 'braid yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shown ;
For vice repeated, is like the wand'ring wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself ;
And yet the end of all is brought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear :
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts [wroug'd
Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is
By man's oppression ; and the poor worm doth die for't. [will ;
Kings are earth's gods : in vice their law's their

And if Jove stray, who dares say, Jove doth ill !
It is enough you know ; and it is fit. [it.
What being more known grows worse, to smother
All love the womb that their first beings bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.
Ant. Heaven, that I had thy head ! he has found the meaning :—

But I will gloze with him. [Aside.] Young prince of Tyre,

Though by the tenour of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days ;
Yet hope, succeeding fronses for a tree
As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise :
Forty days longer we do respite you ;
If by which time our secret be undone.
This merry shows, we'll joy in such a son :
And until then, your entertain shall be,
As doth befit our honour, and your worth [Exit Antiochus, his Daughter, and Attendants.

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin !
When what is done is like an hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,
'Then were it certain, you were not so bad.
As with foul incest to abuse your soul ;
Where now you're both a father and a son,
By your untimely clasplings with your child,
(Which pleasure fits an husband, not a father.)
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed ;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antich. farewell ! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night.
Will shun no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke :
Murder's as near to lust, as flame to smoke.
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets to put off the shame :
Then, lest my life be crupp'd to keep you clear,
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.

Re-enter Antiochus.

Ant. He hath found the meaning, for the which
To have his head [we mean
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the world, Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner ;
And therefore instantly this prince must die ;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attends on us there ?

Enter Thaliard.

Thal. Doth your highness call !
Ant. Thaliard, you're of our chamber, and ex-
mind
Partakes her private actions to your secrecy :
And for your faithfulness we will advance you
Thaliard, behold here's a poison, and here's gold ;
We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill
It fits thee not to ask the reason why, [him ;
Because we bid it. Say, is it done !

Thal. My lord,
'Tis done.

Enter a Messenger.

Ant. Enough ;
Lost your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.
Mess. My lord, Prince Pericles is dead. [Exit Messenger.

Ant. As thou
Wilt live, fly after : and, as an arrow, shoot

SCENE,—disperedly in various Countries.

ACT I.

Enter Gower.

Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song of old was sung.
From ashes ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals
On amber-eyes, and huly aies;
And lords and ladies of their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
'Twas to make men glorious;
Et quo antiquius, eo melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's nose ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I his would wish, and that I might Waste it for you, like taper-light—
This city then, Antioch the great
Built up for his chiefest seat;
The fairest in all Syria;
(I tell you what mine authors say:)
This king unto him took a pleasure,
Who died and left a female heir,
So beauteous, blithe, and full of face,
As heaven had lent her all his grace,
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke:
Bad father! to entice his own
To evil, should be done by none

By custom, what they did begin,
Was, with long use, accus'd no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,
To seek her as a bed-fellow:
In marriage-pleasures play-fellow:
Which to prevent, he made a law,
(To keep her still, and men in awe,)
That whom ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life:
So for her many a wight did die,
As you grim looks do testify.
What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye
I give, my cause who best can justify. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Antioch. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antiochus, Pericles, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large receiv'd

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul
Enthral'd with the glory of her praise,
Think death no hazard, in this enterprise.

Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride,
For the embracements even of Jove himself.
At whose conception, (till Lucina reign'd,)
Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfections. [Music.

Enter the Daughter of Antiochus.

Per. See, where she comes, apparel'd like the spring,
Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives renown to men!
Her face, the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever banish'd, and tarty wrath
Could never be her mild companion.
Ye gods that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflam'd desire in my breast,
To taste the fruit of yon celestial tree,
Or die in the adventure, be my help,
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd,
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:
Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view,
A countless glory, which desert must gain:
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
Yon sometime famous princes, like thyself,
Drawn by report, advent'rous by desire [sole,
Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance
That, without covering, was yon field of stars.
They here stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;

But floods of tears will drown my oratory,
And break my very utterance; even i'th time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration:
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale:
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him
speak.

Lac. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,
That cursed Clitum and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it were that ravished our sister:
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;
Our father's tears despis'd; and basely censur'd
Of that true hand, that fought Rome's quarrel out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.

Lastly, myself unkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies,
Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,
And o'p'd their arms to embrace me as a friend;
And I am the turn'd-forth, be it known to you,
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood:
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.
Alas! you know, I am no vaunter, I;
My scars can witness, dumb although they are,
That my report is just, and full of truth.
But, soft; methinks, I do digress too much,
Citing my worthless praise: O, pardon me;
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak; Behold this (Pointing to the child in the arms of an Attendant.

Of this was Tamora delivered;
The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plott' of these woes;
The villain is alive in Titus' house,
Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.
Now judge, what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear.
Now you have heard the truth, what say you,
Romans?

Have we done aught amiss? Show us wherein,
And, from the place where you behold us now,
The poor remainder of Andronicus
Will, hand in hand, all beseeching cast us down,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our bones.
Speak, Romans, speak; and, if you say, we shall,
Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emil. Come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor, for, well I know,
The common voice do cry, it shall be so.

Rom. (Several speak.) Lucius, all hail; Rome's royal emperor!

Lucius, &c. descend.

Mar. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house;
(To an Attendant.

And bither hale that misbelieving Moor,
To be adjudg'd some direful slaughtering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.

Rom. (Several speak.) Lucius, all hail; Rome's gracious governor!

Lac. Thanks, gentle Romans: May I govern so,
To heal Rome's injuries, and wipe away her woe:
But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,—
For nature pulls me to a heavy task;—
Stand all aloof;—ho! uncle, draw you near,
To shed unobscured tears upon this trunk:—
O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips.

(Kisses Titus.

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble soul!

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O, were the sun of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them!

Lac. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us

To melt in showers: Thy grandsire lov'd thee
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
Sang thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet, and agreeing with thine infancy;
In that respect thou, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature dash require it so:

Friends should associate friends as grief and woe:
Bid him farewell; commend him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart

Would I were dead, so you did live again!
O lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with Aaron.

1 Rom. You and Andronicus, have done with woes;

Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Lac. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish
him;

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food;
If any one relieves or pities him,

For the offence he dies. 'Tis his our doom.
Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aar. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb!

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers,
I should repeat the evils I have done;

Ten thousand, worse than ever yet I did,
Would I perform, if I might have my will;

If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul.

Lac. Some loving friends convey the emperor
hence.

And give him burial in his father's grave:
My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.

As for that leonine tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,
No mournful bell shall ring her burial;

But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey:
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;

And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
See justice done to Aaron, that damn'd Moor,
By whom our heavy haps had their beginning:

Then, afterwards, to order well the state;
That like events may ne'er it ruinate.

(Exeunt)

Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The hason, that receives your guilty blood.
You know your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself, Revenge, and thinks me mad.—
Hark, villains. I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste;
And of the paste a coffin I will rear;
And make two pasties of your shameful heads;
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to.
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd:
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia, come.

(He cuts their throats.)

Receive the blood: and, when that they are dead,

Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them rear'd 'gainst their mother comes.

[Exeunt, bearing the dead bodies.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Pavilion, with tables, &c.

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and Goths, with Aaron, Prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
I Goth. And ours, with thine, befall what fortune will. [Moors.]

Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;
Let him receive to sustenance, father him,
Till he be brought unto the emperor's face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings:
And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
I fear, the emperor means no good to us.

Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!

Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave!—
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.—
[Exeunt Goths, with Aaron. Flourish.]

The trumpets show, the emperor is at hand.

Enter Saturninus and Tamora, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one?

Luc. What hunts it thee to call thyself a sun!
Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the park;

These quarrels must be quietly debated.
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome.

Henceyou, therefore, draw nigh, and take your seats.
Sat. Marcus, we will.

[Huntsbys sound. The company sit down at table.]

Enter Titus dressed like a cook, Lavinia, veiled, young Lucius, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread queen;
Welcome, ye warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius;

And welcome, all: although the cheer be poor
I'll fill your stomachs; please you eat of it.
Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus?
Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well;
To entertain your highness, and your empress.

Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you
My lord the emperor, resolve me this;
Was it well done of rash Virginius,

To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflow'd?

Sat. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord! [Shame,]
Sat. Because the girl should not survive her
And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant.

For me, most wretched to perform the like:—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;

[He kills Lavinia.]

And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die!
Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural, and unkind!

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made
I am as woful as Virginius was: [One blind.]

And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage;—and it is now done.

Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed!

Tit. Will't please you eat! will't please your highness feed! [Rites.]

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter
Tit. Not I; 'twas Chiron, and Demetrius:

They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go fetch them hither to us presently.
Tit. Why, there they are both, bak'd in that

Whereof their mother daintily hath fed. [Pye.]
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.

'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point. [Killing Tamora.]

Sat. Die, frantick wretch, for this accursed deed. [Killing Titus.]

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed!
There's need for mead, death for a deadly deed.

[Kills Saturninus. A great tumult.]
The people in confusion disperse.

Marcus, Lucius, and their partisans ascend the steps before Titus's house.

Mar. You and fair'd men, people and sons of
By oppression sever'd, like a flight of fowl, [Rome,]

Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O, let me teach you how to knit again

This scatter'd urn into one mutual sheaf,
These broken limbs again into one body.

Sat. Lost Rome herself be base unto herself;
And she, whom mighty kingdoms court'd to,

Like a forlorn and desperate cast-away,
Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,
Grave witnessers of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,— Speak, Rome's dear friend: [To Lucius.] as erst

our ancestor.
When with his solemn tongue he did discourse,

To love-sick Dido's and attending ear,
The story of that baleful burning night,

When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Priam's Troy;
Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,

Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.—
My heart is not compact of flint, nor steel;
Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,

Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
O sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee :
And, if one arm's embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by.

(Exit Titus from above.)
Tom. This closing with him fits his lunacy.
Whate'er I forge, to feed his brain-sick fits.
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches.
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
And, being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius, his son;
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,
To scatter and disperse the riddy Goths.
Or, at the least, make them his enemies.
See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter Titus.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee:

Welcome, dread fury, to my woeful house :—
Rape, and Murder, you are welcome too :—
How like the empress and her sons you are !
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor :—
Could not all hell afford you such a devil ?
For, well I wot, the empress never wags,
But in her company there is a Moor.
And, would you represent our queen aright,
It were convenient you had such a devil :
But welcome, as you are. What shall we do ?

Tom. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus ?

Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.
Chi. Show me a villain, that hath done a rape,
And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

Tom. Show me a thousand, that have done these wrongs.
And I will be revenged on them all.

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome;

And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,
Good Murder, stab him : he's a murderer.—
Go thou with him : and, when it is thy hap,
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rape, stab him : he is a ravisher.—
Go thou with them : and in the emperor's court
There is a queen, attended by a Moor :—
Well may'st thou know her by thy own propo-
For up and down she duth reviveth thee ;
I pray thee, do on them some violent death,
They have been violent to me and mine.

Tom. Well hast thou lesson'd us ; this shall we do.

But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius, thy thrice valiant son,
Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,

And bid him come and banquet at thy house :
When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,
The emperor himself, and all thy foes :
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.

What says Andronicus to this device ?

Tit. Marcus, my brother !—'tis sad Titus calls.

Enter Marcus.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius ;
Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths ;
Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths ;
Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are :
Tell him, the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house : and he shall feast with them.

This do thou for my love ; and so let him,
As he regards his aged father's life.
Mar. This will I do, and soon return again.

(Exit.)
Tom. Now will I hence about thy business,
And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with Or else I'll call my brother back again. (Exit.)
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tom. What say you, boys ? will you abide with him,

Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest ?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair.

(Aside.)
And tarry with him, till I come again.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad ;
And will o'er-reach them in their own devices,
A pair of cursed hell-bounds, and their dam.

(Aside.)
Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave us
here.

Tom. Farewell, Andronicus : Revenge now
To lay a plot to betray thy foes.

(Exit Tamora.)
Tit. I know thou dost ; and sweet Revenge, farewell. (Exit.)

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be em-
-ty. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine.

Enter Publius and others.

Pub. What's your will ?
Tit. Know you these two ?

Pub. I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.

Tit. Fye, Publius, fye ! thou art too much de-
-ceiv'd :

The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name :
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius :
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them :
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it : therefore bind them sure ;
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

(Exit Titus.—Publius, &c., lay hold on Chiron and Demetrius.)

Chi. Villains, forbear ; we are the emperor's sons. (Mand.)

Pub. And therefore do we what we are com-manded :
Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a
word :

Is he sure bound ? look that you bind them fast.

Re-enter Titus Andronicus, with Lavinia ; she bearing a basin, and he a knife.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia : look, thy foes are bound ;—

Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me ;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.—
O villains, Chiron and Demetrius !

Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud ;

This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband ; and, for that vile fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death :
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest ;
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more
dear

Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd !
What would you say, if I should let you speak ?
Villains, for shame you could not bear for shame.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to murther you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats ;

As sure a card as ever won the set;
That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a stick as ever fought at head.
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Balaanus lay:
I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And bid the gold within the letter mention'd,
Conferate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it!
I play'd the cheater for thy father's haul;
And when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.
I prickt me through the crevice of a wall,
When, for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Behold his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his;
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale.
And, for thy tidings, gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What! couldst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aer. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Lac. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aer. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.

Even now I curse the day, (and yet, I think,

Few came within the compass of my curse.)

Wherein I did not some notorious ill:

As kill a man, or else devise his death;

Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;

Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself:

Not deadly enmity between two friends;

Make poor men's cattle break their necks;

Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night;

And bid the owners quench them with their tears.

Off have I digg'd up dead men from their graves.

And set them upright at their dear friends' doors.

Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;

And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,

Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,

Let not your sorrows die, though I am dead.

Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things,

As willingly as one would kill a fly;

And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,

But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Lac. Bring down the devil; for he must not do

So sweet a death, as hanging presently.

Aer. If there be devils, 'twould I were a devil,

To live and burn in everlasting fire!

So I might have your company in hell,

But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Lac. Sure, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,

Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Lac. Let him come near.

Enter Emilius.

Welcome, Emilius, what's the news from Rome?

Emil. Lord Lucius, and you, princes of the

Goths,

The Roman emperor greets you all by me:

And, for he understands you are in arms,

He craves a parley at your father's house,

Willing you to demand your hostages,

And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

I Goth. What says our general?

Lac. Emilius, let the emperor give his pledges

Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,

And we will come.—March away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. Before Titus's House.

Enter Tamora, Chiron, and Demetrius, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habiliment,

I will encounter with Andronicus;

And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,

To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs.

Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,

To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;

Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,

And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.]

Enter Titus, above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?

Is it your trick, to make me up the stair;

That so my sad decrees may fly away,

And all my study be to no effect?

You are deceiv'd; for what I mean to do,

See here, in bloody lines I have set down;

And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No; not a word: How can I grace my talk,

Wanting a hand to give it action?

Thou hast the odds of me, therefore no more.

Tam. If thou dost know me, thou would'st talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:

Witness this wretched stump, these criminal lines;

Witness these reaches, made by grief and care;

Witness the fire of day, and heavy night;

Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well.

For our proud empress, with y Tamora;

Is not thy coming for my old hand?

Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora;

She is thy enemy, and I thy friend:

I am Revenge; sent from the infernal kingdom,

To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,

By working woful vengeance on thy foes.

Come down, and welcome me to this world's light;

Confer with me of murder and of death:

There's not a hollow cave, or lurking place,

No vast obscurity, or misty vale,

Where bloody murder, or detested rape,

Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;

And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,

Revenge, which makes the foul offender quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent

To be a torment to mine enemies?

Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.

Lo, by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stand;

Now give some surance that thou art Revenge,

Slab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels;

And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner,

And whirl along with thee about the globe.

Provide thee proper palfreys, black as jet,

To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away.

And find out murderers in their guilty caves;

And when thy car is laden with their heads,

I will dismount, and by the waggon wheel

Thou, like a servile footman, all day long;

Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,

Until his very downfall in the sea.

And day by day I'll do this heavy task,

So thou destroy Rape and Murder thine.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are they thy ministers? what are they?

Tam. Rape, and Murder; therefore called so.

'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord, how like the empress' sons they are!

And you, the empress! But we workly men

Then cheer thy spirit: for know, thou emperor,
I will enchant the old Andronicus,
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,
Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep;
When as the one is wounded with the bait,
The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.
Titus. If Tamora entreat him, then he will:
For I can smooth, and fill his aged ear
With golden promises: that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.—
Go thou before, be our ambassador. [To Emilius.]
Sat. that the emperor requests a parley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.
Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

Sat. Emilius, do this message honourably:
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.
Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

Titus. Now will I to that old Andronicus;
And temper him, with all the art I have.
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome

Enter Lucius and Goths, with drum and colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify what hate they bear their emperor,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious, and impatient of your wrongs;
And, whereon Rome hath done you any scath,
Let him make treble satisfaction. [drum.]

1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great An Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort;

Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds,
Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt.
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,—
Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day,
Led by their master to the flower'd fields,—
And be aveng'd on cursed Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.
Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.
But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading Aaron, with his child in his arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,

To gaze upon a ruinous monastery;
And as I earnestly did mine eye fix
Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall:
I made unto the noise; when soon I heard
The crying babe controul'd with this discourse:
Peace, tawny slave; half me, and half thy dam!
Did not thy hue betray whose brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,
Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor;
But where the bull and cow are both milk-white,
They never do beget a coal-black calf. [babe.—
Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the
For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;

Who, when he knows thou art the emperor's babe,
Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake.
With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,
Surpriz'd him suddenly: and brought him hither,
To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil,
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand;
This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress's eye;
And here's the base fruit of his burning lust.—
Say, wail'st thou slave, whither would'st thou convey
This growing image of thy fend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What's dead? No; not a wound!

A halter, soldier: hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood.
Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.
Give me a ladder.

[A ladder brought, which Aaron is obliged to ascend.]

Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall.

I'll speak no more: But vengeance rot you all!
Luc. Say on; and, if it please me which thou speak'st.

Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.
Aar. An if it please thee? why, assure thee,
Lucius,

'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak:
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, a foul and bloody deed,
Complete of mischief, treason, villainies
Ruthful to hear, yet pitiously perform'd:
And this shall all be buried by my death.
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind: I say, thy child shall live.

Aar. Swear, that he shall, and then I will begin.
Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st me
god;

That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?

Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not:
Yet,—for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience;
And twenty popish tricks and ceremonies;
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—

Therefore I urge thy oath:—For that, I know,
An idiot holds his bauble for a god,
And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears;

To that I'll urge him:—Therefore, thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god so'er it be,
That thou ador'st, and hast in reverence,—

To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up;
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god, I swear to thee I will.

Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most insatiate, luxurious woman!

Aar. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity

To that which thou shalt hear of, me anon.

'Twas her two sons, that murder'd Bassianus:

They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her

And cut her hands; and trimm'd her as thou saw'st. [Trimm'd]

Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;

and 'twas

Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villain, like thyself!

Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them,
That cunning spirit had they from their mother

Clo. Ho! the gibbet-maker! he says, that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter. I ask thee?

Clo. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter; I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clo. From heaven? I alas, sir, I never came there: God forbid, I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs, to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the imperial's men.

Marc. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve in your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither: make no more ado, but give your pigeons to the emperor: By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.

Clo. Hold, hold:—mear-while, here's money for thy charges.

Give me a pen and ink.—[Tion!]
Mirrah. Can you with a grace deliver a supplica-
Clo. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach, you must kneel: then kiss his foot: then deliver up your pigeons; and then look for your reward. 'Till he at hand, sir: see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it.

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration;
For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant:—
And when thou hast given it to the emperor,
Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clo. God be with you, sir; I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let's go:—Publius follow me.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Chiron, Demetrius, Lords, and others; Saturninus, with the arrows in his hand that Titus shot.

Ant. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? Was ever seen

An emperor of Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, confronted thus; and, for the extent
Of equal justice, us'd in such contempt?
My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods,
However these disturbers of our peace
Box in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,
But even with law, against the wilful sons
Of old Andronicus. And what an if
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wife,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?
And now he writes to heaven for his redress.
See, here's to Jove, and thus to Mercury;
This to Apollo: this to the god of war:
Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome.
What's this, but libelling against the senate,
And blessing our injustice every where?
A goodly humour, as it not, my lords?
As who would say, in Rome no justice were.
But, if I live, his signed constancies
Shall be no shelter to these outrages:
But he and he shall know, that justice lives

In Saturninus' health; whom, if she sleep,
He'll so awake, as she in fury shall
Cut off the proud and conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,
Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age.
The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,
Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scarr'd his
heart;

And rather comfort his distressed plight,
Than prosecute the means to, or the end,
For these contemptible. Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to chafe with all: [Aside.]
But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,
Thy life-blood out: if Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter Cleown.

How now, good fellow, would'st thou speak with us?

Clo. Yes, forsooth, an your mistresship be impos-
Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emper-

Clo. 'Tis he.—God, and saint Stephen, give you good den: I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here. [Saturninus reads the letter.]

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hang'd.

Clo. Hang'd! By'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit, guarded.]

Sat. Despightful and intolerable wrongs!
Shall I endure this monstrous villany?
I know from whence this strange device proceeds,
May this be borne!—as if his traitorous sons,
That died by law for murder of our brother,
Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.—
Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;
Nor awe, nor honour, shall shape privilege:—
For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughter-man;
Sly fractick wretch, that help'st to make me great
In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter Amilius.

What news with thee, Amilius?

Amil. Arm, arm, my lords: Rome never had more cause!

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power
Of high-resolved men bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain, under conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus:
Who threats, in course of this revenge, to do
As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?
These tidings nip me; and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.

Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach:
'Tis he, the common people love so much;
Myself hath often over-heard them say,
[When I have walked like a private man.]
That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully, [perme.]
And they have wish'd that Lucius were their em-per.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius;
And will revolt from me, to succour him. [name.]

Tam. Kins, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy
Is the sun dimm'd, that gods do fly in it?
The eagle suffers little birds to sing,
And is not careful what they mean thereby;
Knowing that, with the shadow of his wings,
He can at pleasure stint their melody:
Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome.

Dem. How many women saw this child of his?
Aer. Why, no, brave lords; When we all join in league—

I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor,
The chafed bear, the mountain lioness,
The ocean swell, not so as Aer on storm—
But, say again, how many saw the child?

Ner. Coraels in the midwife, and myself,
And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.

Aer. The empress, the midwife, and yourself:
Two may keep counsel, when the third's away:
Go to the empress; tell her, this I said:—

(Stabbing her.)

Weke, weke!—so cries a pig prepar'd to the spit.
Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore dost thou this?

Aer. O, lord, sir, 'tis a deed of policy;
Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours?

A long-tongu'd baseliug gossip! go, lords, no.
And now be it known to you my full intent.

Not far, one Mutius lives, my countryman,
His wife but yesterday was brought to bed.

His child is like to her, fair as you are:
Go pack with him, and give the mother gold,

And tell them both the circumstance of all;
And how by this their child shall be advanc'd.

And be received for the emperor's heir,
And substituted in the place of mine.

To calm this tempest whirling in the court;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Hark ye, lords; ye see, that I have given her physick. (Pointing to the Nurse)

And you must needs bestow her funeral;
The fields are near, and you are gallant groomsmen:

This done, see that you take no longer days,
But send the midwife presently to me.

The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,
Then let the ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron, I see those will not trust the air
With secrets.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Herself, and hers, are highly bound to thee.

[Exit Dem. and Chi. bearing off the Nurse.]
Aer. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow
flies;

There to dispoise this treasure in mine arms,
And secretly to greet the empress' friends—

Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you
hence;

For it is you that puts us to our shifts:
I'll make you feed on berries, and on roots,

And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up

To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same A public Place

Enter Titus, bearing arrows, with letters at the ends of them; with him Marcus, young Lucius, and other Gentlemen, with bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, come:—Kinsmen, this is the way:

Sir boy, now let us see your archery;
Look ye draw hime enough, and 'tis there
straight:

Terras Astram reliquit:
Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.

She take you to your toils. You cousins, shall Go round the ocean, and cast your nets;

Happily you may find her in the sea;
Yet there's as little justice as at land:—

No; Publius and Scarpentius, you must do it;
'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,

And perve the inward center of the earth:
Then, when you come to Pluto's region,

I pray you, deliver him this petition:
Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid:

And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Stricken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.—

Ab. Rome!—Well, well; I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages

On him that doth tyrannize o'er me.—
Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all.

And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd;
This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence.

And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.
Mer. O, Publius, is not this a heavy case,

To see thy noble uncle thus distract?
Pub. Therefore, my lord, it kindly us concerns,

By day and night to attend him carefully;
And feed his humour kindly as we may,

Till time bestow some careful remedy.
Mer. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.

Join with the Goths; and with revengful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,

And vengeance on the traitor Saturnus.
Tit. Publius, how now? how now, my masters?

What, have you met with her? (word)

Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you
If you will have revenge from hell, you shall:

Warry for justice, she is so employ'd, I else,
He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or somewhere

So that perforce you must needs stay a time.
Tit. He doth me wrong, to feed me with delays.

I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.—

Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;
No big-bow'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size:

But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back;
Yet wrung with wrongs, more than our backs
can bear:

And, with there is no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven, and move the gods.

To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs:
Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus.

[He gives them the arrows.]
Ad Jovem, that's for you:—Herc, ad Apollinem:—

Ad Martem, that's for myself:—
Here, boy, to Pallas:—Herc, to Mercury:

'Tis Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnus.—
You were as good to shoot against the wind.—

'Tis it, boy. Marcus, loose when I bid:
O my word, I have written to effect;

There's not a quail left unscorched. (court.)
Mer. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.
Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O,

well said, Lucius!

Good boy, in Virgo's lap; give it Pallas.
Mer. My lord, I am a mile beyond the moon;

Your letter is with Jupiter by this. (dunce!)
Tit. Ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou

See, see thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.
Tit. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot,

The ball being gull'd, gave Aries such a knock

That down fell both the ram's horns in the court;
And who should find them but the empress' villain! (chance)

She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not

But give them to his master for a present.
Tit. Why, there it goes: God give your lordship joy.

Enter a Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons.
News, news, from heaven! Marcus, the post

come.
Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?

Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say;
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appoin'd well:
And so I leave you both, [Aside.] like bloody villains. [Exeunt Boy and Attendant.]

Dem. What's here? A scroll; and writen round about!

Let's see:

Jealoux vicia, acerbique perna.

Non opus Mauri jocular, nec arcu.

Ch. O, 'tis a verse in Horace: I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago

Aar. Ay, just!—a verse in Horace:—right, you have it

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!
Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt:

And sends the weapons wrapp'd about with these words:—

That would, beyond their feeling, to the quick.

But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.

But let her rest in her unrest awhile.—

And now, young lords, wasn't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and, more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height?

It did me good, before the palace gate
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But we were good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, lord Demetrius?

Did you not see his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames

At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Ch. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aar. Here looks but your mother for to say amen. (more.)

Ch. And that would she for twenty thousand

Dem. Come, let us go; and pray to all the gods,
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us o'er. [Aside. Flourish

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish
thus?

Ch. Believe, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft; win chances here!

Enter a Nurse, with a black-a-moor child in her arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords:

O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor?

Aar. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all.

Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

Nur. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone!

Now help, or win beside thee evermore!

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep?

What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms?

Nur. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye.

O'er empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace:

She a deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom?

Nur. I mean, she's brought to bed.

Aar. Well, God

Give her good rest! What hath he sent her?

Nur. A devil.

Aar. Why, then she's the devil's dam; a devil heav.

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful
thing.

Here is the babe, as lathouse as a toad

Amongst the filthest breeders of our climate.

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp thy seal.

And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Out, out, you whore! is black so base a hue!

Sweet blows, you are a beautiful blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aar. Done! that which thou

Canst not undo.

Ch. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone. (choice!)

Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed

Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a seed!

Ch. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must; the mother wills it so.

Aar. What, must it, nurse! then let no man,
but I,

Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll breach the tadpole on my rapier's point: [it.

Nurse, give it me: my sword shall avenge despatch

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plow thy bowels up

[Takes the child from the Nurse, and draws.

Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother? Now, by the burning tapers of the sky (thou!)

That shone so brightly when this boy was got,

He dies upon my scimitar's sharp point.

That touches this my first-born son and heir!

I tell you, younglings, not Escalus

With all his throatling band of Typhos's brood,

Not great Alcides, nor the end of war,

Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what; ye scurvy, shallow-hearted boys!

Ye white-lim'd walls! ye alabaster painted signs!

Coal-black is better than another hue;

In that it seems to bear another hue:

For all the water in the ocean

Can never turn a swan's black legs to white,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am of age

To keep mine own; excuse it how she can.

Dem. Will thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself;

The vigour, and the picture of my youth:

This, before all the world, do I prefer:

This, manage all the world, will I keep safe,

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever smok'd.

Ch. Rome will despise her for this foul corpse.

Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Ch. I blush to think upon this inhumanity.

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears: (ing

Eye, treacherous hue! that will betray with blush-

The close enacts and counsels of the heart!

Here's a young lad fram'd of another loe:

Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father;

As who should say, Old lad, I am thine own

He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed

Of that self-blood that first gave life to you;

And, from that womb, where you were impress'd were,

He is enfranchis'd and come to light:

Nay, he's your brother by the surer side,

Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy advice;

Save thou the child, as we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.

My son and I will have the wind of you:

Keep there: Now talk at pleasure of your safety.

Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth;
Which made me down to throw my books, and fly:
Causeless, perhaps: But pardon me, sweet aunt:
And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will.

(Lavinia turns over the books which Lucius has let fall.)

Tu. How now, Lavinia?—Marcus, what means this?

Some book there is that she desires to see:—
Which is it, girl, of those?—Open them, boy—
But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd,
Come, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.—
Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than one.

Confederate in the fact?—Ay, more there was:—
Or else to heaven she henges them for revenge.

Tu. Lucius, what book is that she toucheth so?

Boy. Grand sire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis;
My mother gave't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone?
Perhaps she call'd it from among the rest.

Tu. Soft! see, how busily she turns the leaves!
Help her:—

What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read?
This is the tragic tale of Philomel,

And treats of Tereus' treason, and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was not of thine annoy.

Mar. See, brother, see; note, how she quotes
The leaves.

Tu. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet Ravish'd, and wrong'd, as Philomela was,

Forc'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?—
See, see!—

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,
(O, had we never, never, hunted there!)

Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders, and for rapes.

Mar. O, why should nature build so foul a den,
Unless the gods delight in tragedies!

Tu. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends!—

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,

That left the camp to sin in Lucrece' bed?
Mar. Sit down, sweet niece;—brother, sit down by me.—

Apollo, Palas, Jove, or Mercury,
Inspire me, that I may this treason find!

My lord, look here:—Look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,

This after me, when I have writ my name
Without the help of any hand at all.

(He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with his feet and mouth.)

Can'st be that heart, that forc'd us to this shift!—
Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,

What God will have discover'd for revenge:
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain,

That we may know the traitors, and the truth!
(She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stamps, and writes.)

Tu. O, do you read, my lord, what she hath writ!

Strapion—Chiron—Demetrius.

Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora
Performers of this heinous, bloody deed!

Tu. Mayne Dominator poli,
Tam lentus oculis sceleris? Tam lentus videt!

Mar. O, calm thee, gentle lord! although, I
know,

There is enough written upon this earth,
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
And arm the minds of infants to exclaim:
My lord, kneel down with me: Lavinia, kneel;
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope;
And swear with me,—as with the woful seers,
And father, of that chaste dishonour'd dame,
Lord Junius Brutus swore for Lucrece' rape.—
That we will prosecute, by good advice,
Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Tu. 'Tis sure enough, as you knew how,
But if you hurt these hear whelps, then beware:
The dam will wake; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And, when he sleeps, will she do what she list.
You're a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone,
And, come, I will go get a loaf of bread,
And with a gad of steel will write these words,
And lay it by: the surly northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sybil's leaves, abroad,
And where's your lesson then?—Boy, what may
you?

Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad-bodiness to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft
For this ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And uncle, so will I, an I live.

Tu. Come, go with me into mine armoury;
Lucius, I'll fit thee: and whilst, my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents, that I intend to send them both:
Come, come; thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?

Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grand-Tu. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another course.

Lavinia, come:—Marcus, look to my house;
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court;

Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.
(Exeunt Titus, Lavinia, and Boy.)

Mar. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,

And not relent, or not compassion him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy,

That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than five-men's marks upon his better'd shield:

But yet so just, that he will not revenge:—
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus! (Exit.)

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Aaron, Chiron, and Demetrius, at one door;
at another door, young Lucius, and an Attendant, with a bundle of weapons, and serves wait upon them.

Chi Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius:
He hath some message to deliver to us.

Aar. Ay, some bad message from his mad grandfather.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus;

And pray the Roman gods, comfort you both.
(Aside.)

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: What's the news?

Boy. That you are both decipher'd, that's the
For villains mark'd with rape. (Aside.) May it
please you,

My grand sire, well-belov'd, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,

He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, 'would thou wert as thou 'forest have been!
But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs;
And make proud Saturninus and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Titus' House. A Banquet set out.

Enter Titus, Marcus, Lavinia, and young Lucius, a boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look, you eat no more Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknot that sorrow-wreathed knot;
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot permeate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh.
Then thus I thump it down—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost lack in signs!

[To Lavinia.
When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating.

Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole;
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and soaking in,
Drawn the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fye, brother, fye! teach her not thus to lay

Such violent hands upon her tender life.
Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already!

Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of
hands:—

To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands:
Last we remember still, that we have none.—
Fye, fye, how frantically I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands:
If Marcus did not name the word of hands!—
Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this:— Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says:—

I can interpret all her martyr'd signs:—
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears, Brew'd with her sorrows, wash'd upon her cheeks:—

Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect.
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not agh, nor hold thy stumps to
heaven,

Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
Set I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
And, by still practice, learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:

Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Mar. Alas, the tender boy, in passion, mov'd,
Dost weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender saping; thou art made of
tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[Marcus strikes the dish with a knife.
What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Mar. At that that I have kill'd, my lord; a fly.
Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart.

Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
A deed of death, done on the innocent,
Becomes not 'Titus' brother: Get thee gone;
I see, thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.
Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother?

How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly!

That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-favour'd fly.
Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O.
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor,
Come hither purposely to poison me.—
There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.—
Ah, strah!

Yet I do think we are not brought so low,
But that, between us, we can kill a fly.
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Mar. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on
him,
He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.—
Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young.
And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Before Titus' House.

Enter Titus and Marcus. Then enter young Lucius, Lavinia running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia Follows me every where. I know not why:—
Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes!

Alas, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Mar. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee
harm.
Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.

Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius:—Somewhat dith
See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee:
Somewhat her would she have thee go with her.

Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee.

Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator. [Thus!
Canst thou not guess wherefore she plees thee?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess,
Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her:
For I have heard my grandsire say full oft,
Extreme grief would make men mad;
And I have read, that Hecuba of Troy
Ran mad through sorrow: That made me to fear;

My youth can better spare my blood than you :

And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended

Rome,

And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe,

Writing destruction on the enemy's castle ?

O, none of both but are of high desert :

My hand hath been both idle ; let it serve

To ransom my two nephews from their death ;

Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,

For fear they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more ; such wither'd herbs

as these

Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,

Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's care,

Now let me show a brother's love to thee

Tit. Agree between you ; I will spare my hand

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar. But I will use the axe.

[Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.]

Tit. Come hither, Aaron ; I'll deceive them

both ;

Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,

And never, whilst I live, deceive men as :—

But I'll deceive you in another sort.

And that you'll say, ere half an hour can pass.

[Aside.]

[He cuts off Titus's hand.]

Enter Lucius and Marcus.

Tit. Now, stay your strife ; what shall be, is despatch'd :—

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand :

Tell him, it was a hand that ward'd him

From thousand dangers ; bid him bury it ;

More hath it merited, that let it have

As for my sons, say, I sold out of them

As jewels purchas'd at an easy price ;

And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus : and for thy hand,

Look by and by to have thy sons with thee :—

Their heads I mean.—O, how this villainy [Aside.]

Doth fast me with the very thoughts of it !

Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,

Aaron will have his soul black like his face

[To Lavinia.]

Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to heaven.

And bow this feeble ruin to the earth :

If any power pities wretched tears

To that I call :—What, wilt thou kneel with me ?

[To Lavinia.]

Do then, dear heart ; for heaven shall hear our prayers :

Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,

And stain the sun with fog, or smother clouds.

When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O, brother, speak with possibilities,

And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom ?

Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,

Then into limits could I bind my woes :

When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth overflow ?

If the woeless rage, doth not the sea wax mad,

Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swollen face ?

And wilt thou have a reason for this coil ?

I am the sea ; hark, how her sighs do blow !

She is the weeping welkin, I the earth :

Then must my sea be moved with her sighs ;

Then must my earth with her continual tears

Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd :

For why ? my bowels cannot hide her woes,

But like a drunkard must I vomit them.

Then give me leave ; for losses will have leave

To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues

Enter a Messenger with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid

For that good hand thou sent'st to the emperor ;

Here are the heads of thy two noble sons ;

And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back :

Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd :

That woe is me to think upon thy woes,

More than remembrance of my father's death.

[Exit.]

Mar. Now let hot Aetna cool in Sicily,

And be my heart an ever-burning hell !

These miseries are more than may be borne !

To weep with them that weep doth ease some

But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrink thereat !

That ever death should let life bear his name,

Where life hath no more interest but to breathe !

Mar. Alas, poor heart, that has is comfortless,

As frozen water to a starved snake.

[End.]

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an

Mar. Now, farewell, flattery : Die, Andronicus,

Thou dost not slumber : see, thy two men's heads ;

Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here,

Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight

Struck pale and bloodless ; and thy brother, I,

Aven like a stony image, cold and numb.

Ah ! now no more will I control thy griefs :

Keat of thy silver hair, thy other hand

Gnawing with thy teeth ; and be this dismal sight

The closing up of our most wretched eyes :

Now is a time to sorn ; why art thou still ?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha !

[This hour.]

Mar. Why dost thou laugh ? it fits not with

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed :

Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,

And would usurp upon my wat'ry eyes,

And make them blind with tributary tears ;

Then which way shall I find revenge's cave ?

For these two heads do seem to speak to me ;

And threat me, I shall never come to bliss,

Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,

Even in their throats this have committed them.

Come, let me see what task I have to do.—

You heavy people, circle me about :

That I may turn me to each one of you,

And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.

The vow is made.—Come, brother, take a head :

And in this hand the other will I bear :

Lavinia, thou shalt be employ'd in these things ;

Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.

As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight ;

Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay :

Hie to the Gethse, and raise an army there ;

And, if you love me, as I think you do,

Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia.]

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father ;

The proudest man that ever liv'd in Rome :

Farewell, proud Rome ! till Lucius come again

Lac. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man; if they did hear, They would not mark me; or, if they did mark, All bootless to them, they'd not pity me.

Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale;
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And, were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones:

A stone is silent, and offendeth not;
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.

But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Lac. To receive my two brothers from their
For which attempt, the judges have pronounced
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee.
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
From these devourers to be banish'd!
But who comes with my brother Marcus here?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weep;
Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break;
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Lac. Ah me! this object kills me! [her]

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight?

What foul hath added water to the sea?

Or brought a fragrant to bright-burning Troy?

My grief was at the height, before thou cam'st,

And now, like Nitus, it disdainteth bounds.

Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;

For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain;

And they have nurs'd this woe, in feeding life;

In bootless prayer have they been held up,

And they have serv'd me to effectless use;

Now, all the service I require of them

Is, that the one will help to cut the other —

Thy well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;

For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Lac. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd

thee?

Mar. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,

That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,

Is torn from forth that pretty bellow cage;

Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung

Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

Lac. O, my thou for her, who hath done this need?

Mar. O, thou I found her, straying in the park,

Seeking to hide herself: as doth the deer,

That hath receiv'd some unsecuring wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her,

Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:

For now I stand as one upon a rock,

Expos'd with a wilderness of sea;

Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,

Expecting ever when some envious surge

Will in his wrath bowels swallow him.

This way to death my wretched sons are gone

Here stands my other son, a banish'd man:
And here my brother, weeping at my woe;

But that which gives my soul the greatest spurn,

Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul. —

Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,

It would have maddened me; What shall I do

Now I behold thy lively body so?

Thou hast no hands, to wipe away thy tears;

Nor tongue, to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:

Thy husband he is dead; and, for his death,

Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this;

Look, Marcus! ah, son Lucius, look on her!

When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears

Stood on her cheeks; as doth the honey dew

Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her husband:

Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,

Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them. —

No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;

Witness the sorrow that their sister makes. —

Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;

Or make some sign how I may do thee ease:

Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,

And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain;

Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks

How they are stain'd; like meadows, yet not dry

With miry slime left on them by a flood?

And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,

Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,

And made a brine-pot with our bitter tears?

Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?

Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows

Pass the remainder of our hateful days?

What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues,

Plot some device of further misery,

To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Lac. Sweet father, cease your tears: for, at your grief,

See, how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece: — good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,

Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine, [own]

For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine

Lac. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her

signs:

Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say

That to her brother which I said to thee:

His napkin, with his true tears all beset,

Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.

O, what a sympathy of woe is this!

As far from help as limbo is from bliss!

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor

Sends thee this word, — That if thou love thy sons,

Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,

Or any one of you, chop off your hand,

And send it to the king: he, for the same,

Will send thee hither both thy sons alive;

And that shall be the ransom for their lack.

Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!

Dost ever raven sing so like a lark,

That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?

With all my heart, I'll send the emperor

My hand:

Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Lac. Stay, father: for that noble hand of thine,

That hath thrown down so many enemies

Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the 'em:

Titus Andronicus.—Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her.
 Speak, Lavinia, what accursed hand
 Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight?

TITUS ANDRONICUS, Act III., Scene I.

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [to Tit.] fell curs of bloody kind.

Have here heretofore my brother of his life :—
Sir, drag them from the pit unto the prison :
There let them hide, until we have devis'd
Some meter-head of torturing pain for them.

Tem. What are they in this pit? O wond'rous thing!

How easily murder is discovered!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee
I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,
That this fell fault of my accursed sons,
Accurs'd, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, it is apparent.—
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tem. Andronicus himself did take it up.
Tit. I did, my lord : yet let me be their bail :
For by my father's reverend tomb, I vow,
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them : see, thou follow me.

Some bring the murder'd body, some the murder-
Let them not speak a word, the guilt is plain :
For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That and upon them should be executed.

Tem. Andronicus, I will entreat the king ;

Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come ; stay not to talk with them.
[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, with Levinia, revivish ; her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell us if thy tongue can speak,

Who 'twas that cut thy tongue, and revivish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so :

And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.

Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can scowl. [hands.]

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy face.
Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash ;

And so let's leave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An' twere my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hadst time to help thee, knit the cord.
[Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron.]

Enter Marcus.

Mar. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?

Cousin, a word : Where is your husband?—
If I do dream, 'twould all my wealth would wake me!

If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—

Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungente hands
Have lopp'd, and how'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches? those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in ;

And might not pain so great a happiness,
As half thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—

Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy rosed lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.

But sure, some Tereus hath deflower'd thee ;
And, lest thou should'st detect him, cut thy tongue.

Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—

As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—

Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.

Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so?
O, that I knew thy heart ; and knew the heart,
That I might rail at him to ease my mind!

Sorrow conceal'd, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.

Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind :

But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee ;
A craftier Tereus hast thou met withal,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off.

That could have better sew'd than Philomela.
O, had the monster seen those lily hands

Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them!

He would not then have touch'd them for his life!
Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made,

He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.

Come, let us go, and make thy father blind :
For such a sight will blind a father's eye :

One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads ;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes!

Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee,
O, could our mourning ease thy misery! [Exeunt]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of justice, with Martius and Quintus, bound, passing on to the place of execution; Titus going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!

For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, while you securely slept ;

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed ;
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd ;
And for these bitter tears, which now you see

Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks ;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought!

For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed.

For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write [Throwing himself on the ground.]

My heart's deep languor, and my soul's and tears.
Let my tears staunch the earth's dry appetite ;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[Exeunt Sen., Trib., &c. with the prisoners.]

O earth, I will beseech thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two accurs'd urns,
Than youthful April shall with all his show'ers :

In summer's drought, I'll drop upon thee still ;
In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter Lucius, with his sword drawn.

O, reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death ;
And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O, noble father, you lament in vain ;
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you renout your arrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Tem. I know not what it means; away with her.
Luc. O, let me teach thee: for my father's sake, That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee.

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tem. Had thou in person ne'er offended me,
 Even for his sake am I pitiless:—
 Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain,
 To save your brother from the sacrifice:
 But fierce Andronicus would not relent
 Therefore away with her, and use her as you will;
 The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

Luc. O Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen,
 And with thine own hands kill me in this place:
 For 'tis not life, that I have begg'd so long;
 For I was slain, when Bassianus died. [She goes.]

Tem. What begg'st thou then? food woman, let Luc. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing
 more.

That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
 O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,
 And tangle me into some loathsome pit;
 Where never man's eye may behold my body:
 Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tem. So should I rub my sweet sores of their feet:
 No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.
Dem. Away, for thou hast staid us here too long.

Luc. No grace! no womanhood! Ah, beastly
 creature!

The blot and enemy to our general name!
 Confusion fall!—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth:—Bring thou her husband; [Dropping off Lavinia.]
 This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

[Exit.]
Tem. Farewell, my sons: see, that you make her sure.

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed,
 Till all the Andronici be made away.
 Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,
 And let my spleenful woes this trull devour. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Aaron, with Quintus and Martius.

Aar. Come on, my lords: the better foot before:
 Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit.
 Where I copy'd the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, what'er it bodes.
Mart. And mine, I promise you; were't not for shame,

We'd could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.
 [Martius falls into the pit.]

Quin. What, art thou fallen? What subtle noli is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briars;
 Whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
 As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?

A very fatal place it seems to me:—

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mart. O, brother, with the diabolical object
 That ever eye, with sight, made heart lament.

Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here;

That he thereby may give a likely guess,
 How these were they that made away his brother.

[Exit Aaron.]

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
 From this unallow'd and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surpris'd with an unthought fear:

A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints;

My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,

Aaron and thou look down into this den,
 And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart
 Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
 The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise:

O, tell me how it is: for ne'er till now
 Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies enshroud'd here,
 All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
 In this detested, dark, bloody drinking pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
 A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,
 Which, like a taper in some monument,

Doth shine upon the dead man's earthly cheeks
 And shows the ragged entrails of this pit:

So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,
 When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.

O brother, help me with thy fainting hand,—

If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—

Out of this fell devouring receptacle,

As hateful as Ceyxus' misty mouth. [Exit.]

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb

Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help. [Aspin.]

Quin. Thy hand once more: I will not loose

The thou art here aloft, or I below:

Thou canst not move to me, I come to thee.

[Falls in.]

Enter Saturninus and Aaron.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here
 And what he is, that now we leap'd into it.

Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus:

Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,

To find thy brother Bassianus dead. [Just:]

Sat. My brother dead? I know, thou dost but

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;

'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,

But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, with Attendants; Titus Andronicus, and Lucius.

Tem. Where is my lord, the king? [Gruf.]

Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing

Tam, where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound;

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tem. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ,

The omplot of this timeless tragedy;

And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold

in pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Aside.] An if we miss to meet him hand

sumely,—

Sweet husbandman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,—

Do thou so much as dig the grave for him;

Thou know'st our meaning: Look for thy reward

Among the nettles at the elder tree,

Which overshades the mouth of that same pit,

Where we decreed to bury Bassianus

Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.

O Tamora! was ever heard the like?

This is the pit, and this the elder-tree:

Look, sir, if you can find the huntsman out,

That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the track of cold

[Showing it]

When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
While hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious larks.

Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Ans. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Sorrow is dominator over mine:

What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy?
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?

No, madam, these are no venereal signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora,—the empress of my soul, [three,— Which never hopes more heaven than rests in
This is the day of doom for Bassianus;

His Philomet must lose her tongue to-day:
Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.

Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll:—
Now question me no more, we are espied;
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!
Ans. No more, great empress, Bassianus comes:
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Bas. Who have we here? Rome's royal empress,
Unfurnish'd of her well-becoming troop?
Or is it Dian, habited like her;
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,
To see the general hunting in this forest?

Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps!
Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently
With horns, as was Actæon's; and the hounds
Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unsummon'd intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in horning,
And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments:
Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day!

'Tis pity, they should take him for a stag.
Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train?
Disinherited from your snow-white goodly steed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moor?

If foul desire had not conducted you?
Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love;
This valley fits the purpose passing well. [three.

Ans. The king, my brother, shall have note of Lav. Ay, for these ships have made him noted long:

Good king! to be so mightily shew'd!
Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius.

Dm. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious
mother,

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale!
These two have 'twic'd me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale you see, it is:
The trees, though destined summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful smeltree
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven.

And, when they shew'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand seeds, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urethras,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.

No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew:
And leave me to this miserable death.

And then they call'd me, foul adulteress,
Incontinent Gosh, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect.

And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
Thy vengeance on me had they executed:
Revenge it, as you love your mother's life.
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dm. This is a witness that I am thy son.
[Stabs Bassianus
Chir. And this from me, struck home to show my strength. [Stabbing him likewise.

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis,—wary, barbarous Tamora!

For no name fits thy nature but thy own! [Boys,
Tam. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, say Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dm. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her;
First, thrash the corn, then after burn the straw:
This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty, [noise:
And with that painted hope braves your might—
And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chir. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch,
Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when you have the honey you desire,
Let not this weep outlive us both to sting.

Chir. I warrant you, madam; we will make 'tast
sure—
Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy
That nice preserved honesty of yours.

Lav. O Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's face,—
Tam. I will not hear her speak; away with her.

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her bear me but a word.

Dm. Listen, fair madam: Let it be your glory
To see her tears; but be your heart to them.
As unrelenting flint to drops of rain. [Idem!
Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the O, do not learn her wrath; she taught it them:
The milk, thou suck'dst from her, did turn to marble:

Even at thy test thou hadst thy tyranny.—
Yet every mother breeds not sons alike;
Do thou entreat her show a woman's pity.

[To Chiron.
Chir. What! would'st thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Lav. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark;
Yet I have heard, O could I find it now!
The lion, now'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely pawes par'd all away.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children,
The whilst their own birds fawn in their nests:
O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Ch. I care not, I know she and all the world;
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope. [Rome]

Aer. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in flow furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?

I tell you, lords, ye do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Ch. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.

Aer. To achieve her!—How!

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?

She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;

She is a woman, therefore may be won;

She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.

What, man! more water gilleth by the mill

Than wets the miller of; and easy it is

Of a cat's paw to steal a shive, we know:

Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,

Better than he have yet worn Vulcan's badge.

Aer. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may. [Aside.]

Dem. Then why should he despair, that knows to court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?

What, hast thou not full often struck a doe,

And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aer. Why then, it seems, some certain snatch or so

Would serve your turns.

Ch. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Ch. 'Would you had hit it too;

Then should not we be tir'd with this ado;

Why, bark ye, bark ye,—And are you such fools,

To square for this? Would it offend you then

That both should speed?

Ch. Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me,

So I were one.

Aer. For shame, be friends; and join for that you jar.

The policy and stratagem must do

That you affect; and so must you resolve;

That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,

You must perform accomplish as you may.

Take this of me. Lucere was not more chaste

Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love

A speedier course than lingering languishment

Must we pursue, and I have found the path.

My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;

There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:

The forest walks are wide and spacious;

And many unfrequented plots there are,

Pated by kind for rape and villany:

Single you thither then this dainty doe,

And strike her leisure by force, if not by words:

This way, or but at all, stand you in hope.

Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit,

To villany and vengeance consecrate,

Will we acquaint with all that we intend;

And she shall file our enemies with advice.

That will not suffer you to square yourselves,

But to your wishes' bright advance you hath.

The emperor's court is like the house of funne,

The palace full of toadies, of eyes, of ears:

The words are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull;

There speak, and strive, brave boys, and take your turns:

There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's

eye.

And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Ch. Thy counsel, but, sweetest, of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fast out woful, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits.

Per Stippe, per mavor. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Forest near Rome. A Lodge seen at a distance. Horns and cry of Hounds heard.

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hamlets, &c. Narcon, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Ti. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green:

Uncouple here, and let us make a lay.

And wake the emperor and his lovely bride.

And rouse the prince: and ring a hunter's peal.

That all the court may echo with the noise.

Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours.

To tend the emperor's person carefully:

I have been troubled in my sleep this night,

But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Horns sound a peal. Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Curva, Demetrius, and Attendants.

Ti. Many good mornings to your majesty:—

Madam, to you as many and as good!—

I promised your grace a hunter's peal

Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,

Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say, no;

I have been broad awake two hours and more.

Sat. Come on, then, horse and chariots let us have.

And to our sport:—Madam, now shall ye see

Our Roman hunting. [To Tamora.]

Aer. I have dogs, my lord,

Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase.

And climb the highest promontory top.

Ti. And I have horse will follow where the game

Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound.

But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

Enter Aaron, with a bag of gold.

Aer. He that had wit, would think that I had

To bury so much gold under a tree, [none]

And never after to inherit it.

Let him, that thinks of me so abjectly,

Know, that this gold must win a stratagem;

Which, cunningly effected, will beget

A very excellent piece of villany:

And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest.

[Hides the gold.]

That have their aims out of the empress' chest.

Enter Tamora.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou

and,

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

The birds chaunt merrily on every bush;

The snake has rolled in the cheerful sun;

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,

And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground:

Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,

And—whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tan'd horns,

As if a double hunt were heard at once,—

Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise:

And—after conflict such as was supposed

The wandering prince of Ithaca once enjoy'd,

My lord, be rul'd by me, be won at last,
Dissemble all your griefs and discontents:
You are but newly planted in your throne:
Lest then the people, and patricians too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude,
(Which Rome reputes to be a heinous crime.)

Yield at entreats, and then let me alone;
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life;
And make them know, what 'tis to let a

queen
Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in vain.

Come, come, sweet emperor,—come, Andronicus,
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That does in tempest of thy misery fructify.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord:
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus:—
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.—
For you, prince Bassianus, I have pawn'd
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia:—
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Lac. We do; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,

That, what we did, was mildly, as we might,
Tending our sister's honour, and our own.

Mor. That on mine honour here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not; trouble us no more.—

Tam. Nay, my, sweet emperor, we must all be
friends:

The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace;
I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's
here,

And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults.

Stand up
Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend: and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a hair-bread from the priest,
Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends:

This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound, we'll give your grace bonjour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and grainiercy too.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning's flash;
Advanced above pale envy's throatning fens.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,

And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistening coach,
And overlooks the highest-peering hills;
So Tamora.—

Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, win thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch; whom thou in triumph hast
Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains;
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes,
Than in Prometheus tied to Caucasus
Away with slavish weeds, and idle thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress,
To wait, and I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis!—This queen,
This syren, that will charm Rome's Salarino,
And see his shipwreck, and his commonweal's
Holla! what storm is this!

Enter Chiron and Demetrius, bowing.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,

And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd;
And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.

Ch. Demetrius, thou dost over-ween in all;
And so in this to bear me down with braves.

'Tis not the difference of a year, or two,
Makes me less gracious, thee more fortunate:

I am as able, and as fit, as thou.
To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace;

And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passion for Lavinia's love.

Aar. Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unad-vised, gave you a dancing-rapier by your side,

Are you so desperate grown, to threat your friends!

Go to: have your lath glad within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.

Ch. Mean while, sir, with the little skill I have,
Full well shall thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave! [They draw.]

Aar. Why, how now, lords!

So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly!

Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge;
I would not for a million of gold,

The cause were known to them it most concerns:
Nor would your noble mother, for much more,

Be so dishonor'd in the court of Rome.
For shame, put up.

Dem. Not I: till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and, wthal, [thrust.]

Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat that he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Ch. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd,— Foul-spoken coward! that thunder's with thy language,

And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aar. Away, I say.—
Now by the gods, that warlike Goths adore,

This petty brabble will undo us all.—
Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous

It is to jut upon a prince's right?
What, is Lavinia then become so loose,

Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be brach'd?

Without contrivance, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware! an should the empress

know
This discord's ground the music would not please.

And tapers burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hymeneus stand,—
I will not re salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.
Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I swear.

If Saturnus advance the queen of Goths,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon:— Lords, accompany
Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnus,
Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquer'd:
There shall we consecrate our spousal rites.
[Exeunt Saturnus, and his Followers; Tamora, and her sons; Aaron, and Goths.]

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride:—
Tam. when wert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs!

Re-enter Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see, what thou hast in a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—
Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed
That hath dishonour'd all our family:
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes;
Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb
This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified:
Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,
Borne in fame; none heavily slain in battle:—
Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impety in you:

My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him;
He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany

Tit. And shall? What villain was it spoke that word!

Quin. He that would vouch't in any place but here.

Tit. What, would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,

And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:

My foes I do repute you every one;

So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mart. He is not with himself; let us withdraw.

Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

[Marcus and the sons of Titus kneel.]

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

[Speak.]

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

[Exit.]

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us
all—

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter

His noble nephew here in virtue's name:

That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous.

The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax

That slew himself; and wise Laertes' son

Did graciously plead for his funerals
Let not young Mutius then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise:—

The dullest day is this, that e'er I saw,

To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—

Well, bury him, and bury me the next

[Mutius is put into the tomb.]

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends.

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb!—

All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius;

He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps—

How comes it, that the subtle queen of Goths

Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus; but, I know, it is:

Whether by device, or no, the heavens can tell:

Is she not then beheld to the man

That brought her for this high good turn so far?

Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter at one side, Saturninus, attended; Tamora, Chiron, Demetrius, and Aaron: At the other, Bassianus, Lavinia, and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize;
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of yours, my lord: I say no
more,

Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,

Thou and thy faction shall repeat this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own.

My true betrothed love, and now my wife?

But let the laws of Rome determine all;

Mean while I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, sir: You are very short with us;

But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best as I may.

Answer I must, and shall do with my life.

Only thus much I give your grace to know,

By all the duties that I owe to Rome,

This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,

Is in opinion, and in honour, wrong'd;

That, in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his own hand did slay his youngest son,

In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath

To be controll'd in that he frankly gave:

Receive him then to favour, Saturnine;

That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,

A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds:

'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me

Rome and the religious heavens by my judge,

How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine!

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora

Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,

Then hear me speak indifferently for all:

And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What! madam! be dishonour'd openly,

And barely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord; The gods of Rome fore-feud,

I should be sutor to dishonour you!

But, on mine honour, dare I undertake

For good lord Titus' innocence in all.

Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs:

Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;

Love not so noble a friend on vain suppose,

Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.—

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, can't thou tell:—

Tm. Patience, prince Saturnine.

Sat. Romans, do me right:—
Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them!

I'll Saturnine be Rome's emperor:—
[Not Andronicus, 'twould thou wert shipp'd to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.]

Lac. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tm. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee [themselves.]

The people's hearts, and wean them from thee—
Bes. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee

But honour thee, and will do till I die;
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,

I will most thankful be: and thanks, to men
Of noble minds, is honourable meed.

Tm. People of Rome, and people's tribunes
here,

I ask your voices, and your suffrages;
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Trib. To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,

The people will accept whom he admits.
Tm. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,

That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,

Reflect on Rome, as Titus's rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this common-weal:

Then if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say,—Long live our emperor!

Mar. With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians, and Plebeians, we create

Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor;
And say,—Long live our emperor Saturnine!

[A long flourish.]
Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
To us in our election this day,

I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness.

And, for an onset, Titus, to advance
My name, and honourable family,

Lavinia will I make my empress—
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,

And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please
thee?

Tm. It doth, my worthy lord; and, in this match,

I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:
And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—

King and commander of our common-weal,
The wide world's emperor,—do I consecrate

My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;
Presenta well worthy Rome's imperial lord:

Requies them then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,

Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,

Romans forget your fealty to me.
Tm. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor; [To Tamora.]

To him, that for your honour and your state,
Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew,—

Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance:
I fough chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer.

Then can't not to be made a scorn in Rome:
'Tis wisely said by thy usage every way

Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes; Madam, he comforts you,

Can make you greater than the queen of Goths.—
Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lav. Not I, my lord; with true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go!

Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and
drum

Bes. Lord Titus, by your leave, this mail is mine. [Seizing Lavinia.]

Tm. How, sir? Are you in earnest then, my
lord?

Bes. Ay, noble Titus; and resolv'd withal.
To do myself this reason and this right.

[The Emperor courts Tamora in dumb show.
Mar. Some casques in our Roman justice:

This prince in justice seizeth but his own.
Lac. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live,

Tm. Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor's guard?

Treason, my lord; Lavinia is surpris'd.
Sat. Surpris'd! By whom?

Bes. By him that justly may
Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

[Exeunt Marcus and Bassianus, with Lavinia.
Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.
Tm. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her
Mut. My lord, you pass not here. [Back.]

Tm. What, villain buy?
Barr'st me my way in Rome!

[Titus kills Mutius.
Mut. Help, Lucius, help!

Re-enter Lucius.

Lac. My lord, you are unjust; and, more than so,

In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.
Tm. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:

My sons would never so dishonour me:
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Lac. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promise's love. [Exit.]

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Not her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:

I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once,
Thine never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,

Confederates all thus to dishonour me.
Was there none else in Rome to make a stale of,
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus

Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st, I, he god the empire at thy hands.

Tm. O monstrous! what reprehensible words
these!

Sat. But go thy ways; no, give that changing
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.
Tm. These words are razors to my wounds: I heart.

[Goths.—
Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of
That like the stately Phoebe sought her nymphs,

Doest overtake the gallant'st dames of Rome,—
If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman Gods,— Sith priest and holy water are so near,

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!
Lo, as the hawk, that hath discharged her fraught,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-estate his country with his tears.
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.—
Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend:—
Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that king Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
Those that survive, let Rome reward with love:
Those that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:—[sawd]
Here Goths have given me leave to shroud my Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To labour on the dreadful shore of Styx?—
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The tomb is opened.]
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slum in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more!
Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile,
Add moines fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthly prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.
Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen.
Tam. Stay, Roman brethren:—Gracious conqueror.

Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O, think my son to be as dear to me.
Soft-smooth not, that we are brought to Rome,
To bewail thy triumphs, and return,
Captives to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause!
O! if to fight for king and common weal
Were play to thee, it is to thee.
Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gale?
Draw near them then in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge:
Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.
Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:
To them your son is sacrilegious; and die he must,
To appease their grinning shadows that are gone.
Luc. Away with him; and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consum'd.
[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with Alarbus.]

Tam. O cruel, irreverent party!
[Id. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?
Dem. Oppose not Scythus to ambitious Rome.
Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening look.
Then, madam, stand ready:—but hope withal,
The self-same gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy
With opportunity of sharp revenge,
[*Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,
May favour Tamora, the queen of the Goths.*]

[When G.aths were Goths, and Tamora was queen:]
To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with their swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are hopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire.
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky
Remaneth sought, but to inter our brethren,
And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome.
Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.
[Trumpets sounded, and the coffin laid in the tomb.]
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here are no
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep: [Exeunt.]

Enter Lavinia.
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!
Lav. In peace and honour live lord Titus long,
My noble lord and father, live in fame!
Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears
I render, for my brethren's obsequies;
And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy
Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome:
O, bless us here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud.
Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly re-serv'd
The cordial of mine age to gladden my heart!—
Lavinia, live; on live thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter Marcus Andronicus, Saturninus, Bassianus, and others.

Mar. Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,
You that survive, and you that sleep in fame.
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all.
That in your country's service drew your swords:
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp.
That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,
And triumphs over chance, in honour's bed.—
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune, and their trust,
This pallament of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late deceased emperor's sons:
Be candidates then, and put it on,
And help to set a foot on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits,
Than his, that sinks for age and feebleness:
What! should I don this robe, and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day:
To-morrow, yield up rule, resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And buried one and twenty valiant sons,
Knighted in field, slain 'usefully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world.
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.
Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtain and use it compary.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Saturninus, son to the late Emperor of Rome, and afterwards declared Emperor himself.
 Bassianus, brother to Saturninus; in love with Lavinia.

Titus Andronicus, a noble Roman, general against the Goths.

Marcus Andronicus, tribune of the people; and brother to Titus.

Lucius, } sons to Titus Andronicus.
 Quintus, }
 Marius, }
 Mutius, }

Young Lucius, a boy, son to Lucius.
 Publius, son to Marcus the tribune.

Emilius, a noble Roman.

Alarbus, } sons to Tamora.
 Chiron, }
 Demetrius, }

Aaron, a Moor, beloved by Tamora.

A Captain, Tribune, Messenger, and Clown; Romans.

Goths and Romans.

Tamora, Queen of the Goths.

Lavinia, daughter to Titus Andronicus.

A Nurse, and a black Child.

Kinsmen of Titus, Senators, Tribunes, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE. — Rome; and the Country near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Rome. Before the Capitol

The tomb of the Andronici appearing; the Tribunes and Senators stoof, as in the Senate. Enter, below, Saturninus and his Followers, on one side; and Bassianus and his Followers, on the other; with drum and colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
 Defend the justice of my cause with arms;
 And, countrymen, my loving followers,
 Plead my successive title with your swords.
 I am his first-born son, that was the last
 That wore the imperial diadem of Rome;
 Then let my father's hours live in me,
 Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bas. Romans, — friends, followers, favourers of my right, —

If ever Bassianus, Caesar's son,
 Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,
 Keep then this passage to the Capitol;
 And suffer not dishonour to approach
 The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
 To justice, continence, and nobility:
 Bid let desert in pure election shine;
 And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus, stoof, with the crown.

Mar. Princes — that strive by factions, and by Ambitiously for rule and empery, — (friends, Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand

A special party, have, by common voice,
 In election for the Roman empery,
 Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius.
 For many good and great deserts to Rome;
 A nobler man, a braver warrior,
 Lives not this day within the city walls:
 He by the senate is aced home,
 From weary wars against the barbarous Goths
 That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
 Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
 Ten years are spent, since first he undertook
 This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
 Our enemies' pride: Five times he hath return'd
 Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
 In conflicts from the field:
 And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
 Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
 Renowned 'Tus, flourishing in arms.
 Let us entreat. — By honour of his name,
 Whom, worthily, you would have now succeed,
 And in the Capitol and senate's right,
 Whom you pretend to honour and adore, —
 That you withdraw you, and abate your strength;
 Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
 Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I do ally
 In thy uprightness and integrity,
 And so I love and honour thee and thine.
 Thy nobler brother Titus, and his sons,
 And her, to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
 Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
 That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
 And to my fortunes, and the people's favour,
 Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.
 Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right,

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all:
 And to the love and favour of my country
 Commit myself, my person, and my cause.
 [Exeunt the Followers of Saturninus.
 Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
 As I am confident and kind to thee. —
 Open the gates and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor.
 [Sat. and Bas. go into the Capitol, and consult with Senators, Marcus, &c.]

SCENE II. — The same.

Enter a Captain and others.

Cop. Romans, make way; the good Andronicus,
 Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
 Successful in the battles that he fights,
 With honour and with fortune in return'd,
 From where he circumscribed with his sword,
 And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

Flourish of trumpets, &c. Enter Mutius and Marius: after them, two men bearing a coffin covered with black; then Quintus and Lucius. After them, Titus Andronicus; and then Tamora, with Alarbus, Chiron, Demetrius, Aaron, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and people following. The bearers set down the coffin, and Titus speaks

Br. This is he:
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp:
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be as evidence now.

Cym. O, what am I?
A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother
Rejoic'd deliverance owe:—Bless'd may you be,
That, after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may reign as them now!—O Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Imo. No, my lord;
I have got two worlds by't. — O my gentle brother, have we thus met! O never say hereafter, (thens,
But I am truest speaker: you call'd me brother,
When I was but your sister; I you brothers,
When you were so indeed.

Cym. Did you e'er meet?

Ans. Ay, my good lord.

Ans. And at first meeting lov'd;

Confess'd so, until we thought he us'd.

Cor. By the queen's dram she swallow'd.

Cym. O rare instinct!

When shall I hear all through? This fierce abridgement,

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.—Where, how liv'd

you, [Time]

And when came you to serve our Roman cap?

How parted with your brothers? how first met them? [These]

Why find you from the court? and whether?

And your three motives to the battle, with

I know not how much more, should be demanded;

And all the other by-dependencies. [Place]

From chance to chance; but nor the time, nor

Will serve our long interrogatories. See,

Prothymus anchors upon Imogen:

And she, like harmless lightning, throws her eye

On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting

Each object with a joy; the counterchange is severally in all. Let's quit this ground,

And smoke the temple with our sacrifices.—

These art my brother; So we'll hold these ever.

[To Belarius.]

Imo. You are my father too; and did relieve

To me this gracious season. [Ans.]

Cym. All o'erjoy'd,

Have them in honours; let them be joyful too,

For they shall taste our comfort.

Imo. My good master,

I will yet do you service.

Luc. Happy be you!

Cym. The foreign soldier, that so nobly fought,

He would have well becom'd this place, and

The thankings of a king. [Grac'd]

Post. I am, sir,

The soldier that did company these three in poor beseeching; 'twas a fitment for

The purpose I then follow'd; That I was he,

Speak, Iachimo: I had you down, and might

Have made you finish.

Iach. I am down again:

[Answering.]

But now my heavy conscience sinks my knees,

As these your forces did. 'Take that life, beseech

Which I so often owe: but, your ring first; [You,

And here the bracelet of the truest princess,

That ever swore her faith.

Post. Kneel not to me;

The power that I have on you, is to spare you;

The malice towards you, to forgive you: Live,

And deal with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd;

We'll leave our freedom of a son in-law:

Patience's the word to all.

Ans. You hold us, sir,

As you did mean indeed to be our brother:

Joy'd are we, that you are.

Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord of Rome, [thought,

Call forth your soothsayer: As I slept, me-

Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back,

Appear'd to me, with other spiritly shows

Of mine own kindred: when I wak'd, I found

This label on my bosom; whose containing

Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it: let him show

His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarnonius,—

Luc. Here, my good lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Sooth. [Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopp'd branches, which have dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Prothymus and his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish

in peace and plenty.

Thou, Leonatus, art the lion's whelp:

The fit and apt construction of thy name,

Being Leo-natus, doth import so much:

The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,

Which we call moths air; and moths air

We term it ender: which moths air divine,

Is the most constant wife; who, even now,

Answering the letter of the oracle,

Unknown to you, unthought, were clipp'd about

With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline,

Personates thee; and thy lopp'd branches point

Thy two sons forth: who, by Belarius stolen,

For many years thought dead, are now reviv'd,

To the majestic cedar join'd; whose issue

Promises Britain peace and plenty.

Cym. Well,

My peace we will begin:—And, Caius Lucius,

Although the victor, we submit to Caesar,

And to the Roman empire; promising

To pay our wonted tribute, from the which

We were dumfounded by our wicked queen:

Whom heavens, in justice, (both on her, and here,) have laid most heavy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the powers above do the harmony of this peace. The vision

Which I made known to Lucius, are the strokes

Of this yet scarce cold battle, at this instant is full accomplish'd: For the Roman eagle,

From south to west on wing soaring aloft,

Lessen'd herself, and in the beams of the sun

So vanish'd: which foreshow'd our princely

eagle,

The imperial Caesar, should again unite

His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,

Which shines here in the west.

Cym. And was the eagle;

And let our crooked smokes climb to their na-

trils

From our blest'd altars! Publish we this peace

To all our subjects. Set we forward: Let

A Roman and a Briton emign wave

Friendly together: so through Lud's town march:

And in the temple of great Jupiter

Our peace we'll ratify; seal it with feasts.—

Set on there:—Never was a war did cease.

Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace. [Exeunt]

Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being taken, would cease
The present power of life; but, in short time,
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions.—Have you taken of it?
Iso. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My boys,
There was our error.

Gai. This is sure, Fidele. [you?]
Iso. Why did you throw your wedded lady from Think, that you are upon a rock; and now
Throw me again. [Embracing him.]

Pis. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die!

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child!
What mak'st thou me a dillard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me?

Iso. Your blessing, sir.
[Kneeling.]

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not;
You had a motive for it.

[To Guiderius and Arviragus.]
Cym. My tears, that fall,
Prove holy water on thee! Inogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Iso. I am sorry for't, my lord.
Cym. O, she was naught; and long of her it was,
That we meet here so strangely: But her son is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pis. My lord,
Now fear is from me. I'll speak troth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me [swore],
With his sword drawn; foam'd at the mouth, and if I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death: By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket; which directed him
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford;
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he inform'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My lady's honour: what because of him,
I further know not.

Gai. Let me end the story:
I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forefend!
I would not thy good deeds should from my lips
Fluck a hard sentence: prythee, valiant youth,
Deny't again.

Gai. I have spoke it, and I did it.
Cym. He was a prince.

Gai. A most uncivil one: The wrongs he did
me

Were nothing prince-like; for he did provoke
With language that would make me spurn the sea.

If it could so mar to me: I cut off his head;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee.
By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and Endure our law: Thou art dead. [must]

Iso. That headless man
I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,
And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, sir king:
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself; and hath
More of thee merited, than a band of Clotens
Had ever scar for.—Let his arms alone;

[To the guard.]
They were not born for bondage.
Cym. Why, old soldier.

Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we!

Arv. In that he spake too far.
Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three
But I will prove, that two of us are as good
As I have given out him—My sons, I must.
For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Arv. Your danger is Ours.

Gai. And our good his.
Bel. Have at it then.—
By leave;—Thou had'st, great king, a subject
Was call'd Belarius. What of him? he is

Cym. A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He is, that hath Assau'd this age; indeed, a banish'd man;
I know not how, a traitor

Cym. Take him hence;
The whole world shall not save him.

Not too hot:
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
And let it be confucate all, so soon
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons!
Bel. I am too blunt, and saucy: Here's my Ere I arise, I will prefer my sons; [kneer]
Then, spare not the old father. Mighty sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father,
And think they are my sons, are none of mine:
They are the issue of your loins, my liege.

Am I about of your begetting?

Cym. How! my issue!

Bel. So sure as you your father's, I, old Morgau.

Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:
Your pleasure was my mere offence, my punishment

Itself, and all my treason; that I suffer'd,
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty years
Have I train'd up: those arts they have, as I Could put into them; my breeding was, sir, as Your highness knows. I, heir nurse, Eurphile, Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children upon my banishment: I nur'd her too; [drea]
Having receiv'd the punishment before.

For that which I did then: Beaten for loyalty,
Excited me to treason: Their dear loss,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweet'st companions in the world:—
The benediction of these covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.

Cym. 'Thou weep'st, and speak'st.
'The service, that you three have done, is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st: I lost my children;
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Be pleas'd awhile.—
This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as yours, is true Guiderius;
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother, which, for more probatum
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderius had Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star;
It was a mark of wonder

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side;
Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [to Iach.] step you
forth;

Give answer to this boy, and do it freely;
Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it,
Which is our honour, bitter torture shall [him.
Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to Imo. My boon is, that this gentleman may render
Of whom he had this ring.

Post. What's that to him!

[Aside.

Cym. That diamond upon your finger say,
How came it yours?

Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unspoken that Which, to be spoke, would torture thee

Cym. How! me!

Iach. I am glad to be constrained to utter that which

Torments me to conceal. By villainy
I got this ring; 'twas Leonatus' jewel; Whom thou did'st banish; and (which more, may grieve thee)

As it doth me,) a nobler sir be'er liv'd [lord!
'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more, my

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter,—
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits

Quail to remember.—Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her! Renew thy strength;

I had rather thou should'st live while nature will,
Than die ere I hear more: strive, man, and speak.

Iach. Upon a time, (unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour!) it was in Rome, (accurs'd
The mansion where!) 'twas at a feast, (O 'would
Our viands had been poison'd!) or, at least, (mus, Thou which I heav'd to head!) the good Posthu-(What should I say! he was too good, to be Where ill men were; and was the best of all Amongst the rest of good ones,) sitting sadly
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy
For beauty that made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak: for feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-paght Minerva,
Posthurs beyond brief nature: for condition,
A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves in woman for; besides, that look of wiving,
Furrows, which strikes the eye:—

Cym. I stand on fire:

Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall.

Callest thou would'st grieve quickly.—This Posthumus

(Must like a noble lord in love, and one
That had a myal lover,) took his hint:

And, not disparaging whom we prais'd, (therein
He was as calm as virtue) he began [made,
His mistress' picture; which by his tongue being
And then a mind put in't, either our brags
Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description
I need as unspeaking saw.

Cym. Nay, say, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter's custody.—There it begins,
In space of her, as I have had but dreams
And she alive were cold: Whereat, I, wretch!
Made scruple of his praise; and waver'd with him
Pieces of gold, 'twixt which then he wore
Upon his honour'd breast, to attain
To out the place of his bed, and win this ring
By hers and mine adultery: he, true knight,
No leaver of her honour's confidence
Then I did truly find her, stakes this ring;
And would so, had it been a carbuncle
Of Paphos' wheel; and might so easily, had it

Been all the worth of his car. Away to Britain
Put I in this design: Well may you, sir,
Remember now at court, where I was taught
Of your chaste daughter the wide difference
'Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench'd
Of hope, not long since, mine Italian brain
'Gain in your diller Britain operate
Most vilely; for my vantage, excellent;
And, to be brief, my practice so prevail'd,
That I return'd with singular proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his belief in her renown
With tokens thus, and thus; averring notes
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, this her bracelet,
(O, cunning, how I got it!) nay, some marks
Of secret on her person, that he could not
But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd,
I having taken the forfeit. Whereupon,— Methinks I see him now,—

Post. Ay, so thou dost, [Coming forward.

Italian send!—Ah me, most credulous fool,
Exaggerous misliver, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villas past, in being,
To come!—O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,
Some upright justice! Thou, king, send out
For torturers ingenious: it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend,
By being worse than they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy daughter—villain-like, I lie;
That caus'd a lesser villain than myself,
A sacrilegious thief, to do it.—The temple
Of virtue was she; yea, and she herself
Spit, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villainy less than 'twas!—O Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Imo. Peace, my lord; hear, hear—

Post. Shall's have a play of this! Thou scornful page,

There he thy part. [Striking her: she falls.

Imo. O, gentlemen, help, help,
Mine, and your mistress!—O, my lord Posthumus!
You woe kill'd Imogen till now!—Help, help!
Mine honour'd lady!

Cym. Does the world go round?

Post. How come these staggers on me?

Imo. Wake, my mistress!

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike the
To death with mortal joy.

Imo. How fares my mistress?

Imo. O, get thee from my sight:
Thou gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen!

Imo. Lady,

The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing; I had it from the queen.

Cym. New matter still!

Imo. It poison'd me

Cor. O gods!—
I left out one thing which the queen coust'd,
Which must approve thee honest: If Pisanus
Have, and she, given his mistress that confectious
Which I gave him for cordial, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?

Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importun'd me
To temper poisons for her; still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs
Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose

By whom I grant she lives: 'Tis now the time
To ask of whence you are:—report it.

Bel.
In Caubria are we born, and gentlemen:
Further to boast, were neither true nor modest,
Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees:
Arise, my knights o' the battle; I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter Cornelius and Ladies.

There's business in these faces:—Why so sadly
Greet you our victory? you look like Romans,
And not o' the court of Britain.

Cor. Hail, great king!
To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead.

Cym. Whom worse than a physician
Would this report become? But I consider,
By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too—How ended she?

Cor. With horror, sadly dying, like her life;
Which, being cruel to the world, concluded
Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd
I will report, so please you: These her women
Can trip me if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prythee, say.
Cor. First, she confess'd she never loved you;
Affected greatness got by you, not you: (only
Married your royalty, was wife to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this:
And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lies in opening it. Proceed.
Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to
With such integrity, she did confess (love
Was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life,
But that her flight prevented it, she had Ta'en off by poison.

Cym. O most delicate fiend!
Who is't can read a woman's!—Is there more?

Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess,
she had

For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and, lingering,
By inches waste you: In which time she purpos'd,
By watching, weeping, tendence, kissing, to O'ercome you with her show: yes, and in time,
(When she had fitted you with her craft,) to work
Her son into the adoption of the crown.
But failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless-desperate; open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effected; and,
Despairing, died.

Cym. Hear'd you all this, her women?
Lady. We did so, please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful!
Mine ears that heard her flattery: nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming: it had been vicious.

To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was folly in me, thou may'st say.
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter Lucius, Lachimo, the Soothsayer, and other Roman prisoners, guarded; Posthumus behind, and Imogen.

Thou com'st not, Caius, now for tribute; that
The Britons have raz'd out, though with the loss
Of many a hold one; whose kinsmen have made suit,

That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter (granted).

Of you their captives, which ourselves have
So, thank you of your estate.

Lac. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us,
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten'd

Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ransom, let it come: sufficeth,
A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think out: and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat; My boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom'd: never master had
A page so kind, so dutious, diligent,

So tender over his occasions, true,
So feat, so nurse-like: let his virtue join (near
With my request, which, I'll make hold, your high-
Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm.
Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, sir,
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him:
His favour is familiar to me—
Boy, thou hast looked thyself into my grace, (fore,
And art mine own.—I know not why, nor where-
To say, live, boy: ne'er thank thy master: live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy state, I'll give it;
Yea, though thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest ta'en.

Imo. I humbly thank your highness.
Lac. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet, I know, thou wilt.

Imo. No, no! slack,
There's other work in hand; I see a thing
Bitter to me as death: your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

Lac. The boy disdaineth me.
He leaves me, scorns me: Briefly die their joys,
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.—
Why stands he so perplex'd?

Cym. What would'st thou, boy?
I love thee more and more: think more and more What's best to ask. Know'st him thou look'st on? speak.

Wilt have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?
Imo. He is a Roman; so, being kin to me, (and,
Than I to your highness; who, more born your va-
An something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so?
Imo. I'll tell you, sir, in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. What's thy name?

Imo. Fidele, sir.

Cym. Thou art my good youth, my page;
I'll be thy master: Walk with me: speak freely.

(Cymbeline and Imogen converse apart.)
Bel. Is not this boy reviv'd from death?

Arv. One said another
Not more remembers: That sweet rosy lad,
Who died, and was Fidele:—What think you?

Qui. The same dead thing alive. (further
Bel. Peace, peace! say further; he eyes us not;
Creatures may be alike; were't he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Qui. But we saw him dead.
Ps. Be silent; let's see further.

It is my mistress: (Aside.
Since she is living, let the time run on
To good, or bad.

(Cymbeline and Imogen come forward.

Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling constancy
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence; and rest
Upon your never-withering banks of flowers:

Be not with mortal accidents oppress'd;
No care of yours it is; you know, 'tis ours.
Whom best I love, I crown; to make my gift.
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content;
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.
Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in
Our temple was he married.—Rise, and fade!—
He shall be lord of holy Inogen,

And happier much by his affliction made.
This tablet lay upon his breast: wherein
Our pleasure has full fortune doth confine;
And so, away: no further with your din
Express impatience, lest you stir up mine—
Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline. [Acrode.]
SC. He came in thunder; his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle
Stepp'd as to foot us: his ascension is
More sweet than our bleas'd fields: his royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his leak,
As when his god is pleas'd.

ALL. Thanks, Jupiter!
SC. The marble pavement clove, he is enter'd
His radiant roof:—Away! and, to be blest,
Let us with care perform his great behest.

[Ghosts vanish.]
Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grand-sire, and begot.

A father to me: and thou hast created
A mother, and two brothers: But [O sworn!]
Gone! they went hence so soon as they were born.
And so I am awake.—Poor wretches, that depend
On greatness' favour, dreamers! I have done;
Wake, and find nothing.—But, alas, I swerve:
Many dream not to find neither deserve.
And yet are stepp'd in favours: so am I.
That have this golden chance, and know not why.
What fairies haunt this ground? A look! O, rare
Be not, as is our fabled world, a garment [one!]
Neider than that it covers: let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,
As good as promises.

[Herald.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking food, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be topp'd branches, which, bring dead many years, shall after rector, be planted to the old stock, and freshly grow: then shall Posthumus and his mistress, Britain be fortunate, and flourish
in peace and plenty.

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue, and brain not: either both, or nothing:
Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such
As sense cannot unite. Be what it is,
The action on my life is like it, which
I'll keep, if but for sympathy.

Re-enter Gaius.

Goel. Come, sir, are you ready for death?
Post. Over-rustied rather: ready long ago.
Goel. Hanging is the word, sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cooked.

Post. So, if I prove a good repast to the spectators, the dust pays the shot.

Goel. A heavy reckoning for you, sir: But the comfort is, you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more tavern bills: which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth:
you come in faint for want of meat, depart reeling with too much drunk: sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much;

purse and brain both empty: the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness: O! of this contradiction you shall now be quit.—O, the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debtor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge:—Your neck, sir, is pen, book, and counters; so the acquaintance follows.

Post. I am merrier to die, than thou art to live.
Goel. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-ache: But a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think, he would change places with his officer; for, look you, sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes, indeed do I, fellow.
Goel. Your death has eyes in't head then: I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know;
or take upon yourself that, which I am sure you do not know; or jump the after enquiry on your own peril: and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going, but such as wink, and will not use them.

Goel. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes, to see the way of blindness! I am sure, hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bringest good news;—I am called to be made free.

Goel. 'Til be hanged then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a gawler;
no bolts for the dead.

[Exeunt Posthumus and Messenger.]
Goel. Unless a man would marry a galloway, and beget young gibbets, I never saw one so proud.
Yet, on my conscience, there are variet knives dearer to live, for all he be a Roman: and there be some of them too, that die against their wills;
so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were denudation of gawlers, and galloways! I speak against my present profit; but my wish hath a preference in't. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Cymbeline's Tent.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arrivagus,
Pisano, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have made

Preservers of my throne. Woe is my heart,
That the poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose arms shan'd gild arms, whose naked
breast

Stepp'd before target of proof, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can find him, if
Our grace can make him so.

Bel. I never saw
Such noble fury in so poor a thing!
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor looks.

Cym. No tidings of him?
[He.] He hath been search'd among the dead and
But no trace of him. [Living.]

Cym. To my grief, I am
The heir of his reward; which I will add
To you the liver, heart, and brain of Britain.
[To Belarius, Guiderius, and Arrivagus.]

Which, neither here I'll keep, nor bear again,
But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter Two British Captains, and Soldiers

1 Cap Great Jupiter be prais'd! Lucius is taken:
'Tis thought, the old man and his sons were angels.

2 Cap There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,
That gave the affront with them.

1 Cap But none of them can be found.—Stand! who is Post A Roman! (there!)

Who had not now been drooping here, if seconds
Had answer'd him

2 Cap Lay hands on him; a dog!
A leg of Rome shall not return to tell What crows have pick'd them here: He brags his service
As if he were of note: bring him to the king.

Enter Cymbeline, attended: Belarius, Guiderius, Arravrus, Pisanio, and Roman captives. The Captains present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gauler: after which, all go out.

SCENE IV.—A Prison.

Enter Posthumus, and Two Gaolers.

1 Gaol You shall not now be stolen, you have locks upon you;

So, graze, as you find pasture.
2 Gaol Ay, or a stomach.

Post Most welcome, bondage! for thou art a
I think, to liberty: Yet I am better (way)
Than one that's sick o'the gout: since he had rather

Grown so in petuosity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician, death: who is the key To unbar these locks. My conscience! thou art fetter'd!
More than my shanks, and wrists: You good gods,
give me

The penitent instrument, to pick that bolt,
Then, free for ever! Is't enough, I am sorry!
So children temporal fathers do appease:
Gods are more full of merry. Must I repent!
I cannot do it better than in'gives.

Dear'd, more than constrain'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take
No stricter render of me, than my all.
I know, you are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third.

A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their abatement: that's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life, take mine: and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you coin'd it:
'Tween man and man, they weigh not every stamp;

Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, being yours: And so, great
powers,

If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen!
'T'll speak to thee in silence. (He sleeps.)

*Solomon Musick. Enter, as an apparition, Scilius Leonatus, father to Posthumus, an old man, attired like a warrior; leading in his hand an ancient matron, his wife, and mother to Posthumus, with musick before them. Then other musick, follow the Two young Leonatus, brothers to Posthumus, with weapons, as they died in the wars.
They carry Posthumus round, as he lies sleeping.*

Sci No more, thou thunder master, show
Thy spite on mortal fire;
With Mars fall out, with Juno chide,
That thy adulteresses
Rales and revenges.
Hath my poor boy done ought but well,
Whose face I never saw!
I died, whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending Nature's law,
Whose father then (as men report,
'Thou orphan's father art.)
Thou should'st have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vexing smart.

Moth Lucina lent me her aid,
But took me in my throes;
That from me was Posthumus ript,
Came crying 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity!

Sci Great nature, like his ancestry,
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he deserv'd the praise o'the world,
As great Scilius' heir.

1 Bro When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he
That could stand up his parallel,
Or fruitful object be
In eye of Imogen, that best
Could deem his dignity!

Moth With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To be exil'd, and thrown
From Leonatus' nest, and cast
From her his dearest one,
Sweet Imogen!

Sci Why did you suffer lachrima,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his nobler heart and brain
With needless jealousy;
And to become the geck and scorn
O'the other's villainy!

2 Bro For this, from stiffer seats we came,
Our parents, and us twain,
That, striking in our country's cause,
Fell bravely, and were slain:
Our fealty, and Tonnant's right,
With honour to maintain.

1 Bro Like hardiment Posthumus hath
To Cymbeline perform'd:
Then Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due;
Being all to dolours turn'd!

Sci Thy crystal window ops; look out;
No longer exercise,
Upon a valiant race, thy harsh
And potent injuries:

Moth Since Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.

Sci Peep through thy marble mansion; help!
Or we poor ghosts will cry
To the shining synod of the rest,
Against thy deity.

2 Bro Help, Jupiter, or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

Jupiter descends in thunder and lightning, sitting upon an eagle: he throws a thunder-bolt. The Ghosts fall on their knees

Jep No more, you petty spirits of regions low Offend our hearing: hush!—How dare you ghosts,

SCENE II. — The army.

Enter on one side, Lucius, Iachimo, and the Roman army; at the other side, the British army; Leontides, Pothinus following it, like a poor soldier. They march over, and go out. Alarms. Then enter again in skirmish, Iachimo and Pothinus: he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Jack. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom

Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady, The princess of this country, and the air on't Revengingly enfeebles me; Or, could this carl, A very drudge of nature's, have subdu'd me. In my profession? Knighthoods, and honours, burne

As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn. If that thy gentry, Britain, go before This lost, as he exceeds our lords, the odds Is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods.

[Exit.]

The battle continues; the Britons fly; Cymbeline is taken; then enter, to his rescue, Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground;

The lane is guarded; nothing routs us, but The villany of our fears.

Gai. Aro Stand, stand, and fight.

Enter Pothinus, and attends the Britons: They rescue Cymbeline, and retreat. Then, enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Imogen.

Lac. Away, buy, from the troops, and save thyself:

For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such As war were head-wind'd.

Jack. 'Tis their fresh supplies.

Lac. It is a day turn'd strangely: Or buttimes Let's re-enforce, or fly. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — Another Part of the Field.

Enter Pothinus and a British Lord.

Lord. Can't thou from where they made the stand?

Post. I did;

Though you, it seems, come from the fiers.

Lord.

Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost,

But that the heavens fought: The king himself Of his wings destitute, the army broken, And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying Through a strait lane; the enemy full-hearted, Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having work

More plentiful than tools to do't, struck down Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling

Merely through fear; that the strait pass was With dead men, hurt behind, and cowards living To die with lengthen'd shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, duck'd, and wall'd with turf:

Whose advantage to an ancient souldier,— As honest use, I warrant; who deserv'd So long a breeding, as his white beard came to, In doing this for his country,—withwart the lane. He, with two striplings, (lads more like to run The country base, than to commit such slaughter; Whose faces fit for masks, or rather fairs

Than those for preservation cas'd, or shamed,) Made good the passage; cry'd to those that fled, Our Britain's hearts die flying, not our men; To darkness fleet, souls that fly backwards! Stand, Or we are Romans, and will give you that Like beasts, which you sham beastly; and may serve, But to look back in frown: stand, stand.—These three.

Three thousand confident, in act as many, (For three performers are the file, when all The rest do nothing,) with this word, stand, stand, Accommodated by the place, more harming, With their own nobleness, (which could have A staff to a lance,) gilded pale locks, (turn'd Part, shame, part, spirit renew'd; that some, turn'd coward

But by example (!), a sin in war, Damn'd in the first beginners!) 'gan to look The way that they did, and to grin like lions Upon the pikes o' the hunters. Then began A stop i' the chaser, a retire; anon, A rout, confusion thick: Forthwith, they fly Chickens, the way which they stoop'd eagles; slaves.

The strides they victors made: And now our (Like fragments in hard voyages) became The life o' the need; having found the back-door open

Of the unguarded hearts, heavens, how they Some, slain before; some, dying; some, their friends

O'er-borne i' the former wave: ten, chac'd by Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty: Those, that would die or ere resist, are grown The mortal bugs o' the field.

Lord. 'Tis a strange chance: A narrow lane! an old man, and two boys!

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: You are made Rather to wonder at the things you hear, Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon't,

And vent it for a mockery? Here is a line,

Two boys, an old man twice a boy, a line,

Preserv'd the Britons, was the Romans' bane.

Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.

Post. 'Tis lack, to what end? Who dares not stand his foe, I'll be his friend: For if he'll do, as he is made to do, I know, he'll quickly fly my friendship too.

You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell: you are angry.

[Exit.]

Post. Still going?—This is a lord! O noble misery!

'To be i' the field, and ask, what news, of me! To-day, how many would have given their honours

To have sav'd their carcasses? took heel to do't, And yet died too! I, in mine own way charm'd, Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;

Nor feel him, where he struck: Being an ugly monster,

'Tis strange, he hides him in fresh cups, soft Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we That draw his knives i' the war.—Well, I will find him:

For being now a favourer to the Roman, No more a Briton, I have resum'd again

The part I came in: Fight I will no more, But yield me to the veriest hand, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Grant the slaughter as Here made by the Roman; grant the answer be Britons must take; For me, my ransom's

death;

On either side I come to spend my breath;

Are landed on your coast : with a supply
Of Roman gentleness, by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son, and I am amaz'd with matter. [queen's]

1 Lord. Good my liege,
Your preparation can affront no less Than what you hear of : come more, for more you're ready :
The want is, but to put those powers in motion,
That long to move.

Cym. I thank you : Let's withdraw :
And meet the time, as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us : but
We grieve at chances here.—Away. [Exeunt.]

Fla. I heard no letter from my master, since
I wrote him. Imogen was slain : 'Tis strange :
Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise
To yield me often tidings : Neither know I
What is betid to Cloten : but remain
Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work :
Wherein I am false, I am honest : not true, to be true.

These present wars shall find I love my country.
Even to the note of the king, or I'll fall in them.
All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd :
Fortune brings in some boats, that are not steer'd. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Before the Cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Gua. The noise is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it.
Arv. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to
From action and adventure ? [look it]

Gua. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us ? this way, the Romans
Must or for Brutus slay us : or receive us
For barbarous and unnatural revolts
During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. Sons.
We'll higher to the mountains : there secure us.
To the king's party there's no going : weakness Of Cloten's death (we being not known, not muster'd)

Among the bands may drive us to a render
Where we have liv'd : and so extort from us
That which we've done, whose answer would be Drawn on with torture. [death]

Gua. This is, sir, a doubt,
In such a time nothing becoming you,
Nor satisfying us.

Arv. It is not likely,
That when they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes
And ears so cloy'd importantly as now.

That they will waste their time upon our note.
To know from whence we are.

Bel. O, I am known
Of many in the army : many years,
Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore him

From my remembrance. And, besides, the king
Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves ;
Who find in my exile the want of breeding.
The certainty of this hard life : ay, hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd,
But to be still but summer's tawlings, and
The shuffling slaves of winter.

Gua. Than be so.
Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army :
I and my brother are not known : yourself,
So out of thought, and thereto so o'ergrown,
Cannot be question'd.

Arv. By the sun that shines

I'll thither : What thing is it, that I never Did see him die ? scarce ever look'd on blood,
But that of coward hares, hot grins, and vent-
Never bestrid a horse, save one, that had [son's]
A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel
Nor iron on his heel ? I am asham'd
To look upon the holy saw, to have
The benefit of his bless'd beams, remaining
So long a poor unknown.

By heavens, I'll go :
If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave,
I'll take the better care ; but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romans !

Arv. So say I : Amen.
Bel. No reason I, since on your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should receive
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you,
boys :

If in your country wars you chance to die.
That is my bed too, beds, and there I'll be :
Lead, lead. — The time seems long : their blood thinks scorn, [Arv.]
Till it fly out, and show them princes born.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Field between the British and Roman Camps.

Enter Posthumus, with a bloody handkerchief.

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I'll keep thee ; for I wish'd [ones]
Thou should'st be colour'd thus. You married
If each of you would take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves.

For wrying but a little !—O, Pisanio !
Every good servant does not all commands ;
No bond, but to do just ones—Gods ! if you Should have taken vengeance on my faults, I never

Had liv'd to put on this : so had you saved
The noble Imogen to repent ; and struck Me, wretch, more worth your vengeance. But,
alack,

You snatch some hence for little faults ; that's
love,

To have them fall no more : you some permit
To second ills with ills, each elder worse ;
And make them dread it to the doers' thrift.
But Imogen is your own : Do your best will,
And make me bless'd to obey !—I am brought
hither

Among the Italian gentry, and to fight Against my lady's kingdom : 'Tis enough,
That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress ; peace !
I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens,

Hear patiently my purpose : I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant : so I'll fight Against the part I come with ; so I'll die
For thee, O Imogen, even for whom my life
Is, every breath, a death : and thus, unknown,
Pitied nor hated, to the face of perill
Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know
More valour in me, than my habits show.
Gods, put the strength o' the Lennati in me !
To shame the guise o' the world, I will begin
The fashion, less without, and more within.

[Exit.]

Hath with his forged letters.—damn'd Pisanio—
From this most bravest vessel of the world
Struck the main-top!—O, Posthumus, alas,
Where is thy head? where's that? Ah me!

Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart,
And left this head on.—How should this be? Pisanio!

'Tis he, and Cloten: malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. O, 'tis pregnant, pregnant!

The drug he gave me, which, he said, was pre-
And cordial to me, have I not found it
Murderous to the senses! That confirms it home:
This is Pisanio's deed, and Cloten's: O!—
Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those
Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord.

Enter Loricus, a Captain, and other Officers, and a Southsayer.

Cap. To them, the legions garrison'd in Gallia,
After your will, have cross'd the sea; attending
You here at Milford-Haven, with your ships;
They are here in readiness.

Lac. But what from Rome?
Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners,
And senten'd of Italy: most willing spirits,
That promise noble service; and they come
Under the conduct of bold Iachimo, Sennas brother.

Lac. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit of the wind.

Lac. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command, our present numbers

[Enter]
be master'd; bid the captains look to't.—Now,
What have you dream'd, of late, of this war's purpose?

South. Last night the very gods shew'd me a [Enter]
[Enter]
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends,

[Enter]
[Enter]
(Unless my men abuse my divination.)
Success to the Roman host.

Lac. Dream often on,
And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here, Without his top! The ruin speaks, that some-
time

It was a worthy building.—How! a page!—
Or dead, or sleeping on him! But dead, rather:
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—
Let's see the boy's face.

Cap. He is alive, my lord.
Lac. He'll then instruct us of this body.—

Yours use,
Inform us of thy fortunes: for, it seems,
They crave to be demand'd: Who is this,
Thou mak'st thy bawdy pillow? Or who was he,
That, otherwise than noble nature did,
Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest?

In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be worse better.—This was my master.
A very valiant Briton, and a good
That here by mountaineers has slain:—Alas!
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service.
Try many all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Lac.

'Lack good youth
Thou mov'st no less with thy complaining, than Thy master in bleeding; Say his name, good friend.

I am Richard de Champ. If I do lie, and do
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope,
They'll pardon it. [Aside.] Say you, sir?

Lac.

Thy name?
Fidoles.
Lac. Thou dost approve thyself the very same:

Thy name well fits thy faith, thy faith, thy
Will take thy chance with me: I will not say,
Thou shalt be so well master'd; but, be sure,
No less believ'd. The Roman emperor's letters,
Sent by a cousin to me, should not sooner
Than thine own worth prefer thee; Go with me.

I will follow, sir. But first, an't please the god,

I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep
As these poor pickaxes can dig; and when
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strow'd his grave.

And on it mak's a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep, and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me.

Lac.

Ay, good youth;
And rather father thee, than master thee—
My friends,

The boy hath taught us many duties: Let us
Find out the prettiest daz'd plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave: Come; arm him.—Boy, he is preferr'd
By thee to us; and he shall be interr'd:
As soldiers can be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:
Some falls are nearer the happier to arise.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Loricus, and Pisanio.

Cym. Again; and bring me word, how 'tis with
A fever with the absence of her son: [Enter]
A madness, of which her life is in danger:—
Heavens,

How deeply you at once do touch me! Inu-
The great part of my comfort, gone, my queen
Upon a desperate bed; and in a time
When fearful wars point at me; her son gone,
So needful for this present: It strikes me, just
The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Pis.

Sir, my life is yours,
I humbly set it at your will: But, for my master's,

I nothing know where she remains, why gone,
Nor when she purposes return. Beseech your highness,

Hold me your loyal servant.

1 Lord.

Good my liege,
The day that she was missing, he was here:
I dare be bound he's true, and shall perform
All parts of his subjection loyalty.

For Cloten.—

There wants no diligence in seeking him.

And will, no doubt, be found.

The time's troublesome;
We'll slip you for a season; but our jealousy

[Enter]
Does yet depend.

1 Lord.

So please your majesty,
The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,

Thou died'st a most rare boy, of melancholy !
How found you him !

Ans. Start, as you see :
Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at : his right
choek

Reposing on a cushion.

Gua. Where ?
Ans. O'the floor :
His arms thus leagu'd ; I thought, he slept : and
put

My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rude-
ness

Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gua. Why, he but sleeps :
If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed ;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.

Ans. With fairest flowers,
Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave : Thou shalt not lack
The flower, that's like thy face, pale primrose :

por
The azur'd hare-bell, like thy veins ; no, nor
The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath : the ruddock would,

With charitable bill (O bill, sore-shaming
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument) bring thee all this ;
Yea, and fur'd moss besides, when flowers are none.

I'o winter-ground thy corse.

Gua. P'ryther, have done ;
And do not play in wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what is now due debt.—To this grave.

Ans. Say, where shall's lay him ?
Gua. By good Euriphile, our mother.

Ans. Be't so :
And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground.

As once our mother ; use like note, and words,
Save that Euriphile must be Fidele.

Gua. Cadwal,
I cannot sing : I'll weep, and word it with thee :
For notes of sorrow, out of time, are worse
Than priests and fumes that lie.

Ans. We'll speak it then.
Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less : for

Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys :
And, though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid for that : Though mean and mighty plotting

Together, have one dust ; yet reverence,
(That angel of the world,) doth make distinction Of place 'tween high and low. Our foe was princely ;

And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gua. Pray you, fetch him hither.
Therestes' body is as good as Ajax,
When neither are alive.

Ans. If you'll go fetch him,
We'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.

Gua. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east :

My father hath a reason for't.

Ans. 'Tis true.

Gua. Come on, then, and remove him.

Ans. So.—Begin.

SONG.

Gua. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor the wintry's raging ;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art yme, and lo'st thy wages :
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Ans. Fear no more the frowns o' the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke ;
Care no more to clothe, and eat ;
To thee the reed is as the oak ;
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Gua. Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone ;
Gua. Fear not slander, censure rash ;
Ans. Thou hast finish'd joy and morn :
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must Consyn to thee, and come to dust.

Gua. No exorciser harm thee !
Ans. Nor no witchcraft charm thee !
Gua. Ghost wild and forebode thee !
Ans. Nothing ill come near thee !
Both. Quiet consummation have ;
And renowned be thy grave !

Re-enter Belarius, with the body of Cloten.

Gua. We have done our obsequies : Come, lay him down.

Bel. Here's a few flowers ; but about midnight.
The herbs, that have on them cold dew o'the
night,

Are strewns fit't for graves.—Upon these
You were as flowers, now wither'd : even so
These herbs let's shall, which we upon you strow.—
Come on, away : apart upon our knees.

The ground, that gave them first, has them again
Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

(Exeunt Belarius, Guiderius, and Arravrus.)

Imo. (Asking.) Yea, sir, to Milford-Haven :—
Which is the way ?

I thank you.—By you hush !—Pray, how far thither !

'Ods pittikins !—can it be six miles yet ?—
I have gone all night :—'Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.

But, soft ! no bedfellow :—O, gods and rowdies !
(Seeing the body.)

These flowers are like the pleasures of the world :
'Tis bloody now, the ears on't.—I hope, I dream ;

For, so, I thought I was a cave-keeper,
And took to honest creatures : But 'tis not so ;

'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes : Our very eyes
Are sometimes like our judgments, blind.

Good faith,

I tremble still with fear : But if there be
Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity
As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it !

The dream's here still : even when I wake, it is Without me, as within me : not imagin'd, felt.

A headless man !—The garments of Posthumus !
I know the shape of his leg : this is his hand ;

His foot Mercutio's : his Martial thigh ;
The brawne of Hercules : but his Jovial face—

Murder in heaven !—How !—'Tis gone.—Pisanio,
All curses madd'd Hecuba the Greeks,
And mine to boot, be darted on thee ! 'T'hou,

Conspir'd with that irregular devil, Cloten,
Hast here cut off my lord.—To write, and read,
Be henceforth treacherous !—Dawn d Pisanio

Clot. Die the death:
When I have slain thee with my proper hand,
I'll follow thee that even now fled hence,
And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads:
Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exeunt, fighting.]

Enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No company's abroad.

Arv. None in the world: You did mistake him, sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour

Which then he wore: the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his: I am also—
'Twas very Cloten. [Exit]

Arv. In this place we left them:
I wish my brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up,
I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
Of raring terrors: For the effect of judgment
Is oft the cause of fear: But see, thy brother.

Re-enter Guiderius, with Cloten's head.

Gen. This Cloten was a fool: an empty parasite.
There was no money in't. not Hieracles
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne (none)
My head, as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done?
Gen. I am perfect, what: cut of one Cloten's
Sou to the queen, after his own report; [head.]
Who call'd us traitor, mountaineer; and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in,
Inspire our heads where (think the gods!)
And set them on Lud's town. [they grow.]

Bel. We are all undone.

Gen. Why, worthy father, what have we to
him.

Bel. that he swore to take, our lives! The law
Protects not us: Then why should we be tender,
To let an arrogant piece of flesh threat us;
Play judge, and executioner, all himself;
For we do fear the law! What company
Discover you abroad?

Bel. No single soul
Can we set eye on, but in all safe reason,
He must have some attendants. Though his humour

Was nothing but mutton; ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd,
To bring him here alone: Al though, perhaps,
It may be heard at court, that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head: the which he hearing,

(As it is like him,) might break out, and swear
He'd fetch us in; yet 't is not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we
If we do fear this body hath a tail [fear,]
More perilous than the head.

Arv. Let ordinance
Come as the gods foresee it: howsoever,
My brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no mind
To hunt this day: The boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long forth.

Gen. With his own sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en

His head from him: I'll throw't into the creek
Beside our rock; and let it to the sea,

And tell the fishes, he's the queen's son. Cloten:
That's all I reck. [Exit.]

Bel. I fear 't will be reveng'd:
'Would, Polydore, thou had'st not done't! though Becomes thee well enough. [valour]

Arv. 'Would I had done't,
So the revenge alone pursued me!—Polydore,
I love thee brotherly; but envy much,
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would, revenge, [us through,]

That possible strength might meet, would seek
And put us to our answer.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:—
We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where there's no profit. I pry thee to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arv. Poor sick Fidele!
I'll willingly to him: To gain his colour,
I'd let a parish of such Clotens' blood,
And praise myself for charity. [Exit]

O thou goddess,
Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazest
In these two princely boys! They are as gentle
As zephyrs, blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchain'd, as the rude'st wind,
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd; honour untaught;
Civility not seen from other; valour,
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had been sown'd! Yet still it's strange,
What Cloten's being here to us portends;
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter Guiderius.

Gen. Where's my brother!
I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,
In embassy to his mother; his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn music.]

Bel. My ingenious instrument!
Hark, Polydore, it sounds! but what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion! Hark!

Gen. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.
Gen. What does he mean! Spoke death of my dear't mother

It did not speak before. All solemn things Should answer solemn occasions. The matter!
Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys,
Is jointly for apace, and grief for boys.
Is Cadwal mad!

Re-enter Arviragus, bearing Imogen as dead in his arms.

Bel. Look, here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms,
Of what we blame him for!

Arv. The bird is dead,
That we have made so much on: I had rather
Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to eighty,
To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch.
Than have seen this.

Gen. O sweetest, fairest lily!
My brother wears thee out the one-half so well,
As when thou grew'st at thyself.

Bel. O melancholy!
Who ever yet could smother thy bottom! And
The ooze, to show what count thy sluggish crave
Might easiest harbour in!—Thou blessed thing!
Jove knows what man thou might'st have made!
but I,

is tied up safe: Out, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place: and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Before the Cave.

Enter from the Cave, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, and Imogen.

Bel. You are not well: [To Imogen,] remain here in the cave;

We'll come to you after hunting.

Arv. Brother, stay here: [To Imogen.]

Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be; But clay and clay differs in dignity.

Whence dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gui. Go you to hunting, I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not:—yet I am not well:

But not so citizen a wanton, as

To seem to die, ere sick: So please you, leave me;

Stick to your journal course: the breach of custom breach of all. I am ill; but your being by me

Cannot amend me: Society is no comfort

To one not scorable: I'm not very sick.

Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here:

I'll rub none but myself; and let me die,

Stealing so poorly.

Gui. I love thee: I have spoke it:

How much the quantity, the weight, as much

As I do love my father.

Bel. What? how? how?

Arv. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me in my good brother's fault; I know not why

I love this youth; and I have heard you say,

Love's reason's without reason; the beer at door,

And a demand who is't shall die. I'd say,

My father, not this youth.

Bel. O noble strain!

[Aside.] O worthiness of nature! breed of greatness!

Cowards father cowards, and base things sire base: [Grace.]

Nature hath meal, and bran; contempt, and

I am not their father: yet who this should be,

Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me.—

'Tis the ninth hour of the morn.

Arv. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish you sport.

Arv. You health.—So please you, sir,

Imo. [Aside.] These are kind creatures. Gulls, what lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say, all's savage, but at court:

Experience, O, thou disprov'st report!

The imperious seas breed monsters; for the dial,

Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish.

I am sick still; heart-sick.—Psalms,

I will now taste thy drug.

Gui. I could not stir him:

He said, he was gentle, but unfortunate;

Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arv. Thus did he answer me: yet said, here-

I might know more. [after]

Bel. To the field, to the field:—

We'll leave you for this time; go in, and rest.

Arv. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick,

For you must be our housewife.

Imo. Well, or ill,

I am bound to you.

Bel. And so shalt be ever.

[Exit Imogen.]

This youth, howe'er distress'd, appears, he hath Good ancestors.

Arv. How angel-like he sings! [Sings.]

Gui. But his neat cookery! He cut our roots in characters;

And sauc'd our broths, as Juno had been mock,

And he her dieter.

Arv. Nobly he yokes

A smiling with a sigh: as if the sigh

Was that it was, for not being such a smile;

The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly

From so divine a temple, to commix

With winds that sailors rail at.

Gui. I do note,

That grief and patience, rooted in him both,

Mingle their spurs together.

Arv. Grow, patience!

His perishing root, with the increasing vine!

Bel. It is great morning. Come; away.—

Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clot. I cannot find those runagates: that villains mock'd me:—I am faint. [Sings.]

Bel. Those runagates!

Means he not us? I partly know him; his Cloten, the son of the queen. I fear some amlous him not these many years, and yet [Sings.]

I know 'tis he:—We are held as outlaws:—

Hence.

Gui. He is but one: you and my brother

What companies are near: pray you, away:

Let me alone with him.

[Exeunt Belarius and Arviragus.]

Clot. Soft! What are you

That fly me thus! some villain mountaineers!

I have heard of such.—What slave art thou!

Gui. A thing

More slavish did I ne'er, than answering

A slave without a knock.

Clot. Thou art a robber,

A law-breaker, a villain: Yield thee, thief.

Gui. To whom? to thee! What art thou?

Have not I

An arm as big as thine! A heart as big?

Thy words, I grant, are bigger: for I wear not

My dagger in my mouth. Say, what thou art;

Why I should yield to thee!

Clot. Thou villain base,

Know'st me not by my clothes!

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal.

Who is thy grandfather; he made these clothes,

Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clot. 'Thou precious varlet,

My tailor made them not.

Gui. Hence then, and thank

The man that gave them thee. Thou art more

I am loath to beat thee. [Sings.]

Clot. Thou injurious thief,

Hear but my name, and tremble!

Gui. What's thy name!

Clot. Cloten, thou villain.

Gui. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name.

I cannot trundle at it; were't lead, or mule:

'Twould move me sooner. [Sings.]

Clot. To thy further tear,

Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know

I'm son to the queen.

Gui. I'm sorry for't; not seeming

So worthy as thy birth.

Clot. Art not afraid?

Gui. Those that I reverence, those I fear: the wise:

At fools I laugh, not fear them.

But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs
Will make what's humely, savoury: Weakness
Can snore upon the flint, when restive sloth Finds the down pillow hard — Now, peace be Four house, that keep'st thyself! (here,

Gen. I am thoroughly weary.

Ans. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gen. There is cold meat i' the cave; we'll

Whilst what we've kill'd be cook'd.

Bel. Stay; come not in: (Looking in.

But that it eats our victuals, I should think

Here were a fairy.

Gen. What's the matter, sir?

Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,

An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness

No elder than a boy!

Enter Imogen.

Ans. Good masters, harm me not:

Before I enter'd here, I call'd; and thought

To have begg'd or bought what I have took:

Good faith,

I have stolen nought; nor would not, though I had found (mean:

Gold strew'd o' the floor. Here's money for my

I would have left it on the board, so soon

As I had made my meal; and parted

With prayers for the provider.

Gen. Money, youth!

Ans. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt!

As 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those

Who worship dirty gods.

Ans. I see you are angry:

Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should

Have died, had I not made it.

Bel. Whither bound?

Ans. To Milford-Haven, sir.

Bel. What is your name?

Ans. Fidele, sir: I have a kinsman, who

Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford;

To whom being going, almost spent with hunger,

I am fallen in this offence.

Bel. Pr'ythee, fair youth,

Think us no charis: nor measure our good minds

By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd!

'Tis almost night: you shall have better cheer

Ere you depart: and thanks, to stay and eat it—

Beys, bid him welcome

Gen. Were you a woman, youth,

I should won hard, but be your groom.—In

I bid for you, as I'd buy. (honesty.

Ans. I'll mak't my comfort,

He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:—

And such a welcome as I'd give to him.

After long absence, such as yours:—Most welcome!

Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Ans. 'Mongst friends!

If brothers!—Would it had been so,

that they

Had been my father's sons, then had my prize

Been less; and so more equal ballast—

To these, Posthumus. (ing

Bel. He wrings at some distress.

Gen. 'Would I could free it!

Ans. Or I; whate'er it be,

What pain it cost, what danger! Gods!

Bel. Hark, boys,

(Whispering.

Ans. Great men.

That had a court no bigger than this cave,

that did attend themselves and had the virtue

Which their own conscience seal'd them, (laying!)

That nothing gift of differing multitudes,

Could not out-peer these twain. Pardon me,

gods!

I'd change my sex to be companions with them,

Since Læonatus false.

Bel. It shall be so:

Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair youth, come in: (supp'd.

Decourse is heavy, fasting: when we have

We'll manfully demand thee of thy story,

So far as thou wilt speak it

Gen. Pray, draw near.

Ans. The night to the owl, and morn to the lark, less welcome.

Ans. Thanks, sir.

Ans. I pray, draw near. (Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Rome.

Enter Two Senators and Tribunes.

1 Sen. This is the tenour of the emperor's writ;

That since the common men are now in action

'Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians;

And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our wars against

The fallen-off Britons; that we do incite

The gentry to this business: He creates

Lucius pro-consul: and to you the tribunes,

For this immediate levy, he commands

His absolute commission. Long live Cæsar!

Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces?

2 Sen. Ay.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1 Sen. With those legions

Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy

Must be suppliant: The words of your commission

Will tie you to the numbers, and the time

Of their dispatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty.

(Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest, near the Cave.

Enter Cloten.

Clot. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have napped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather (saving reverence of the word) for, 'tis said, a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself, (for it is not vain glory, for a man and his glass to confer; in his own chamber, I mean,) the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more ardent, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions: yet this imperious thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enforced; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face; and all this done, spurn her home to her father: who may, haply, be a little surly for my rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testicles, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse

Enter Pisano.

Shall—Who is here? What! are you packing, sirrah?

Come hither: Ah, you precious pander! Villain, Where is thy lady? In a word; or else Thou art straightway with the fact.

Pis. O, good my lord! Clo. Where is thy lady? or, by Jupiter, I will not ask again. Close villain, I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus? From whose so many weights of baseness cannot A dram of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord, How can she be with him? When was she miss'd? He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, sir? Come nearer; No further halting: satisfy me home, What is become of her?

Pis. O, my all-worthy lord!

Clo. All-worthy villain! Discover where thy mistress is, at once, At the next word.—No more of worthy lord,—Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then, sir, This paper is the history of my knowledge Touching her flight. [Presenting a letter.]

Clo. Let's see't:—I will pursue her Even to Augustus's throne.

Pis. Or this, or perish. She's far enough; and what he learns by this, May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo. I'll write to my lord she's dead. O Imogen, Safe may'st thou wander, safe return again!

Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true? Pis. Sir, as I think.

Clo. It is Posthumus's hand; I know't:—Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a villain, but do me true service;—undergo those employments, wherein I should have cause to use thee, with a serious industry,—that is, what villainy so'er I bid thee do, to perform it directly and truly,—I would think thee an honest man; thou should'st neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good lord. Clo. Wilt thou serve me? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou can'st not in the course of gratitude but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will. Clo. Give me thy hand, here's my purse. Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord. [Exit.]

Clo. Meet thee at Milford-Haven:—I forgot to ask him one thing: I'll remember't anon:—Even there thou villain, Posthumus, wilt I kill thee.—I would, these garments were come. She said upon a time, (the bitterness of it I now belch from my heart,) that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, will I ravish her: First kill him, and in her eyes; these shall see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,—and when my lust hath dined, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,) to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter Pisano, with the clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Clo. How long is't since she went to Milford-Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Clo. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee: the third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary wote to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferment shall tender itself to thee.—My revenge is now at Milford: 'Would I had wings to follow it!—Come, and be true. [Exit.]

Pis. Thou bidd'st me to my loss: for, true to thee,

Were to prove false, which I will never be. To him that is most true. To Milford go. And find not her whom thou pursu'st. Flow, flow, You heavenly blessings on her! This fool's speed Be cross'd with slowness: labour be his need! [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Before the Cave of Belarius.

Enter Imogen, in boy's clothes.

Imo. I see, a man's life is a tedious one: I have tir'd myself; and for two nights together Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick, But that my resolution helps me.—Milford, When from the mountain top I'mmishow'd thee, Thou wast within a ken: O Jove! I think, Foundations fly the wretched: such, I mean, Where they should be reliev'd. Two beggars told me.

I could not miss my way: Will poor folk like, That have afflictions on them; knowing 'tis A punishment, or trial? Yes: no wonder, When rich ones scarce tell true: To lapse in falseness Is sorer, than to lie for need; and falsehood Is worse in kings, than beggars.—My dear lord! Thou art one o' the false ones: Now I think on thee,

My hunger's gone; but even before, I was At point to sink for food.—But what is this! Here is a path to it. 'Tis some savage hold: I were best not call: I dare not call; yet famine, Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it vainest. Plenty, and peace, breeds cowards; hardness ever Of hardness is nothing.—Ho! who's here? If any thing that's civil, speak; if savage, Take, or lend.—Ho!—No answer! then I'll enter. Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on't.

Such a foe, good heavens! [She goes into the cave.]

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arrvirgus.

Bel. You, Polydore, have proved best woodman, and Are muster of the feast: Cadwal, and I, Will play the cook, and servant: 'tis our match: The sweat of industry would dry, and use

That answer to them : Would you, in their serving,
And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, fore noble Lucius
Present yourself, desire his service, tell him Whereas you are happy, (which you'll make him
know,
If that his head have ear in music,) doubtless
With joy he will embrace you ; for he's honourable,
And, doubting that, most holy. Your means
abroad,

You have us, rich ; and I will never fail
Beginning, nor supplement.

Luc. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with. Prythee, away :
There's more to be considered ; but we'll even
All that good time will give us. This attempt I'm soldier to, and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I prythee.

Psy. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell ;

Lost, being mine'd, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress,
Here is a box : I had it from the queen ;
What's in't so precious : if you are sick at sea,
Or stomach-quail'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.—To some shade,
And fit you to your manhood :—May the gods
Direct you to the best !

Lmo. Amen : I thank thee.
(Exeunt.)

SCENE V.—A Room in Cymbeline's Palace

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords.

Cym. Thus far : and so farewell.
Luc. Thanks, royal sir.
My emperor hath wrote : I must from hence ;
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke ; and for ourself
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs
Appear unkinglike.

Luc. So, sir, I desire of you
A conduct overland, to Milford-Haven.—
Madam, all joy betail your grace, and you !

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office :
The due of honour in no point omit :—
So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.
Cla. Receive it friendly : but from this time
forth

I wear it as your enemy.
Luc. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner : Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords.

Till he have cross'd the Severn—Happiness !
(Exeunt Lucius and Lords.)

Queen. He goes hence frowning : but it honours
us,
That we have given him cause.

Cla. 'Tis all the better :
Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor
How it goes here. It fits us therefore, ripely,
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness :
The powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves

His war for Britain.

Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business ;
But must be looked to speedily, and strictly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus,
Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter ? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day : She looks us like
A thing more made of malice, than of duty :
We have noted it.—Call her before us : for
We have been too slight in sufferance.

(Exit an Attendant.)
Royal sir,

Since the exile of Posthumus, most rel'd
Hath her life been ; the cure whereof, my lord,
'Tis time must do. Beseech your majesty
Forbear sharp speeches to her : She's a lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strikes death to her.

Re-enter an Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir ? How Can her contempt be answer'd ?

Allen. Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd ; and there's no answer

That will be given to the loudst of noise we make.

Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close ;
Whereunto constrain'd by her infirmity,
She should that duty leave unpaid to you,
Which duty she was bound to proffer : this
She wist'd me to make known ; but our great court

Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her doors lock'd !
Not seen of late ! Grant, heavens, that, which I fear,

Prove false ! (Exit.)

Queen. Son, I say, follow the knave.
Cla. That man of hers, Pisanio, her old servant,
I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after.—

(Exit Cloten.)

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus !—
He hath a drug of mine : I pray, his absence
Procced by swallowing that ; for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone ? Haply, despair hath seiz'd
her ;

Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's down
To her dear'd Posthumus : Gone she is
To death, or to dishonour ; and my end
Can make good use of either : She being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter Cloten.

How now, my son !
Cla. 'Tis certain, she is fled :

Go in, and cheer the king ; he rageth, none
Dare come about him.

Queen. All the better : May
This night forestall him of the coming day !
(Exit Queen.)

Cla. I love, and hate her : for she's fair and royal ;

And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady, ladies, women ; from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Outsells them all : I love her therefore ; But,
Dreadnaught me, and throwing favours on
The low Posthumus, slanders as her judgment,
That what's else rare, is common ; and, in that point,

I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be reveng'd upon her. For, when fools

And I, for I am richer than to hear by the walls,
I must be rig'd — to pierce with me! — O,
Men's words are women's traitors! All good seeming.

By thy revolt, O husband, shall be thought
Put on for villainy: not born, where't grows;
But worn, a bait for ladies.

Is. Good madam, hear me

Is. True honest men being heard, like false knaves.

Were, in his time, thought false: and Sinon's
weeping
Did scandal many a lady tear: took pity
From most true wretchedness: So, thou, Posthumus.

Will lay the leaves on all proper men;
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and perjur'd,
From thy great fail — Come, fellow, be thou
honest:

Do thou thy master's bidding: When thou see'st
him,

A little witness my obedience: Look!
I draw the sword myself: take it; and hit
The innocent mansion of my love, my heart:
Fear not: 'tis empty of all things, but grief:
Thy master is not there — who was, indeed,
The riches of it: Do his bidding; strike;
Thou may'st be valiant in a better cause;
But now thou seem'st a coward.

Is. Hence, vile instrument!
Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Is. Why, I must die;
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No servant of thy master's: Against self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That craves my weak hand. Come, here's my
heart:

Something's a-shore: — Soft, soft: we'll no defence;
Obedient as the scabbard. — What is here!
The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus,
All turn'd to heresy! Away, away,
Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more
Be stomachers to my heart! 'Twas my poor fools Believe false teachers: Though those that are betray'd

Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of woe.
And thou, Posthumus, thou that dost set up
My disobedience 'gainst the king my father
And make me put into contempt the suits
Of princely fellows, shalt hereafter find
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself,
To think, when thou shalt be deceiv'd by her
That now thou tris't on how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me — Prythee, despatch:
The lamb entrails the butcher: Where's thy knife!

Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
When I desire it too.

Is. O gracious lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink.

Is. Do't, and to bed then.

Is. I'll wake mine eye-balls blind first.

Is. Wherefore then
Durst undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd

So many miles, with pretence? this place I
Mine action, and thine own? our horses' labour!

The time inviting thee! the perturbed court,
For my being absent: whereunto I never

Purpos'd return! Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unmet, when thou hast ta'en thy stand,

'Tis elected clear before thee? But to win time

To lose so bad employment: in the which I have consider'd of a course; Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Is. Talk thy tongue weary; speak:
I have heard, I am a strumpet: and mine ear.
Therein false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent to bottom that. But speak.

Is. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Is. Most like;
Bringing me here to kill me.

Is. Not so, neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then

My purpose would prove well: It cannot be,
But that my master is abus'd:

Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Is. Some Roman courtesan.

Is. No, on my life.
I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him

Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded
I should do so: You shall be miss'd at court,

And that will well confirm it.

Is. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where bide! How
live!

Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband!

Is. If you'll back to the court, —
No court, no father; nor no more ado

With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing —
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me

As fearful as a siege.

Is. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you bide.

Is. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,

Are they not but in Britain? 'Tis the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it:

In a great pool, a swan's nest; Prythee, think There's lovers out of Britain

Is. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador,
Locus the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven

To-morrow; Now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is; and but disguise

That, which, to appear itself, must not yet be,
But by self-danger; you should tread a course

Pretty, and full of view: yea; haply, near
The residence of Posthumus; so near, at least,

That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,

As truly as he moves.

Is. O, for such means!
Though peril to my modesty, not death on't,

I would adventure.

Is. Well then, here's the point:
You must forget to be a woman; change

Command into obedience; fear, and niceness,
(The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,

Woman's pretty self,) to a waggish courage;
Ready in gibes, quick answer'd, saucy, and

As quarrelous as the weasel; nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,

Exposing it (but, O, the harder heart!
Alack no remedy!) to the greedy touch

Of common-kissing: 'Tis then: and forget
Your laboursome and daily trim, wherein

You made great Juno angry.

Is. Nay, be brief:
I see into thy end, and am almost

A man already.

Is. First, make yourself but like one.
Fore-thinking this, I have already fit,

(I'm in my cloak-bag,) doublet, hat, hose, all

In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing:
We are beastly: subtle as the fox, for prey;
Like warlike as the wolf, for what we eat:
Our valour is, to chase what flies; our rage
We make a quire, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!
Did you but know the city's miseries,
And feel them knowingly: the art o' the court,
As hard to leave, as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling: the toil of the war,
A pain that only seems to seek out danger
For the name of fame, and honour; which dies i' the search;

And hath as oft a slanderous epithaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many times,
Doth ill deserve by doing well; what's worse,
Must court! say at the censure:—O, boys, this story
The world may read in me: My body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd me;
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: Then was I as a tree, (night,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but, in one
A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves.
And left me bare to weather.

Gen. Uncertain favour!
Bel. My fault being nothing (as I have told you off.)

But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd
Before my perfect honour, sworn to Cymbeline,
I was confederate with the Romans; so,
Follow'd my banishment: and, this twenty years,
This rack, and these demesnes, have been my
world:

Where I have liv'd at honest freedom: paid
More pious debts to heaven, than in all
The fore-end of my time.—But, up to the mountains;

This is not hunters' language. —He, that strikes
The venison first, shall be the lord o' the feast;
To him the other two shall minister:
And we will fear no power, which attends
In place of greater state. I'll meet you in the valleys. [Exeunt Gen. and Arr.]

How hard it is, to hke the sparks of nature!
These boys know little, they are sons to the king:
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.
They think, they are mine: and, though train'd up thus meanly

I the cave, wherein they bow, their thoughts do hit
The roofs of palaces: and nature prompts them,
In simple and low things, to prize it, much
Beyond the trick of others. 'Tis Polydore,—
The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, whom
The king his father call'd Guderius, —Jove!
When on my three-foot stool I sat, and tell
The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out Into my story: say,—Thus mine enemy fell;
And thus I set my foot on his neck; even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture [Exit.]

That acts my words. The younger brother, Cad-
[Once Arridarus,] in as like a figure,
Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more
His own excruciation. Hark! the game is run'd!—
O Cymbeline! heaven, and my conscience, knows,
Thou dost unjustly banish me: whereon,
At three, and two years old, I stole these babes:
Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou hast us of my lands. Eurphile,

Thou wast their nurse; they took thee for their mother.
And every day do honour to thy grave:
Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd,
They take for natural father. The game is up.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. — Near Milford-Haven.

Enter Pisano and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from hence, the place
Was near at hand:—Ne'er long'd my mother so
To see me first, as I have now.—Pisano! Man!
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind,
That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh
From the inward of thee? One, but painted thus,
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond self explication; Put thyself into a humour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my starker senses. What's the matter?
Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with
A look understander? If it be summer news, Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st but keep that countenance still.—My husband's hand!

That drug down'd Italy hath out-crafted him,
And he's at some hard point.—Speak, man; thy
tongue
May take off some extremity, which to read
Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. Pardon me, please you, read;
And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing
The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.] *Thy mistress, Pisano, hath played the strumpet in my bed; the testimonies whereof he bleeding in me I speak not out of weak surmises;
but from proof as strong as my grief, and as certain as I expect my revenge. That part, thou, Pisano, must act for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach o' hers. Let thine own hands take away her life: I shall give thee opportunities at Milford-Haven: she hath my letter for the purpose: Where,
if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pandar to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal.*

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper
Hath cut her throat already.—No, 'tis slander:
Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose
tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states
Maids, matrons, say, the secrets of the grave
This viperous slander enters.—What clever, madam?

Imo. False to his bed! What is it, to be false!
To lie in watch there, and to think on him?
To weep 'twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge
nature,

To break it with a fearful dream of him,
And cry myself awake! that's false to his bed?
Is it?

Pis. Alas, good lady! [chime,]
Imo. I false? Thy conscience witness:—Is Thou dost accuse him of incontinency:
Thou then look'st like a villain; now, methinks,
Thy favour's good enough.—Some joy of Italy,
Whose mother was her painting, hath betray'd
him:

Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion

SCENE II. — Another Room in the same.Enter Pisanio.

Pis. How! of adultery! Wherefore write you Wint monster's her accuser!—Leonatus! [Not
 O, master! what a strange infection
 Is fallen into thy ear! What false Italian
 (As poisonous tongued, as handed,) hath prevail'd
 On thy too ready hearing!—Disloyal! No;
 She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes
 More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults
 As would take in some virtue.—O, my master!
 Thy mind to her is now as low, as were
 Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her!
 Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I
 Have made to thy command?—I, her!—her blood!
 If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I,
 That I should seem to lack humanity,
 So much as this fact comes to? Do't: The Letter
[Reading.]
That I have sent her, by her own command
Shall give thee opportunity:—O damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble,
Art thou a feodary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without! Lo, here she comes.

Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Imo. How now, Pisanio!
Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.
Imo. Who? thy lord? that is my lord! Leonatus!
 O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
 That knew the stars, as I his characters;
 He'd lay the future open.—You good gods,
 Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
 Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
 That we two are asunder, let that grieve him,— (Some griefs are med'cinable:) that is one of them.

For it doth physick love;—of his content,
 All but in that!—Good wax, thy leave:—Bless'd be. [Exit Pisanio.]

You best, then, make these looks of counsel! Lo,
 And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;
 Though forfeitures you cast in prison yet,
 You clasp young Cupid's tables.—Good news,
 gods!

[Reads.]
Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, as you, O the dross of creatures, would not even reme with your eyes. Take notice that I am in Cembra, at Milford-Haven: What your own love will, out of this advice you, follow. So, he makes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love.

LEONATUS POSTHUMUS.

O, for a horse with wings!—Hear'st thou, Pisanio?
 He is at Milford-Haven: Read, and tell me
 How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
 May plod it in a week, why may not I
 Glide thither in a day!—Then, true Pisanio, (Who long'st like me, to see thy lord; who long'st,—

O, let me 'baste,—but not like me:—yet long'st,—
 But in a fainter kind:—O, not like me:
 For mine's beyond beyond,) say, and speak thick, (Love's counsellor should fill the bores of hearing,
 To the smothering of the sense,) how far it is
 To this same blessed Milford? And, by the way, Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
 To inherit such a haven: But, first of all,

How we may steal from hence; and, for the gap
 That we shall make in time, from our hence-gone,
 And our return, to excuse:—but first, how get
 hence:

Why should excuse be born or e'er begot?
 We'll talk of that hereafter. Prythee, speak,
 How many score of miles may we well ride
 'Twixt hour and hour!

Pis. One score, 'twixt sun and sun,

Madam, 's enough for you; and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rule to his execution, man, Could never go so slow: I've heard of riding
 wagers,

Where horses have been nimble than the sands
 That run i' the clock's behalf:—But this is foolery:

Go, bid my woman feign a sickness; say
 She'll come to her father: and provide me presently.

A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
 A Franklin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me, man, nor here, nor here,
 Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them,
 That I cannot look through. Away, I prythee;
 Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say:
 Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exit Pisanio.]

SCENE III. — Wales. A mountainous Country, with a Cave.Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such Whose roof's as low as ours! Stomp, boys: This gale [You]
 Instructs you how to adore the heavens; and how
 To morning's holy office: The gates of monarchs
 Are arch'd so high, that giants may yet through
 And keep their impious turbans on, without Good morrow to the sun—Hail, thou fair heaven!
 We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
 As prouder livers do.

Gud. Hail, heaven!

Arv. Hail, heaven!

Bel. Now for our mountain sport: Up to you hill.

Your legs are young: I'll tread these flats.
 When you above perceive me like a crow,
 That it is place, which lessens, and sets off,
 And you may then revolve what tales I've told you
 Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:

This service is not service, so being done,
 But being so allow'd: To apprehend thus,
 Draws us a profit from all things we see:

And oft, to our comfort, shall we find
 The sharpest beetle in a safer hold
 Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life
 Is nobler, than attending, for a clerk;

Richer than doing nothing for a babe;
 Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk:

Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
 Yet keeps his book uncorrod'd: no life to ours.

Gud. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor unfledg'd, [not]

Have never wind'd from view o' the nest; nor know
 What airs from home. Haply, this life is best,
 If quiet life be best; sweeter to you,

That have a sharper know: well corresponding
 With your stiff age: but, unto us, it is
 A cell of ignorance; travelling shod;

A prison for a debtor, that not dares
 To stride a limit.

Arv. What should we speak of,
 When we are old as you? when we shall hear
 The rain and wind beat dark December, how,

SCENE V.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women Must be half-workers? We are hussards all;
And that most venerable man, which I Did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp'd; some corner with his tools
Made use a counterfeit: yet my mother seem'd
The Diana of that time: so doth my wife
The unpareil of this.—O vengeance, vengeance!
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd.
And pray'd me, oft, forbearance: d'd it with
A pendency so rosy, the sweet view o't her
Might well have warn'd old Saturn; that I thought
As chaste as unstamp'd snow:—O, all the devils!—
This yellow Isidemo, in an hour,—was't not?—
Or less,—at first: Perchance he spoke not; but Like a full-acorn'd boar, a German one,
Cry'd, oh! and mounted: found no opposition
But what he look'd for should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The woman's part in me! For there's no motion
That tends to vice of man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: Be it lying, note it,
The woman's flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Lost and rank thoughts, hers; revenges, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of pride, disdain,
Nice longings, slanders, mutability,
All faults that may be nam'd, nay, that hell knows,
Why hers, in part, or all: but, rather, all
For ev'n to vice
They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them:—Yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate, to pray they have their will;
The very devils cannot please them better. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Britain. A Room of State in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, and Lords at one door; and at another, Caius Lucius and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar
with us?

Luc. When Julius Caesar (whose remembrance yet lives in men's eyes; and will to ears, and Be thence, and hearing ever,) was in this Britain,
And conquer'd it, Cymbeline, thine uncle,
(Famous in Caesar's praises, no whit less,
Than in his feats deserving it,) for him,
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute,
Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee is left untender'd. [lately]

Queen. And to kill the marvel,
Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Caesars,
Ere such another Julius. Britain is
A world by itself; and we will nothing pay,
For wearing our own noses.

Queen. That opportunity,
Which then they had to take from us, to resume
We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege,
The kings your ancestors; together with
The natural bravery of your isle: which stands

As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks circuncleable, and roaring waters;
With sands, that will not bear your enemies' boats.

But sack them up to the top-mast. [conquest]
A kind of
Caesar made here; but made not here his brag
Of come, and see, and overcome: with shame
(The first that ever touch'd him,) he was carried
From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping
(Poor ignorant haubles!) on our terrible seas,
Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surges, crack'd
As easily 'gainst our rocks: For joy whereof,
The fair'd Cymbeline, who was once at point
(O, giddy fortune!) to master Caesar's sword,
Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright,
And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid:
Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time;
and, as I said, there is no more such Caesars;
other of them may have crooked noses; but, to owe such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cymbeline: I do not say, I am one; but I have a hand.—Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Caesar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,
Till the injurious Romans did extort [bition]
This tribute from us, we were free; Caesar's arm
(Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch
The sides o' the world,) against all colour, here
Did put the yoke upon us; which to shake off,
Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
Ourselves to be. We do say then to Caesar,
Our ancestor was that Mulmutius, which Ordin'd our laws; (whose use the sword of Caesar Hath too much mangled; whose repair, and franchise,

Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed,
Though Rome be therefore angry:) Mulmutius,
Who was the first of Britain, which did put
His brows within a golden crown, and call'd
Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline,
That I am to pronounce Augustus Caesar (Caesar that hath more kings his servants, than Thyself domestick officers,) thine enemy:
Receive it from me, then:—War, and confusion,
In Caesar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look
For fury not to be resisted:—Thus defied,
I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thou art welcome. Caius
Thy Caesar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honour;
Which, he to seek of me again, perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance: I am perfect,
That the Pantheonians and Dalmatians, for Their liberties, are now in arms: a precedent
Which, not to rend, would show the Britons cold:
So Caesar shall not find them.

Luc. Let proof speak.
Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day, or two, longer: If you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water circle: if you heat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our crows shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and he
mine:
All the remain is, welcome. [Exeunt.]

Jack. I should have lost the worth of it in gold.
I'll make a journey twice as far, to enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortness, which
Was mine in Britain: for the ring is won.

Post. The stow's too hard to come by.
Jack. Not a whit,
Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, sir,
Your loss your sport: I hope, you know that we Must not continue friends.

Jack. Good sir, we must,
If you keep covenant. Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant
We were to question further: but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honour,
Together with your ring; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand,
And ring, is yours: If not, the foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses,
Your sword, or mine; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them.

Jack. Sir, my circumstances,
Being so near the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe: whose strength
I will confirm with oath: which, I doubt not,
You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find
You need it not.

Post. Proceed
Jack. First, her bed chamber:
(Where, I confess, I slept not: but, profess,
Had that was well worth watching,) I was hung'd
With tapestry of silk and silver: the story
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cynthia would'd above the banks, or for
The press of hours, or pride: A piece of work
So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive
In workmanship, and value; which I wonder'd,
Could be so rarely and exactly wrought,
Since the true life out was—

Post. This is true;
And thus you might have heard of here, by me,
Or by some other.

Jack. More particulars
Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must,
Or do your honour injury.

Jack. The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste Dian, bathing: never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves: the cutter
Was as another nature, dumb; outwent her,
Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap;
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Jack. The roof o' the chamber
With golden cherubim is fretted: Her andronus
(I had forgot them,) were two winking Cupids
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands.

Post. This is her honour!—
Let it be granted, you have seen all this, (and praise

Be given to your remembrance) the description
Of what is in her chamber, nothing saves
The water you have laid.

Jack. Then, if you can,
(Putting out the bracelet.)
Be pale; I beg but leave to air this jewel: See!—
And now 'tis up again: it must be married
To that your diamond; I'll keep them

Post. Once more let me behold it: Is it that Which I left with her?

Jack. Sir, (I thank her,) that
She stripp'd it from her arm: I see her yet;
Her pretty action did outsell her gift.
And yet enrich'd it too: She gave it me, and said
She priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off.
To send it me.

Jack. She writes so to you? doth she?
Post. O, no, no, no: 'tis true. Here, take this too: (Gives the ring.)

It is a basilisk unto mine eye.
Kills me to look on't:—Let there be no honour,
Where there is beauty: truth, where semblance;
love.

Where there's another man: The rows of women
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made.
Than they are to their virtues: which is nothing:—
O, above measure false!

Phi. Have patience, sir,
And take your ring again: 'tis not yet won:
It may be possible, she lost it: or,
Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stolen it from her?

Post. Very true:
And so, I hope, he came by't:—Back my ring.—
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this: for this was stolen.

Jack. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.
Post. Hark you, he swears: by Jupiter he swears

'Tis true:—nay, keep the ring—'tis true, I am sure
She would not lose it: her attendants are (if I
All sworn, and honourable:—They never't to steal
And by a stranger!—No, he hath enjoy'd her.
The conjuncture of her incontinency (dear:—
Is this,—she hath bought the name of where thou
There, take thy hire: and all the heads of hell
Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient!
This is not strong enough to be believ'd
Of one persuaded well of—

Post. Never talk on't:
She hath been coiled by him.

Jack. If you seek
For further satisfying, under her breast
(Worthy the pressing,) lies a mole, right proud
Of that most delicate looking: By my life,
I kiss'd it; and it gave me present hunger
To feed again, though full: You do remember
This stain upon her?

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm Another stain, as big as hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Jack. Will you hear more?
Post. Spare your arithmetic: never count the Once, and a million!

Jack. I'll be sworn.—
If you will swear you have not don't, you lie;
And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny
Thou hast made me cuckold.

Jack. I will deny nothing.
Post. O, that I had her here, to tear her husband meal!

I will go there and do't; if the court, before
Her father:—I'll do something— (Exit.)

Phi. Quite benuded
The government of patience!—You have won:
Let's follow him, and pervert the present wrath
He hath against himself.

Jack. With all my heart.
(Aloud.)

Enter Imogen.

Cla. Good morrow, fairest sister: Your sweet hand.

Imo. Good morrow, sir: You may out too much For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I give, Is telling you that I am poor of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Cla. Still, I swear, I love you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me: If you swear still, your recompence is still That I regard it not.

Cla. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say I yield, being silent.

I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: I'faith, I shall unfold equal discourtesy.

To your best kindness: one of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

Cla. To leave you in your madness, 'twere my I will not.

Imo. Fools are not mad folks.

Cla. Do you call me fool?

Imo. As I am mad, I do:

If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad;

That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir,

You put me to forget a lady's manners,

By being so verbal: and learn now, for all,

That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce.

By the very truth of it, I care not for you:

And am so near the lack of charity.

(To accuse myself) I hate you; which I had rather

You felt, than make't my boast.

Cla. You sin against Obedience, which you owe your father. For

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,

(One, bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,

With scraps of the court,) it is no contract, none:

And though it be allowed in messer parties,

(Yet who, than he, more mean?) to knit their souls

(On whom there is no more dependency

But hate and benvency) in self-figur'd knot;

Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by

The consequence of the crown; and must not soil

The precious note of it with a base slave.

A hiding for a livery, a squire's cloth,

A pantler, not so eminent.

Imo. Profane fellow!

Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more

But what thou art, besides, thou wert too base

To be his known: thou wert dignified enough,

Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made

Comparative for your virtues, to be styl'd

The under-banquet of his kingdom; and hated

For being prefer'd so well.

Cla. 'Tis worth for him!

Imo. He never can meet mine acquaintance, than

To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment,

That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer,

In my respect, than all the hairs above thee.

Were they all made such men. — How now, Pisanius!

Enter Pisanius.

Cla. His garment! Now, the devil! — (ly:—

Imo. To Dorothy my woman bid thee present—

Cla. His garment?

Imo. I am sprighted with a fool;

Frighted, and amerd worse:—Go, bid my woman

Search for a jewel, that too casually

Hath left mine arm; it was my master's: shrew me,

If I would use it for a revenue

Of any king's in Europe! I do think,

I saw't this morning: confident I am,

Last night 'twas on mine arm; I kiss'd it:

I hope, it be not gone, to tell my lord

That I kiss ought but he

Imo. 'Twill not be lost.

Cla. I hope so: go, and search. [Exit Pis.

Cla. You have abus'd me:—

His meanest garment!

Imo. Ay; I said so, sir.

If you will mak't an action, call witness to't.

Cla. I will inform your father.

Imo. Your mother too:

She's my good lady; and will conceive, I hope,

But the worst of me. So I leave you, sir,

To the worst of discontent. [Exit.

Cla. I'll be reveng'd:—

His meanest garment!—Well. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — Rome. An Apartment in Philario's House.

Enter Posthumus and Philario.

Post. Fear it not, sir: I would, I were so sure

To win the king, as I am bold, her honour

Will remain tiers.

Phi. What means do you make to him?

Post. Not any: but abide the chance of time;

Quake in the present winter's state, and wish

That warmer days would come: in those fear'd

I barely gratify your love: they failing, I hope,

I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness, and your company,

O'erpay all I can do. By this, your king

Hath heard of great Augustus: Caius Lucius

Will do his commission thoroughly: And, I think,

He'll grant the tribute, send the arrearsages,

Or look upon our Romans, whose remembrance

Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe,

(Statist though I am none, not like to be.)

That this will prove a war; and they shall hear

The legions, now in Gauls, sooner landed

In our not-fearing Britain, than have tidings

Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen

Are men more order'd, than when Julius Cæsar

Smil'd at their lack of skill, but found their own

Worthy his frowning at: Their discipline (rage

(Now mingled with their courages) will make known

To their approvers, they are people, such

That mend upon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phi. See! Iachimo!

Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by

land:

And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails.

To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir.

Post. I hope, the briefness of your answer ma be

The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady

Is one the fairest I have look'd upon

Post. And therewithal, the best: or let her beauty

Look through a casement to allure false hearts,

And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post. Their tenour good, I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court,

When you were there?

Iach. He was expected then,

But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet —

Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?

Above ten thousand manner-movables
Would testify to enrich mine inventory:
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her
And let her sense beat as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off:

[Taking off her bracelet.

As slippery, as the Girdian knot was hard!—
'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A nut cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
In the bottom of a cowslip. Here's a voucher,
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I've pick'd the lock, and ta'en [end]

The treasure of her honour. No more.—To what
Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd to my memory? She hath been reading late

The tale of Tereus; here the leaf's turn'd down,
Where Philomena gave up:—I have enough
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night!—that dawning

May bare the raven's eye: I lodge in fear;
Though thus a heavenly angel, hell is here.

[Clock strikes.

One, two, three,—Time, time!

[Goes into the trunk. The scene closes.

SCENE III.—An Ante-Chamber adjoining Imogen's Apartment.

Enter Cloten and Lords.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient after the noble temper of your lordship: You are most hot, and furious, when you win.

Clo. Winning would put any man into courage:
If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough: it's almost morning, is't not?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her musick o' mornings; they say, it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: If you can penetrate her with your fingering, so; we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain; but I'll never give o'er. First, a very excellent good-conceited thing; after, a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,

And Phoebus' yins arise,

His steeds to water at those springs

On chafin'd flowers that lies;

And winking Mary-buds begin

To ope their golden eyes;

With every thing that pretty bin:

My lady sweet, arise;

Arise, arise.

So, get you gone: If this penetrate, I will consider your musick the better: if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs, and cats-guts, nor the voice of unpeeped eunuch to hunt, can never amend. [Exeunt Musicians.]

Enter Cymbeline and Queen.

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad, I was up so late: for that's the reason I was up so early: he cannot choose but take this service I have done, faithfully—
Good morrow to your majesty, and to my gra-tious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern
Will she not forth? [daughter?]

Clo. I have assailed her with musick, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too new;
She hath not yet forgot him: some more time
Must wear the print of his remembrance out,
And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king;
Who lets go by no vantages, that may Prefer you to his daughter. Frame yourself
To orderly solicits; and be friended
With aptness of the season: make denials
Increase your services; so seem, as if You were inspir'd to do those duties which
You tender to her; that you in all obey her,
Save when command to your submission tends,
And therein you are senseless.

Clo. Senseless? not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome;
The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow,
Albeit he comes on angry purpose now:
But that's no fault of his: We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forewent on
We must extend our notice.—Our dear son, [as]
When you have given good morning to your mistress.

Attend the queen, and us: we shall have need
To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Exeunt Cym., Queen, Lords, and Mess.

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not,
Let her lie still, and dream.—By your leave, ho!—
[Knocks.]

I know her women are about her; What
If I do line one of their hands? 'Tis gold Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes

Dianna's rangers, false themselves, yield up
Their deer to the stand of the stealer; and 'tis gold

Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves the Nay, sometime, hangs both thief and true man:
What

Can it not do, and undo? I will make
One of her women lawyer to me; for
I yet not understand the case myself.
By your leave.

[Knocks.]

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who's there, that knocks?

Clo. A gentleman

Lady. No more?

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more

Than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours,
Can justly boast of: What's your lordship's pleasure?

Clo. Your lady's person: is she ready?

Lady. Ay.

To keep her chamber.

Clo. There's gold for you: sell me your good report.

Lady. How! my good name? or to report of
you

What I shall think is good?—The princess.—

In France: 'Tis plate, of rare device; and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form: their values great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage; May it please
you

To take them in protection!

Imo. Willingly;
And pawn mine honour for their safety: since
My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them
In my bed-chamber.

Jack. They are in a trunk,
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To send them to you, only for this night;
I must aboard to-morrow.

Imo. O, no, no.
Jack. Yes, I beseech: or I shall short my word,
By lenth'ning my return. From Gallia
I crum'd the seas on purpose, and on promise
To see your grace.

Imo. I thank you for your pains;
But not away to-morrow!

Jack. O, I must, madam:
Therefore, I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your lord with writing, do't to-night:
I have outstaid my time; which is material
To the tender of our present.

Imo. I will write.
Send your trunk to me; it shall safe be kept,
And truly yielded you: You are very welcome.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Court before Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Cloten and Two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when
I smed the jack upon an up-cast, to be hit away!
I had a hundred pound on't: And then a whore-son jackanapes must take me up for swearing; as if I borrowed nine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure

1 Lord. What put he by that? You have broke his pate with your bowl.

2 Lord. If his wit had been like his that broke it, it would have run all out. [Aside.]

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths:
Ha!

2 Lord. No, my lord; nor [Aside.] crop the ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog!—I give him satisfaction!
'Weed, he had been one of my rank!

2 Lord. To have smelt like a fool. [Aside.]

Clo. I am not more vexed at any thing in the court,—A peck on't! I had rather not be so noble as I am; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother: every jack slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that no body can match.

2 Lord. You are a cock and capon too; and you crow, cock, with your comb on. [Aside.]

Clo. Sayest thou!

1 Lord. It is not fit, your lordship should undertake every comparison that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that: but it is fit, I should commit offence to my inferiors.

1 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger, that's come to court to-night!

Clo. A stranger! and I not know on't!

2 Lord. He's a strange fellow himself, and hears a fool. [Aside.]

1 Lord. There's an Italian come: and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal, and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger!

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit, I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in't?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. You are a fool granted; therefore your issues being foolish, do not derogate. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian: What I have lost to-day at bowls, I'll win to-night of him.
Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

[Exeunt Cloten and First Lord.]

That such a crafty devil as is his mother
Should yield the world this use! a woman, that Bears all down with her brain; and this her son Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,

And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess,
Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st!
Betwixt a father by thy step-dame govern'd;
A mother hourly cunning plots; a woe'er,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act
Of thy divorce he'd make! The heavens hold firm
The walls of thy dear honour: keep unshak'd
That temple, thy fair mind: that thou may'st
stand,
To enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Bed-Chamber: in one part of it a Trunk.

Imogen reading in her bed; a Lady attending.

Imo. Who's there? my woman Helen!

Lady. Please you, madam.

Imo. What hour is it?

Lady. Almost midnight, madam.

Imo. I have read three hours then: mine eyes are weak.

Fold down the leaf where I have left: To bed!
Take not away the taper, leave it burning;
And if thou canst awake by four o'clock,
I pray thee, call me. Sleep hath seiz'd me wholly.

[Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods!
From fauries, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beseech ye!

[Sleeps. Inchnio, from the trunk.]

Jack. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labour'd Repairs itself by rest: Our Tarquin thus (since
Did softly press the rushes, ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded)—Cytherea!

How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!

But kiss; one kiss!—Rubes unparagon'd!
How dearly they do it!—'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus: The flame o' the taper

Bows toward her; and would under-peep her lids,
To see the enclosed lights, now dimm'd
Under those windows: White and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct.—But my desire!

To note the chamber:—I will write all down:—
Such, and such, pictures:—There the window.—
Such!

The adornment of her bed:—The arras, figured,
Why, such, and such:—And the contents o' the story,—

Ah, but some natural notes about her body,

He did incline to sadness; and oft-times
Not knowing why.

Jack. I never saw him sad.
There is a Frenchman his companion, one
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl at home: he furnaces
The thick sighs from him; whilst the jolly Briton (Your lord, I mean) laughs from his free lungs, cives, O!

Imo. Can my sides hold, to think that man,—who knows
By history, report, or his own proof,
What woman is, yet, what she cannot choose
But must be,—will his free hours tamish for Assured bondage?

Imo. Will my lord say so?
Jack. Ay, madam; with his eyes in flood with
It is a recreation to be by. [Laughter.]
And hear him mock the Frenchman: But, hea-
Some men are much to blame. [Frens know,

Imo. Not he, I hope.
Jack. Not he: But yet heaven's bounty towards him might

Be us'd more thankfully. In himself, 'tis much:
In you,—which I count his, beyond all talents,— Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pity too.

Imo. What do you pity, sir?
Jack. Two creatures, heartily.

Imo. Am I one, sir?
You look on me! What wreck discern you in me,
Deserves your pity?

Jack. Lamentable! What!
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I the dungeon by a snuff?

Imo. I pray you, sir,
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Why do you pity me?

Jack. That others do.
I was about to say, enjoy your—But it is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak on't.

Imo. You do seem to know
Something of me, or what concerns me: 'Pray you, (Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do: For certainties
Either are past remedies; or, timely knowing,
'The remedy then born,) discover to me
What both you spur and stop

Jack. Had I this cheek,
To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch, would force the feeler's soul
To the oath of loyalty: to this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here: should I (dunn'd then,) Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capital; join grips with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood (falsehood, as
With labour;) then lie peeping in an eye,
Base and unlistrous as the smoky light
'That's fed with stinking tallow: it were fit,
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
Has forgot Britain.

Jack. And himself. Not I,
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce
The beggary of his change; but 'tis your graces
That, from my muteest conscience, to my tongue,
Charms this report out

Imo. Let me hear no more.
Jack. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike
my heart

With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery [Imo.]
Would make the great'st king double! to be part-

With tomboys, hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield! with dreads'd ven-
That play with all infirmities for gold [Imo.]
Which rottenness can lead nature! Such boild stuff,

As well might poison poison! Be reveng'd!
Or she, that bore you, was no queen, and you
Recoil from your great stock.

Imo. Reveng'd!
How should I be reveng'd? If this be true,
(As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse,) if it be true,
How shall I be reveng'd!

Jack. Should he make me
Live like Diana's priest, betwixt cold sheets;
Whilst he is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse? Revenge it!
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure:
More noble than that runagate to your bed;
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close as sure.

Imo. What ho, Pisano!

Jack. Let me my service tender on your lips.
Imo. Away!—I do condemn mine ears that have

So long attended thee.—If thou wert honourable,
Thou would'st have told this tale for virtue, not
For such an end thou seek'st; as base, as strange.

Thou wrong'st a gentleman, who is as far
From thy report, as thou from honour; and Solicit'st here a lady, that disdains

Thee and the devil alike.—What, ho! Pisano!—
The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault; if he shall think it fit,

A saucy stranger, in his court, to mart
As in a Romish stew, and to expound
His beastly mink to us—he hath a court
He little cares for, and a daughter whom
He not respects at all.—What ho, Pisano!

Jack. O happy Lamentus! I may say:
'The credit, that thy lust, thy bath of thee,
Deserves thy trust; and thy most perfect goodness

Her assur'd credit!—Blessed live you long!
A lady to the worthiest air, that ever
Country call'd his! and you his mistress, only

For the most worthiest fit! Give me your pardon.
I have spoke thus, to know if your affiance
Were deeply rooted; and shall make your lord

That which he is, new o'er: And he is one
The truest manner'd; such a holy witch,
That he enchants societies unto him:

Half all men's hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.
Jack. He sits 'mongest men, like a descended
He hath a kind of honour sets him off. [Imo.]
More than a mortal seems. Be not angry,

Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking a false report; which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgements

In the election of a sir so rare, [Imo.]
Which you know, cannot err: The love I bear
Made me to say you thus; but the gods made you,
Unlike all others, chaffins. Pray, your pardon.

Imo. All's well, sir: Take my power I the court for yours.

Jack. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot
To entreat your grace but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concerns

Your lord; myself, and other noble friends,
Are partners in the business.

Imo. Pray, what is't?
Jack. Some dozen Romans of us, and your lord.
(The best feather of our wing) have minked
To buy a present for the emperor; [Imo.]
Which I, the factor for the rest, have done

Cor. I do suspect you, madam;
But you shall do no harm. [Aside]
Queen. Hark thee, a word.—

Cor. [Aside.] I do not like her. She doth think, she has Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit, And will not trust one of her malice with A drop of such damn'd nature: Those, she has, Will stupefy and dull the sense awhile: Which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats and Then afterward up higher: but there is [dogs:] No danger in what show of death it makes, More than the locking up the spirits a time, To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd With a most false effect; and I the truer, So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor, Until I send for thee.
Cor. I humbly take my leave

Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time

She will not quench; and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Do thou work; When thou shalt bring me word, she loves my I'll tell thee, on the instant, thou art then [son, As great as is thy master: greater; for His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last grasp: Return he cannot, nor Continue where he is: to shift his being, Is to exchange one misery with another: And every day, that comes, comes to decay A day's work, in him: What shalt thou expect To be depend on a thing that leans? Who cannot be new built; nor has no friends,

[The Queen drops a box; Pisanio takes it up So much as but to prop him:—Thou tak'st up Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy It is a thing I made, which hath the king [labour: Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know What is more cordial:—Nay, I pry thee, take it; It is an earnest of a further good

That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how The case stands with her; do't, as from thyself Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think Thou hast thy mistress still; to boot, my son, Who shall take notice of thee: I'll move thee To any shape of thy preferment, such [king As thou'lt desire: and then myself, I chiefly, That set thee on to this desert, am bound To load thy merit richly. Call my women: Think on my words. [Exit Pisanio]—A sly and constant knave:

Not to be shak'd; the agent for his master; And the remembrance of her, to hold [that, The hand fast to her lord.—I have given him Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her Of lovers for her sweet; and which she, after, Except she bend her humour, shall be assur'd

Re-enter Pisanio and Ladies.

To taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done: The violets, cowslips, and the primroses, Bear to my closet.—Fare thee well, Pisanio: Think on my words. [Exit Queen and Ladies]

Pa. And shall do:
But when to my good lord I prove untrue, I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you. [Exit]

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
A foolish sailor to a wedded lady

That hath her husband banish'd;—O, that husband!

My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated Vexations of it! Had I been thief stolen, As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable Is the desire that's glorious: Blessed be those, How mean so'er, that have their honest wills, Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be? Fye!

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Pa. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome; Comes from my lord with letters

Imo. Change you, madam! The worthy Leonatus is in safety, And greets your highness dearly.

[Presents a letter.]
Imo. Thanks, good sir: You are kindly welcome.

Pa. All of her, that is out of door, most rich!

[Aside]
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare, She is almost the Arabian bird: and I Have lost the wager. Boldness be my friend! Arm me, audacity, from head to foot! Or, like the Partian, I shall flying fight; Rather directly fly.

Imo. [Reads] He is one of the noblest note, to whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust
Leonatus

So far I read aloud: But even the very middle of my heart is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully... You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I Have words to bid you; and shall find it so, In all that I can do.

Pa. Thanks, fairest lady—What! are men mad? Hath nature given them To see this vaulted arch, and the rich crop [eyes Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt The fiery orb above, and the twin'd stones Upon the number'd beach: and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious 'Twixt fair and foul!

Imo. What makes your admiration? Pa. It cannot be i'th' eye; for apace and nuckeyes. 'Twixt two such shes, would chatter this way, Contemn with mows the other: Nor i'th' judgment, in this case of favour, would [uncut; Be wisely definite: Nor i'th' appetite; Sluttish, to such neat excellence oppos'd, Should make desire vount emptiness, Not so allur'd to feed.

Imo. What is the matter, trow? Pa. [That statute yet unsatisfied desire, That tub both fill'd and running,] ravening first The lamb, longs after for the garbage.

Imo. What, dear sir, Thus wraps you? Are you well?

Pa. Thanks, madam; well.—'Beseech you, sir, desire [To Pisanio. My man's abode where I did leave him: he is strange and peevish.

Pa. I was going, sir. To give him welcome. Imo. Continues well my lord? His health? Pa. Well, madam. [Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope he is. Pa. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger there

So merry and so agreeable: he is call'd The Briton reveller

Imo. When he was here,

Jack. What do you esteem it at?
Post. More than the world enjoys.
Jack. Either your unpurged mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given; if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Jack. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Jack. You may wear her in title yours: but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds. Your ring may be stolen too: so, of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual: a cunning thief, or a that-way-accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince the honour of my mistress; if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail. I do nothing doubt, you have store of thieves: notwithstanding I fear not my ring.

Phi. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy senator, I think him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Jack. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your mistress: make her go back, even to the yielding; had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Jack. I dare, thereupon, pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, deserves it something: But I make my wager rather against your confidence, than her reputation: and to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deal abused in too hold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of, by your attempt.

Jack. What's that?

Post. A repulse: Though your attempt, as you call it, deserve more; a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and, I pray you, be better acquainted.

Jack. Would I had put my estate, and my neighbour's, on the approbation of what I have spoke.

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Jack. Yours: whom in constancy, you think, stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers, which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger: 'tis part of it.

Jack. You are a friend, and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: But, I see you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Jack. I am the master of my speeches; and would undergo what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—Let there be covenants drawn between us: My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here's my ring.

Phi. I will have it no lay.

Jack. By the gods it is one:—If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours; so a your diamond too. If I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, then your jewel, and my gold, are yours:—provided, I have your commendation, for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions: let us have articles betwixt us:—only, thus far you shall answer. If you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy, she is not worth our debate: if she remain unused'd, (you not making it appear otherwise,) for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Jack. Your hand; a covenant: We will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain: lest the bargain should catch cold, and starve: I will fetch my gold, and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed.

(Exeunt Posthumus and Iachimo.)

French. Will this hold, think you?

Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VI.—Britain. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Queen, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Queen. Whiles yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers:

Make haste: who has the note of them?

Lady. I, madam.

Queen. Despatch.—(Exeunt Ladies.) Now, master doctor; have you brought those drugs?

Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay: here they are, madam: (Presenting a small box.)

But I beseech your grace, (without offence:) My conscience bids me ask: wherefore you have Commanded me these most poisonous compounds,

Which are the movers of a languishing death:

But, though slow, deadly!

Queen. I do wonder, doctor, Thou ask'st me such a question: Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? distil? preserve? yea, so, That our great king himself doth woo me oft For my confections? Having thus far proceeded, (Unless thou think'st me devilish,) 'st not meet That I did amplify my judgment in Other conclusions? I will try the forces Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the tanning, (but none To try the vigour of them, and apply (human.) Allayments to their woe: and by them gather Their several virtues, and effects.

Cor.

Your highness Shall from this practice but make hard your heart:

Besides, the seeing these effects will be Both noisome and infectious.

Queen.

O, content thee.—

Enter Pisanio.

Here comes a flattering rascal: upon him

(Aside.)

Will I first work: he's for his master, And enemy to my son.—How now, Pisanio!— Doctor, your service for this time is ended; Take your own way.

SCENE IV. — A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Imogen and Pisanio.

Imo. I would thou grew'st unto the shores o'the haven.

And question'd every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, 'twere a paper lost,
As offer'd mercy is. What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pis. 'Twas, His queen, his queen!

Imo. Then wad'st his handkerchief?

Pis. And kiss'd it, madam.

Imo. Senseless linen! I happier therein than I! —
And that was all?

Pis. No, madam; for so long
As he could make me with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and starts of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd out,
How swift his ship.

Imo. Thou should'st have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pis. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings;
crack'd them, but

To look upon him; till the diminution
Of space had pointed him sharp as my needle:
Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air; and then
Have turn'd mine eye, and wept. — But, good Pis.
When shall we hear from him?

Pis. Be assur'd, madam,

With his next vantage.
Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had Must pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think on him, at certain hours.
Such thoughts, and such; or I could make him
The slave of Italy should not betray (I swear Mine interest, and his honour; or have charg'd
him,

At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,
To encounter me with orisons, for then
I am in heaven for him; or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set
Between two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from growing.

Enter a lady.

Lady. The queen, madam,
Desires your highness' company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them despatch'd —

I will attend the queen

Pis. Madam, I shall. [Exit.

SCENE V. — Rome. An Apartment in Philario's House.

Enter Philario, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iach. Believe it, sir: I have seen him in Britain: he was then of a crescent note; expected to prove so worthy, as since he hath been a lowed the name off; but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration; though the catalogue of his endowments had been tailed by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Phi. You speak of him when he was less furnished, than now he is, with that which makes him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there, could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his king's daughter, (wherein he must be weighed rather by her value than his own,) words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

French. And then his banishment: —

Iach. Ay, and the approbation of those, that weep this lamentable divorce, under her colours, are wonderfully to extend him: be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without more quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phi. His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life: —

Enter Posthumus.

Here comes the British: Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality. — Beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you, as a noble friend of mine: how worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness: I was glad I did atone my countryman and you: it had been pity, you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose, as then each bore, upon importance of so slight and trivial a nature.

Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller: rather slann'd to go even with what I heard, than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences: but, upon my mended judgment, (if I offend not to say it is mended,) my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. Faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such two, that would, by all likelihood, have confounded one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

French. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in publick, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in price of our country mistresses: This gentleman at that time vouching, (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation) his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified, and less amittible, than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living: or this gentleman's opinion, by this, worn out.

Post. She holds her vir-de still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As fair, and as good, (in kind of hand-in-hand comparison,) had been something too fair, and too good, for any lady in Britany. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours our lustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe she excelled many; but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her as I rated her: so do I my stone.

With bonds of death!—Remain thou here
(Putting on the ring)
 While sense can keep it on! And sweetest, fairest,
 As I my poor self did exchange for you,
 To your so infinite loss; so, in our trifles
 I still win of you: For my sake, wear this;
 It is a miracle of love; I'll place it
 Upon this fairest prisoner.

(Putting a bracelet on her arm.)
Imo. O, the gods!
 When shall we see again?

Enter Cymbeline and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king!
Cym. Thou hastest thing, avoid! hence, from my sight!
 If, after this command, thou fraught the court
 With thy unworthiness, thou diest: Away!
 Thou art poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you!
 And bless the good remainders of the court!
 I am gone. (Exit.)

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
 More sharp than this is.

Cym. O dismal! think.
 That should'st repair my youth; thou heapest
 A year's age on me!

Imo. I beseech you, sir,
 Harm not yourself with your vexation; I
 Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare
 Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace? obedience!
Imo. Past hope, and in despair: that way, past grace. (Queen.)

Cym. That might'st have had the sole son of my Imo. O bless'd, that I might not! I chose an eagle.

And did avoid a puttock.

Cym. Thou look'st a beggar; would'st have made my throne
 A seat for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added

A lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vile one!

Imo. Sir,
 It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus:
 You bred him as my playfellow; and he is
 A man, worth any woman; overbears me
 Almost the sum he pays.

Cym. What!—art thou mad!
Imo. Almost, sir: Heaven restore me!—"Would I were

A best-herd's daughter! and my Leonatus
 Our neighbour shepherd's son!

Re-enter Queen.

Cym. Thou foolish thing!—
 They were again together: you have done
(To the Queen.)

Not after our command. Away with her,
 And pen her up.

Queen. Beseech your patience:—Peace.
 Dear lady daughter, peace:—Sweet sovereign,
 Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort

Out of your best advice.

Cym. Nay, let her languish
 A drop of blood a day; and, being aged,
 Die of this folly! (Exit.)

Enter Flurio.

Queen. Fye!—you must give way:
 here is your servant.—How now sir!—What
 news!

Pis. My lord your son drew on my master.
Queen. Ha
 No harm, I trust, is done!

Pis. There might have been
 But that my master rather play'd than fought.
 And had no help of anger: they were parted
 By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on't.
Imo. Your son's my father's friend; he takes his part.—

To draw upon an exile!—O brave sir!—
 I would they were in Africk both together;
 Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
 The goer back.—Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command: He would not suffe:
 me

To bring him to the haven: left these notes
 Of what commands I should be subject to,
 When it pleas'd you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been
 Your faithful servant: I dare lay mine honour,
 He will remain so.

Pis. I humbly thank your highness.
Queen. Pray, walk a while.

Imo. About some half hour hence,
 I pray you, speak with me: you shall, at least,
 Go see my lord aboard: for this time, leave me.
(Exit.)

SCENE III.—A publick place.

Enter Cloten and Two Lords.

1 Lord. Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt;
 the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: Where air comes out, air comes in:
 there's none abroad as wholesome as that you vent.

Cl. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it—
 Have I hurt him?

2 Lord. No, faith: not so much as his patience.
(Aside.)

1 Lord. Hurt him? his body's a possible carcass, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.

2 Lord. His steel was in debt: it went o'the back side the town. (Aside.)

Cl. The villain would not stand me.

2 Lord. No: but he fled forward still, toward your face. (Aside.)

1 Lord. Stand you! You have had enough of your own: but he added to your having: gave you some ground.

2 Lord. As many inches as you have oceans:
 Puppies! (Aside.)

Cl. I would, they had not come between us

2 Lord. So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground. (Aside.)

Cl. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me!

2 Lord. If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damned. (Aside.)

1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: She's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.

2 Lord. She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. (Aside.)

Cl. Come, I'll to my chamber: 'Would there had been some hurt done!

2 Lord. I wish not so: unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt. (Aside.)

Cl. You'll go with us!

1 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.
Cl. Nay, come, let's go together.
 2 Lord. Well, my lord. (Aside.)

No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers;
Sull seem, as does the king's.

2 Genl. But what's the matter?

1 Genl. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom, whom

He purpos'd to his wife's sole son, (a widow,
That late he married,) hath refer'd herself Unto a poor, but worthy, gentleman: She's wedded.

Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all
Is outward sorrow; though, I think, the king
Be touch'd at very heart.

2 Genl. None but the king!

1 Genl. He, that hath lost her, too: so is the queen,

That most desir'd the match: But not a courtier.
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they sorrow at.

2 Genl. And why so?

1 Genl. He that hath marr'd the princess, is a thief.

Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her,
(I mean, that married her,—alack, good man!—
And therefore banish'd,) is a creature such
As, to seek through the regions of the earth
For one his like, there would be something failing
In him that should compare. I do not think,
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Knows a man but he.

2 Genl. You speak him far.

1 Genl. I do extend him, sir, within himself:
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure duly.

2 Genl. What's his name, and birth?

1 Genl. I cannot delve him to the root: His father

Was call'd Sicilius, who did join his honour,
Against the Romans, with Cassibelan;
But had his titles by Tenuantius, whom
He serv'd with glory and admir'd success:
So gain'd the earl-shield, Leonatus:
And had, besides this gentleman in question,
Two other sons, who, in the wars of the time,
Died with their swords in hand; for which, their father

(Then old and fond of issue,) took such sorrow,
That he quit being; and his gentle lady,
Widow of this gentleman, our theme, decess'd
As he was born. The king, he takes the babe
To his protection; calls him Posthumus;
Breeds him, and makes him of his bed-chamber:
Puts him to all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of; which he took,
As we do sir, fast as 'twas minister'd; and
In his spring became a harvest: Let's in court,
(Which rare it is to do) must praise'd, most lov'd:
A sample to the youngest; to the more mature,
A glass that featured them; and to the graver,
A child that guided dotards; to his mistress,
For whom he now is banish'd,—her own price
Proclaims how she esteem'd him and his virtue;
By her election may be truly read,
What kind of man he is.

2 Genl. I honour him
Even out of your report. But, pray you, tell me,
Is she a child to the king?

1 Genl. His only child.
He had two sons, (if this be worth your hearing, Mark it,) the eldest of them at three years old,
(The swartest clothes the other, from their nur-very) were stolen; and to this hour no guess in know-how way they went.

2 Genl. How long is this ago?

1 Genl. Some twenty years.

2 Genl. That a king's children should be so conveyed!

So slackly guarded! And the search so slow,
That could not trace them!

1 Genl. Howsoe'er 'tis strange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at,
Yet is it true, sir.

2 Genl. I do well believe you.

1 Genl. We must forbear: Here comes the queen and princess. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same.

Enter the Queen, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Queen. No, be assur'd, you shall not find me,
daughter,

After the slander of most step-mothers,
Evil-ey'd unto you: you are my prisoner, but
Your gentler shall deliver you the keys

That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthumus,
So soon as I can win the offended king,

I will be known your advocate: marry, yet
The fire of rage is in him; and 'twere goal.

You lean'd unto his sentence, with what patience
Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness,

I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril:—

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pang of barr'd affections; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

[Exit Queen.]

Imo. O

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!—My dearest husband,

I something fear my father's wrath: but nothing, (Always re-err'd my holy duty,) what
His rage can do on me: You must be gone;

And I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes: not comforted to live,

But that there is this jewel in the world,
That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress!

O, lady, weep no more: I'll give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than doth become a man! I will remain
The loyal'st husband that did e'er plight truth

My residence in Rome, at one Philario's;
Who to my father was a friend, to us
Known but by letter: thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

[Exit Queen.]

Re-enter Queen.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you:
If the king come, I shall incur I know not
How much of his displeasure: Yet I'll move him

To walk this way: I never do him wrong,
But he does buy my injuries, to be friends;

Pays dear for my offences. [Exit Queen.]

Post. Should we be taking leave
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathness to depart would grow: Adieu!

Imo. Nay, stay a little:
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Look here, here;
This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;

But keep it till you woo another wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How! how! another!—
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And near up my embracements from a next

With thy sharp teeth this knot intricate
Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and dispatch. O, could'st thou speak!
That I might hear thee call great Caesar, and Unpolitic!

Char. O eastern star!
Cleo. Peace, peace!
Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!
Cleo. As sweet as halm, as soft as air, as gentle,
O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:— [He, — [Applying another asp to her arm]

What should I stay?— [Falls on a bed, and dies.
Char. In this wide world!—So, fare thee well.—
Now boast thee, death! in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phœbus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;
I'll mend it, and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?
Char. Speak softly, wake her not.
1 Guard. Caesar hath sent—

Char. Too slow a messenger.
[Applies the asp.]

O, come; apace, despatch: I partly feel thee.
1 Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well: Caesar's beguill'd. [Call him.]

2 Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Caesar;—
1 Guard. What work is here!—Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess Descended of so many royal kings.
Ah, soldier! [Dies.]

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?
2 Guard. All dead.
Dol. Caesar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreadful act, which thou
So much'st to hinder.
Within. A way there, a way for Caesar!

Enter Caesar and Attendants.

Dol. O, sir, you are too sure an augur;
That you did fear, is done.

Ces. Bravest at the last.
She leav'd it at our purposes, and, being royal,
Took her own way.—Tis the manner of their deaths;
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?
1 Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her hither.

This was his basket.
Ces. Poison'd then.

1 Guard. O Caesar.
This Charmian liv'd but now; she stol'd, and spoke:

I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stol'd,
And on the sudden dropp'd.

Ces. O noble weakness!—
If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear
By external swelling: but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong tail of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast.
There is a vent of blood, and something blown:
The like is on his arm.

1 Guard. This is an asp'sk's trail: and these fig-leaves
Have slime upon them, such as the asp'sk leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Ces. Most probable,
That so she died; for her physician tells me,
She hath pursu'd conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed;
And bear her women from the monument:
She shall be buried by her Antony:
No grave upon the earth shall clip in it
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is No less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend this funeral;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity. [Exeunt.]

CYMBELINE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Cymbeline, King of Britain.
Cloten, son to the Queen by a former husband.
Leonatus Posthumus, a gentleman, husband to Imogen.
Belarius, a banished lord, disguised under the name of Morgan.
Guiderius, } sons to Cymbeline, disguised under the Arviragus, } names of Polydore and Cadwal.
Philario, friend to Posthumus, }
Iachimo, friend to Philario, } Italians.
A French Gentleman, friend to Philario.
Caius Lucius, general of the Roman Forces.
A Roman Captain.
Two British Captains.
Fusianus, servant to Posthumus.
Cornelius, a physician.
Two Gentlemen.
Two Grooms.

Queen, wife to Cymbeline.
Imogen, daughter to Cymbeline by a former queen.
Helen, woman to Imogen.

Lords, Ladies, Roman Senators, Tribunes, Apparitions, a Soothsayer, a Dutch Gentleman, a Spanish
Gentleman, Musicians, Officers, Captains, Soldiers,
Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE, — sometimes in Britain; sometimes in Italy.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Britain. The Garden behind Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. You do not meet a man, but I know our bloods

Be noble to myself: but hark thee, Charmian.

Iras. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hie thee again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go, put it to the haste.

Cher. Madam, I will.

Re-enter Dolabella.

Dol. Where is the queen? [Whispers Charmian.]

Cher. Behold, sir. [Exit Charmian.]

Cleo. Dolabella?

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,

Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria
Intends his journey: and, within three days,
You with your children will be sent before:
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure, and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella,
I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant.

Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cæsar.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks [Exit Dol.] Now,

Iras. what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shown
In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Iras. The gods forbid!
Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain: Iras. Saucy hectors
Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald rhymers

Bellied us out o' time: the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see Some squeaking Cleopatra buy her greatness
I'th posture of a whore.

Iras. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that is certain.

Iras. I'll never see it; for I'm sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why, that's the way
To foul their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.—Now, Charmian!—

Enter Charmian.

Show me, my women, like a queen:—Go fetch
My best attires:—I am again for Cydnus.
To meet Mark Antony:—Sirrah, Iras. go.—
Now, noble Charmian, we'll despatch indeed:
And, when thou hast done this chure, I'll give thee leave
To play till dooms-day.—Bring our crown and all.
Wherefore's this noise?

[Exit Iras. A noise within.]

Enter one of the Guard.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow.
That will not be denied your highness' presence:
He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. How poor an instrument.

[Exit Guard.]
May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am marble-constant: now the footing moon
Keeps planet in mine.

Re-enter Guard, with a Clown bringing a basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guard.]

Hast thou the pretty worm of Nilus there
That kills and pains not?

Clown. Truly I have him: but I would not be his party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal: those that do die of it, do seldom or never recover.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died on't?

Clown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday:
a very honest woman, but something given to lie;
as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she died of the biting of it, what pain
she felt.—Truly, she makes a very good report
o' the worm: But he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do:
But this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence: farewell.

Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

Cleo. Farewell. [Clown sets down the basket.]

Clown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.

Cleo. Ay, ay: farewell.

Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Clown. Very good: give it working, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman:
I know, that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dross her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women;
for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Clown. Yes, forthwith: I wish you joy of the worm. [Exit.]

Re-enter Iras, with a robe, crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown, I have

Immortal longings in me: Now no more

The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—

Yare, yare, good Iras: quick.—Methinks, I hear

Antony call; I see him rouse himself

To praise my noble act: I hear him mock

The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men

To excuse their after wrath: Husband, I come:
Now to that name my courage prove my title!

I am fire, and air; my other elements

I give to base life.—So,—have you done?

Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.

Farewell, kind Charmian:—Iras. hush, farewell.

[Kisses them. Iras falls and dies.]

Have I the aspick in my lips? Dost fall?

If thou and nature can so gently part,

The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,

Which hurts, and is desir'd. Dost thou lie still?

If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world

It is not worth leave-taking. [May say,]

Cher. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain: that I

The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base:

If she first meet the curled Antony.

He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss,

Which is my heaven to have. Come, my true wretch

[To the asp, which she applies to her breast.]

The element they liv'd in: In his livery Walk'd crowns, and crownets; realms and islands were
As plates dropp'd from his pocket.

Do. Cleopatra,— Cleo. Think you, there was, or might be, such a man

As this I dream'd of!

Do. Gentle madam, no.
Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods.
But, if there be, or ever were one such,
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants
stuff

To vie strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine
An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Do. Hear me, good madam:
Your loss is as yourself, great; and you hear it
As answering to the weight: 'Would I might never

O'ertake pursu'd success, but I do feel,
By the reboud of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.
Know you, what Caesar means to do with me?

Do. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,—

Do. Though he be honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph!

Do. Madam, he will;

I know it.

Within. Make way there,—Caesar.

Enter Caesar, Gallus, Proculeius, Nectenas, Seleu-cus, and Attendants.

Ces. Which is the queen

Of Egypt?

Do. 'Tis the emperor, madam.

[Cleopatra kneels.]

Ces. Arise,

You shall not kneel!—

I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods
Will have it thus; my master and my lord
I must obey.

Ces. Take to you no hard thoughts:

The record of what injuries you did us,

Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world,
I cannot project mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but do confess, I have Been laden with like fruitless, which before
Have oft ensham'd our sex.

Ces. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,
(Which towards you are most gentle,) you shall find

A benefit in this change; but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours; and we
Your accusers, and your signs of conquest,

shall
Hang in what place you please. Here, my good
lord,

Ces. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels.

I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sel. Here, madam.

Cleo. This is my treasurer; let him speak, my

lord.

Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,

I had rather seal my lips, than to my peril,

Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?
Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Ces. Nay, blith not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo.

See, Caesar! O, behold
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours:
And, should we shift estates, yours would be
mine;

The ingratitude of this Seleucus does
Even make me wild: O slave, of no more trust
Than love that's liv'd!—What, goest thou back?
thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine
eyes.

Though they had wings: Slave, soul-less villain,
die!

O rarely have!

Ces. Good queen, let us entreat you

Cleo. O Caesar, what a wounding shame is this!

That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,

Doing the honour of thy loneliness

To one so weak, that mine own servant should

Parcel the sum of my disgraces by

Addition of his envy! Say, good Caesar,

That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,

Immoment toys, things of such dignity

As we greet modern friends withal; and say,

Some nobler token I have kept apart

For Livia, and Octavia, to induce

Their mediation; must I be unfolded

With one that I have bred? The gods! It smokes
me

Beneath the fall I have. Prythee, go hence:

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits

Through the ashes of my chance:—Wert thou a

man,

Thou would'st have mercy on me.

Ces. Forbear, Seleucus.

[Exit Seleucus.]

Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are misdeed

For things that others do; and, when we fall,

We answer others' merits in our name,—

Are therefore to be pitied.

Ces. Cleopatra,

Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd.

Put we 'neath the roll of conquest: still be it yours

Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,

Caesar's no merchant, to make prize with you

Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd: [queen:]

Make not your thoughts your prisons: no, dear

For we intend so to dispense you, as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:

Our cure and pity is so much upon you,

That we remain your friends: And so adieu

Cleo. My master, and my lord!

Ces. Not so: Adieu.

[Exit Caesar, and his Train.]

Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not

Cæs. Gallus, go you along. — Where's Dolabella,

To second Proculeius? [Exit Gallus.

Ant. Dols tell! —
Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employ'd: he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent: where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings; Go with me, and see
What I can show in this. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Monument.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis puality to be Cæsar;
Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave,
A minister of her will: And it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.

Enter, to the gates of the Monument, Proculeius, Gallus, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt.

And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. [Within.] What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius

Cleo. [Within.] Antony
Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell
him.

That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me no much of mine own, as I
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer;
You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing.

Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency: and you shall feed
A conqueror, that will pray in aid for kindness
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. [Within.] Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatest love I have got. I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience: and would gladly
Lend him i' the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.
Have comfort; for, I know, your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

Gul. You see how easily she may be surpris'd.
[Here Proculeius, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a ladder placed against a window, and having descended, come behind Cleopatra. Some of the Guard stand and open the gates.]

Guard her till Cæsar come.

[To Proculeius and the Guard. Exit Gallus.

Iras. Royal queen!

Chor. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen! —

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a dagger.

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold!

[Seizes and disarms her.

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too
That ride our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,

Do not abuse my master's bounty, by

The undoing of yourself: let the world see

His nobleness well acted, which your death

Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, dead? b?

Come hither, come! come, come, and take a

queen

Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady!

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir;

If idle talk will once be necessary,

I'll not sleep neither: This mortal house I'll ruin.

Do Cæsar what he can. Know, sir, that I

Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;

Nor once be chaste'd with the sober eye

Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,

And show me to the shouting variety

Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt

Be gentle grave to me! rather on Nilus' mud

Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies

Blow me into abhorring! rather make

My country's high pyramids my gibbet,

And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend

These thoughts of horror further than you shall

Find cause in Cæsar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,

What thou hast done thy master Cæsar knows,

And he hath sent for thee: as for the queen,

I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,

It shall content me best: be gentle to her —

To Cæsar I will speak what you shall please.

[To Cleopatra.

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Exeunt Proculeius and Soldiers.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of

me?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard, or known.

You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their dreams;

Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not madam.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor An tony: —

O, such another sleep, that I might see

But such another man!

Dol. If it might please you. —

Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck

A sun, and moon; which kept their course, and light'd

The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature. —

Cleo. His less bestrid the ocean: his rear'd

arm

Created the world: his voice was property

As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;

But when he meant to quit and shake the world,

He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,

There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas,

That grew the more by reaping: His delights

Were dolphin-like; they show'd his back above

Cleo. Noblest of men, won't die?
Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is
No better than a sty?—O, see my women,
The crown of the earth doth melt:—My lord!—
O, wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's pale is fallen; young boys, and girls,

Are level now with men: the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable Beneath the visiting moon. [She faints.]

Char. O quietness, lady!

Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady.—

Iras. Madam,—

Char. O madam, madam, madam!

Iras. Royal Egypt!

Empress!

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more, but e'en a woman; and commanded

By such poor passion as the maid that milks,

And does the meanest churls.—It were for me

To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;

To tell them, that this world did equal theirs,

Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but naught;

Patience is scottish; and impatience does

Become a dog that's mad: Then is it sin,

To rush into the secret house of death,

Ere death dare come to us!—How do you, women?

What, what! good cheer! Why, how now, Charmius?

My noble girls!—Ah, women, women! look,

Our lamp is spent, it's out:—Good sirs, take heart: [To the Guard below]

We'll bury him: and then, what's brave, what's noble,

Let's do it after the high Roman fashion.

And make death proud to take us. Come, away:

This case of that huge spirit now is cold.

Ah, women, women! come; we have no friend

But resolution, and the briefest end.

[Exeunt; then above bearing off Antony's body.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Meenius, Gaius, Proculeius, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;

Being so frustrate, tell him, he mocks us by

The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit Dolabella]

Enter Dercetus, with the sword of Antony.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou, that dar'st

Appear thus to us?

Der. I am call'd Dercetus;

Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy

Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up, and spoke,

He was my master; and I wore my life,

To spend upon his haters: If thou please

To take me to thee, as I was to him,

I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,

I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make

A greater crack: The round world should have shook

Lions into civil streets,

And citizens to their dens:—The death of An-

tony

Is not a single doom; in the name lay

A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cæsar;

Not by a publick minister of justice,

Nor by a hired knife: but that self hand,

Which writ his honour in the acts it did,

Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,

Spilt the heart.—This is his sword;

I rubb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd

With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends?

The gods rebuke me, but it is a tidings

To wash the eyes of kings.

Ag. And strange it is,

That nature must compel us to lament

Our most perished deeds.

Mer. His taints and honours

Waged equal with him.

Ag. A rarer spirit never

Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us

Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mer. When such a specious mirror's set before

him,

He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O Antony!

I have follow'd thee to this:—But we do lance

Diseases in our bodies: I must perforce

Have shown to thee such a declining day.

Or look on thine; we could not stall together

In the whole world: But yet let me lament,

With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts

That thou, my brother, my competitor

In top of all design, my mate in empire,

Friend and companion in the front of war,

The arm of mine own body, and the heart

Where none his thoughts did kindle,—that our

stars

Unreconcilable, should divide

Our equalities to this.—Hear me, good friends,—

But I will tell you at some meetest season:

Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him:

We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are you?

Mer. A poor Egyptian yet. The queen my mistress.

Confin'd in all she has, her monument,

Of thy intents desires instruction;

That she preparedly may frame herself

To the way she's forced to.

Cæs. Bid her have good heart;

She soon shall know of us, by some of ours

How honourably and how kindly we determine for her: Cæsar cannot live to be tingentle.

Mer. So the gods preserve thee!

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius; Go, and say,

We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts

The quality of her passion shall require.

First, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke

She do defeat us: for her life in Rome

Would be eternal in our triumph: Go,

And, with your speediest, bring us what she says.

And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exit Proculeius.]

I learn'd of thee. How! not yet dead! not dead!—
The guard!—ho!—O, despatch me.

Enter Decretas and Guard.

1 Guard. What's the noise?
Ant. I have done my work ill, friends; O, make an end
Of what I have begun.

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and woe!

Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard. Not I.

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt Guard.

Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shown to Caesar, with this tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Die. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed, there.

Die. Lives he?

Will thou not answer, man? [Exit Decretas.

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me

Stiffening strokes for death.

Die. Most absolute lord,

My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Die. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Die. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear

Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw

(Which never shall be found) you did suspect

She had dispos'd with Caesar, and that your rage

Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was

dead;

But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,

I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late, good Diomed:—Call my guard,

I prythee.

Die. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard, what, ho!

Come, your lord calls.

Enter some of the Guard.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra

lides:

'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Woe are we, sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fits

To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome

Which comes to punish us, and we punish it

Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up;

I have led you oft; carry me now, good friends,

And have my thanks for all [Exeunt, bearing Antony.

SCENE XIII.—The same. A Monument.

Enter above, Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence.

Chor. Be comforted, dear madam.

Cleo. No, I will not.

All strange and terrible events are welcome.

But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

Enter Diomedes.

As that which makes it.—How now? is he dead?
Die. His death's upon him, but not dead.
Look out o' the other side your monument,
His guard have brought him thither.

Enter Antony, borne by the Guard.

Cleo. O thou sun,
Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in!—darkling
stand

The varying shore o' the world!—O Antony!
Antony, Antony!—Charmian, help! help, Iras;
Help, friends below; let's draw him thither.

Peace:

Not Caesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumphed on itself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
Should conquer Antony; but woe 'tis so!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only
I here importune death a while, until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last
I lay upon thy lips—

Cleo. I dare not, dear,
(Dear my lord, pardon,) I dare not,
Least I be taken: not the imperious show
Of the full-fortun'd Caesar ever shall Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents,
have

Edge, sting, or operation, I am sale;
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour
Demuring upon me.—But come, come, Antony,—
Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up;—
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.

Cleo. Here's sport, indeed!—How heavy weigh
my lord!

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight: Had I great Juno's
power,

The strout-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— Wishers were ever fools:—O, come, come, come;

[They draw Antony up.
And welcome, welcome! die, where thou hast
liv'd:

Quicken with kissing; had my lips that power
Thus would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:

Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail as high,

That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel.

Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen
Of Caesar seek your honour, with your safety—

Cleo. They do not go together. [O!

Ant. Gentle, hear me;

None about Caesar trust, but Procureus

Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust;

None about Caesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,

Lament nor sorrow at; but please your thoughts,

In feeding them with those my former fortunes

Whereas I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world,

The nobiest,—and do now not hushly die,

Nor cowardly: put off my helmet to

My countryman, a Roman, by a Roman

Valiantly vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is going,

I can no more

Cleo. To the monument:—
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say that the last I spoke was Antony,
And word it prythee, piteously: Hence,
Mardian; and bring me how he takes my death—
To the monument. [Exit Mardian.]

SCENE XII.—The same. Another Room.

Enter Antony and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish:
A vapour, sometimes, like a bear, or lion,
A tower'd citadel, a pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air: thou hast seen these
signs;

They are black vespers' pageants

Eros. Ay, my lord.Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a

thought
The rack dilates; and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave, Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony;
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Egypt: and the queen,—
Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine;
Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
A million more, new lust,—she, Eros, has Pack'd curia with Caesar, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph.—
Nay, weep not, gentle Eros: there is left us
Ourselves to end ourselves—O, thy vile lady!

Enter Mardian.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace;

She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;

And that she has discharged: What thou would'st

do,

Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake

Was, Antony! most noble Antony!

Then at the midst a tearing grin did break

The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips: she render'd life,

Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then?Mar. Dead.Ant. Eros, unarm; the long day's task is done.

And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe, [Off.]

Does pay thy labour richly: Go.—Off, pluck

[Exit Mardian.]

The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep

The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent.

Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace.—

No more a soldier:—Bruised pieces, go;

You have been nobly borne.—From me a while.—
[Exit Eros.]

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and

Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now

All length is torture:—Since the torch is out,

Lie down, and stray no further: Now all labour

Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles

Itself with strength: Seal then, and all is done.—

Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:

Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand, [Goes:]

And with our sprightly port make the ghosts

Dido and her Æneas shall want tugs.

And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?Ant. Since Cleopatra died,

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods

Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword

Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's

back

With ships made cities, condemn myself, to lack

The courage of a woman: less noble mind

Than she, which, by her death, our Caesar tells,

I am conqueror of myself! Thou art swift, Eros,

That, when the exigent should come, (which now is come, indeed,) when I should see behind me

The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command,

Thou then would'st kill me: do't: the time is

come:

Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Caesar thou defeat'st.

Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!

Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts,

Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Eros,

Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see

Thy master thus with pleas'd arms, bending

down

His corrugate neck, his face reddish

To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat

Of fortunate Caesar, drawn before him, branded

His baseness that smir'd?

Eros. I would not see't.Ant. Come then; for with a wound I must be cur'd.

Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast

worn

Most useful for thy country: O, sir, pardon me.

Eros. When I did make thee free, sword'st thou not then

To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;

Or thy precedent services are all

But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turn from me then that noble countenance,

Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee! [Turning from him.]Eros. My sword is drawn.Ant. Then let it do at once

The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,

My captain, and my emperor: let me say,

Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man;—and farewell.Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike

now?

Ant. Now, Eros.Eros. Why, there then:—[Falls on his sword.]

Thus do I escape the sorrow

Of Antony's death. [Drops.]Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!

Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what

I should, and thou could'st not. My queen and

Eros

Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me

A nobleness in record: But I will be

A bridegroom in my death, and run late't

As to a lover's bed. Come then; and, Eros,

Thy master dies thy scholar: to do thus

SCENE IX. — Cæsar's Camp.Sentinels on their post. Enter Enobarbus.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard: The night is shrewd; and they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was
A shrewd one to us.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night,—

3 Sold. What man is this?

2 Sold. Stand close, and list to him.

Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did Before thy face repent!—

1 Sold. Enobarbus!

3 Sold. Peace;

Hark further.

Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night dripping upon me;
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me: Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder.

And smite all foul thoughts. O Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A monster-leaver, and a fugitive:

O Antony! O Antony! [Dies.]

2 Sold. Let's speak

To him

1 Sold. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Cæsar.

3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

1 Sold. Swears rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet for sleeping.

2 Sold. Go we to him.

3 Sold. Awake, awake, sir; speak to us.

2 Sold. Hear you, sir?

1 Sold. The hand of death hath rought him.

Eno. Hark, the drums [Drums afar off]
Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us bear him
To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour is fully out.

3 Sold. Come on then;
He may recover yet. [Exeunt with the body]

SCENE X. — Between the two Camps.Enter Antony and Scævus, with Forces marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to day by sea;
We please them not by land.

Scæv. For both, my lord.
Ant. I would, they'd fight 't' the fire, or in the air;

We'd fight there too. But this it is; Our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city,
Shall stay with us: order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven: Further on,
Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.]

Enter Cæsar, and his Forces marching.

Cæs. But being charg'd, we will be still by land,
Which, as I tuck't, we shall; for his best force is forth to meet his gallies. To the valves,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter Antony and Scævus.

Ant. Yet they're not join'd: Where yonder pine does stand.

I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word
Straight, how 'tis like to go. [Exit.]

Scæv. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurers Say, they know not,—they cannot tell!—look grimly.

And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear
Of what he has, and has not.

[Alarm afar off, as at a sea fight.]

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost;
This fool Egyptian hath betrayed me:
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore! 'tis thou

Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly;
For when I am reveng'd upon my charms,
I have done all:—Bid them all fly, be gone.

[Exit Scævus.]

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more;
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands—All come to this!—The hearts

That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do discount, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark'd,
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them
home;

Whose bosom was my circuit, my chief end,
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose
Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.—
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, those spells! Avaunt.
Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?
Ant. Vainish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blessèd Cæsar's triumph. Let him take thee,
And host thee up to the shouting plebeians:
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex; most monster-like, be shown
For proud'st diminutives, to dolls; and let Patient Octavius plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. [Exit Cleo.] 'Tis well
thou'rt gone,

If it be well to live: But better 'twere
Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!
The shirt of Nessus is upon me: I teach me,
Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage;
Let me lodge Lichas on the horns of the moon;
And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,

Sabdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
'Tis the Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Under this plot: she dies for't.—Eros, ho! [Exit.]

SCENE XI. — Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Help me, my woman! O, he is more mad
Than I believe for his shield; the bow of Thebes
Was never so embow'd.

Charm. To the monument:
There lock yourself, and send him word you are
dead.

The soul and body live not more in parting,
Than greatness grows in.

Obtain no jot, I charge thee: write to him
(I will subscribe) gentle adieus, and greetings:
Say, that I wish he never find more cause
To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men:—Eros, despatch.
[Exit Eros.]

SCENE VI. — Caesar's Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter Caesar, with Agrippa, Enobarbus, and others.

Caes. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight.
Thou wilt it, Antony be took alive;
Make it so known.

Agg. Caesar, I shall. [Exit Agrippa.]
Caes. The time of universal peace is near:
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd
Shall bear the olive freely. [world]

Enter a Messenger.
Antony

Is come into the field.
Caes. Go, charge Agrippa:
Plant those that have revolted in the van.
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Enter Caesar and his Train.]
Eros. Alexas did revolt: and went to Jewry.
On affairs of Antony; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Caesar,
And leave his master Antony: for this pains,
Caesar hath hang'd him. Candians and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill;
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Caesar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with his bounty overplus: The messenger
's come on my guard: and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.

Eros. I give it you.
Sold. Mock me not, Enobarbus.
I tell you true: Best that you sa'd the bringer
Out of the host; I must attend mine office.
Or would have done't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove. [Exit Soldier.]

Eros. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how would'st thou have paid
My better service, when my temperate heart:
Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my
If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought: but thought will do't,
I feel.

I fight against thee!—No: I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. — Field of Battle between the Camps.

Alarm. Drums and trumpets. Enter Agrippa, and others.

Agg. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far;
Caesar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exit.]

Alarm. Enter Antony and Scarus, wounded.

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!

Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heels.

Ant. Thou bleed'st as pale

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.
Ant. They do retire.
Scar. We'll beat 'em into besch-holes; I have Room for six scotches more. [ret]

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves

For a fair victory.
Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind;
'Tis sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy spritely comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after. [Exit.]

SCENE VIII. — Under the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarm. Enter Antony, marching; Scarus, and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp; Run one before.

And let the queen know of our guests.—To-morrow,
Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood
That has to day escaped. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you; and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as it had been Each man's like mine; you have shown all Hectors.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; what they with joyful tears
Wash the concealm't from your wounds, and kiss
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand;
[To Scarus.]

Enter Cleopatra, attended.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee.—(O thou day o'the
world,

Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords!
O infinite virtue! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale,
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl!
though grey

Do something mingle with our brown; yet have we

A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get soul for soul of youth. Behold this man;
Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand;—
Kiss it, my warrior:—He hath fought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Deserv'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold; it was a king's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled
Like holy Phobus' car.—Give me thy hand;
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our hawk'd targets like the men that owe
them:

Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together;
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines;
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds
together.

Applauding our approach. [Exit.]

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!
Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!
Grace grow where these drops fall! My hearty
friends.
You take me in too dolorous a sense:
I make to you for your comfort: did desire you
To burn this night with torches: Know, my hearts,
I hope well of to-morrow: and will lead you,
Where rather I'll expect victorious life,
Than death and honour. Let's to supper: come,
And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Two Soldiers, to their Guard.

1 Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow is the day. [well.]
2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?
1 Sold. Nothing: What news?
2 Sold. Belike, 'tis but a rumour:
Good night to you. [Exeunt.]
1 Sold. Well, sir, good night.

Enter Two other Soldiers.

2 Sold. Soldiers,
Have careful watch.
3 Sold. And you: Good night, good night.
[The first two place themselves at their posts.]
4 Sold. Here we: [they take their posts.] and if to-morrow
Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up.
3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,
And full of purpose.

[Music of hurstboys under the stage.]
4 Sold. Peace, what noise? List, list!
2 Sold. Hark!
1 Sold. Musick 't'he air.
3 Sold. Under the earth.
4 Sold. It signifies well,
Doesn't not!
3 Sold. No.
1 Sold. Peace, I say. What should this mean? [low'd.]
2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony
Now leaves him.
1 Sold. Walk: let's see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do.
[They advance to another post.]
2 Sold. How now, masters?
1 Sold. How now!
How now! do you hear this?
[Several speaking together.]
1 Sold. Ay: let's not strange?
3 Sold. Is you hear, masters? do you hear?
1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter:
let's see how 't will give off.
[Several speaking.] Content: 'Tis strange.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. — The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony and Cleopatra; Charmian, and others, attending.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!
Cleo. Sleep a little.
Ant. No, my chuck. — Eros, come; mine armour, Eros!

Enter Eros with armour.
Come, my good fellow, put these iron on: —

If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her. — Come.
Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.
What's this? Ah, let's be, let's be! thou art
Ant. The armourer of my heart: — False, false! this, this.
Cleo. South, is, I'll help: Thus it must be.
Ant. Well, well!
We shall thrive now. — Seest thou, my good fellow!
Go, put on thy defences.
Eros. Briefly, sir.
Cleo. Is not this buckled well?
Ant. Rarely, rarely!
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our repose, shall hear a storm. —
Thou fumbliest, Eros: and my queen's a squire
More tight at this, than thou: Despatch. — O love,
That thou could'st see my wars to-day, and know'st
The royal occupation! thou should'st see Enter an Officer, armed.

A workman isn't — Good morrow to thee; welcome:
Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge:
To business that we love, we rise betime,
And go to it with delight.
1 Off. A thousand, sir,
Early though it be, have on their riveted trims.
And at the port expect you.
[Shout. Trumpets. Flourish.]

Enter other Officers, and Soldiers.

2 Off. The morn is fair — Good morrow, general.
All. Good morrow, general!
Ant. 'Tis well blown, iads.
This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betime. —
So, so: come, give me that: this way; well said.
Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me:
This is a soldier's kiss: rebukable, [Kisses her.]
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On more mechanical compliment: I'll leave thee
Now, like a man of steel. — You, that will fight,
Follow me close: I'll bring you to't. — Adieu.
[Exeunt Antony, Eros, Officers, and Soldiers.]
Chor. Please you, retire to your chamber!
Cleo. Lead me.
He goes forth gallantly. That he and Caesar might Determine this great war in single fight!
Then, Antony. — But now, — Well, on. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. — Antony's Camp near Alexandria.

Trumpets sound. Enter Antony and Eros; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony! [prevail'd]
Ant. 'Would, thou and those thy scars had once
To make me fight at land!
Sold. Had'st thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels
Ant. Who's gone this morning?
Sold. Who?
One ever near thee: Call for Eupharbus.
He shall not hear thee: or from Caesar's camp
Say, I am none of thine.
Ant. What say'st thou?
Sold. Sir!
He is with Caesar.
Eros. Sir, his chests and treasures
He has not with him.
Ant. Is he gone?
Sold. Most certain
Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after: do it:

Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quit me: Urge it thou:
Hence, with thy stripes, begone. [Exit Thyreus.]
Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrene moon
Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.
Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that ties his points!

Cleo. Not know me yet?
Ant. Cold-hearted toward me!

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,
From my cold heart let heaven send hail,
And poison it in the source; and the first stone
Drop in my neck: as it determines, so
Dissolve my life! The next Casarion smite!
I'll, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the discarding of this polluted storm,
Lie graveless; till the flies and gnats of Nile
Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.
Caesar sits down in Alexandria: where
I will oppose his fate. Our force by land Hath nobly bled: our sever'd navy too [like]
Have knit again, and fleet, thrust'ning most sea-
Where hast thou been, my heart!—Dost thou hear, lady?

If from the field I shall return once more
To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
I and my sword will earn our chronicle;
There is hope in it yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!
Ant. I will be treble-sweev'd, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously for when mine hours
Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
Of me for jests; but now, I'll set my teeth,
And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
Let's have some other gaudy night: call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birth-day:
I had thought, to have held it poor; but, since
Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra. [My lord]
Ant. We'll yet do well.
Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.
Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and to-night
I'll force

The wine peep through their scars.—Come on,
my queen;
There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight,
I'll make death love me; for I will contend
Even with his pestilent anythe.

[Exeunt Antony, Cleopatra, and Attendants.]
Eno. Now he'll out-stare the lightning. To be furious,

Is, to be frighted out of fear; and in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge; and I see still,
A diminution in our captain's brain
Restores his heart: When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
Some way to leave him [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Caesar's Camp at Alexandria.

*Enter Cressa, reading a letter; Agrippa, Mecenas,
and others.*

Caes. He calls me boy; and chides, as he had power

To beat me out of Egypt: my messenger
He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal combat.

Cesar to Antony: Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die; mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Caesar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he's heated
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make hoot of his distraction: Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Caes. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight:—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it be done;
And feast the army: we have store to do't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony, Cleopatra, Enochirius, Charmian, Irus, Alexas, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better
fortune,

He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood.
Shall make it live again. Won't thou fight well?

Eno. I'll strike; and cry, Take all!

Ant. Well said; come on.—
Call forth my household servants; let's to-night

Enter Servants.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest,—so hast thou;
And thou,—and thou,—and thou,—you have serv'd me well.

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. What means this?
Eno. 'Tis one of those odd tricks, which now shows [Aside.]

Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

I wish, I could be made so many men;
And all of you clapp'd up together in An Antony; that I might do you service,
So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid!
Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to
night:

Scant not my cups; and make as much of me,
As when mine empire was your fellow's.
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he mean?
Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;

May be, it is the period of your duty.
Haply, you shall not see me more; or if
A mangled shadow; perchance, to-morrow
You'll serve another master. I look on you,
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,
I turn you not away; but, like a master:
Marr'd to your good service, stay till death:
Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield you for't.

Eno. What mean you, sir,

To give them this discomfort? Look, they weep;
And I, an ass, am on my knees, for shame,
To transform us not to wretches.

Does conquer him that did his master conquer
And earns a place i' the story.

Enter Thyrus.

Cleo. Caesar's will!

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends: say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Cleo. He needs as many, sir, as Caesar has;
Or needs not us. If Caesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know,
Whome he is, we are: and that's, Caesar's.

Thyr. So—
Thus then, thou most renown'd; Caesar en-treats,

Not to consider in what case thou stand'st,
Further than he is Caesar.

Cleo. Go on: Right royal.

Thyr. He knows, that you embrace not An-
tony

As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O!

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he

Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows

What is most right: Mine honour was not yielded,

But conquer'd merely.

Cleo. To be sure of that,

[Aside.] I will ask Antony.—Sir, sir, thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.

Thyr. Shall I say to Caesar

What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desir'd to give. It much would please
him.

That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud.
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyrus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,

Say to great Caesar this.—In disputation
I kiss his conqu'ring hand: tell him, I am prompt
To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel:
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may stake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Caesar's father

OK, when he hath mov'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!—
What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One, that but performs
The bidding of the fairest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Cleo. You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there:—Ay, you kite!—Now gods and devils!

Authority melts from me; Of late, when I cry'd, ho!

Like boys unto a muzz, kings would start forth,
And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am

Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip
him.

Cleo. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Mourn and starve!

Whip him:—Were't twenty of the greatest tribularies

That do acknowledge Caesar, should I find them
So spongy with the hand of she here, (What's her
name,

Since she was Cleopatra?)—Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy: Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony.—

Ant. Tug him away: being whipp'd,

Bring him again:—This Jack of Caesar's shall Bear us an errand to him—

[Exeunt Attendants with Thyrus]

You were half blasted ere I knew you:—Ha!
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome.

Fortune the gentiax of a lawful race,

And by a gem of woman, to be abus'd!

By one that looks on feeders!

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a huggler ever:—
But when we in our viciousness grow hard,
(O misery on't!) the wise gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments:
make us

Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel, cold upon Dead Caesar's trencher: nay, you were a fragment

Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours, Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out:—For, I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you! be familiar with
My playfellow, your hand: this kingly seal,
And plighting of hach hearts!—O, that I were
Upon the hill of Basin, to outstar
The horned herd! for I have savage cause;
And to proclaim it civilly, were like
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank
For being yare about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter Attendants, with Thyrus.

1 Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cry'd he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Att. He did ask favour.
Ant. If that thy father live, let him reward
Thou wast not made his daughter: and be thou
sorry

To follow Caesar in his triumph, since Thou hast been whipp'd for following him henceforth,

The white hand of a lady fever thee.
Shake thou to look on't.—Get thee back to Caesar.

Tell him thy entertainment: Look, thou say,
He makes me angry with him: for he seems
Proud and disdainful; harping on what I am;
Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry,
And at this time most easy 'tis to do't:

When my good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abism of hell. If he mislike
My speech, and what is done: tell him, he has

Bes.—Most noble sir, arise: the queen approaches:
Her head's declined, and death will seize her, but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA, Act III., Scene xi.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well,
My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings.
And thou should'st tow me after: O'er my spirit
Thy full supremacy thou knew'st; and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon.
Ant. Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lowness: who
With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd.

Making, and marring fortunes. You did know,
How much you were my conqueror; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all causes.

Cleo. O pardon, pardon.
Ant. Fall not a tear, I say: one of them rates
All that is won and lost: Give me a kiss:
Even this repays me.—We sent our school-
master:
Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead:—
Some wine, within there, and our viands:—Fortutune knows,
We scorn her most, when most she offers blows.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—Cæsar's Camp, in Egypt.

Enter Cæsar, Dolabella, Thyreus, and others.
Cæs. Let him appear that's come from Antony.—

Know you him?
Dol. Cæsar, 'tis his schoolmaster:
An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing,
Which had superfluous kings for messengers,
Not many moons gone by.

Enter Euphronius.

Cæs. Approach, and speak.
Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As in the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To the grand sea.

Cæs. Be it so: Declare thine office.
Eup. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee,
and

Requires to live in Egypt: which not granted,
He lessens his requests; and to thee sues
To let him breathe between the heavens and earth.

A private man in Athens: This for him.
Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness:
Submits her to thy night; and of thee craves
The circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs.
Now hazarded to thy grace.

Cæs. For Antony,
I have no ears to his request. The queen
Of audience, nor desire, shall fail: so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,
Or take his life there: This if she perform,
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Eup. Fortune pursue thee!

Cæs. Bring him through the bands.
[Exit Euphronius.]
To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: Despatch;
From Antony win Cleopatra: promise.

[To Thyreus.]
And in our name, what she requires; add more,
From thine invention, offers: women are not,
In their best fortunes, strong; but want will perjure

The near-touch'd vestal: Try thy cunning, Thyreus,

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we
Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cæsar, I go.
Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw,
And what thou think'st his very action speaks
In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cæsar, I shall.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE XI.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.

Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his wife
Lord of his reason. What although you fled From that great face of war, whose several rages

Frighted each other? why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship: at such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The mered question: 'Twas a shame no less Than was his loss, to course your flying flags
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Prythee, peace.

Enter Antony, with Euphronius.

Ant. Is this his answer?

Eup. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen

Shall then have courtesy, so she will yield

Us up.

Eup. He says so.

Ant. Let her know it.—

To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again: Tell him, he wears the rose

Of youth upon him: from which, the world should note

Something particular: his coin, ships, legions,
May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail

Under the service of a child, as soon

As i' the command of Cæsar: I dare him therefore

To lay his gay companions apart,

And answer me declin'd, sword against sword,

Ourselves alone: I'll write it; follow me.

[Exeunt Antony and Euphronius.]

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Cæsar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show

Against a sword.—I see, men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward

To draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,

Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will Answer his emptiness!—Cæsar, thou hast sub-du'd

His judgment too. [End]

Enter an Attendant.

A messenger from Cæsar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony?—See, my women!

Against the blown rose may they stop their noses,
That kneel'd unto the buda.—Admit him, sir.

Eno. Mine honesty and I begin to square

The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith mere folly.—Yet, he that can endure

To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,

Ten. My lord.
Cam. Strike not by land; keep whole;
Provoke not battle, till we've done at sea.
Do not exceed the prescript of this scroll:
Our fortune lies upon this jump. [Exeunt.]

Enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on you side o' the hill,
In eye of Caesar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.]

Enter Canidius, marching with his land army one way over the stage; and Taurus, the Lieutenant of Caesar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight.

Alarum. Re-enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold
no longer:
The Antoniad, the Egyptian admiral,
With all their sixty, fly, and turn the rudder;
To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarus.

Scar. Gods, and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?
Scar. The greater cattle of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Evo. How appears the fight?
Scar. On our side like the token'd pestilence,
Where death is sure. You' rebuld-rid nag of Whom Egypt,
leagery o'erlake! i' the midst o' the fight,—

When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,
The brise upon her, like a cow in June,
Moo'st snail, and flies.

Evo. That I beheld: mine eyes
Dial sicken at the sight on't, and could not Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being loof'd,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and like a doting mallard,

Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Did violate so itself

Evo. Alack, alack!

Enter Canidius.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks must lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
O, he has given example for our flight,
Met cruelly, by his own.

Evo. Ay, his you thereabouts! Why then, good night [Aside.]

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easy to't; and there I will attend
What further comes.

Can. To Caesar will I render
My legions, and my horse; six kings already
Show us the way of yielding.

Evo. I'll yet follow
The wound'd chance of Antony, though my Reason
Sets in the wind against me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Antony and Attendants.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon't,
It is ashan'd to bear me!—Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever:—I have a ship
Laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly,
And make your peace with Caesar.

Att. Fly! not we,
Ant. I have fed myself; and have instructed cowards
To run, and show their shoulders—Friends, be gone;

I have myself resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:
My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—O,
I follow'd that I blush to look upon:
My very hairs do mutiny; for the white
Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them
For fear and doting.—Friends, be gone; you shall

Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of loathness: take the hint
Which my despair proclaims; let that be left
Which leaves itself: to the sea side straight-
way;

I will possess you of that ship and treasure.
Leave me, I pray, a little: 'pray you now:—
Nay, do so; for, indeed, I've lost command.
'Therefore I pray you:—I'll see you by and by.

[She descends.]

Enter Eros and Cleopatra, led by Charmian and Irma.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him:—Comfort
him.

Irma. Du, most dear queen.

Chor. Do! Why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit down: O Jono!

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Irma. See you here, sir!

Ant. O fy, fy, fy.

Chor. Madam,—

Irma. Madam: O good empress!—

Eros. Sir, sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes:—He, at Philippi, kept
His sword even like a dancer; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I,
'That the mad Brutus ended: he alone
Dealt on leutenantry, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war: Yet now—No matter.

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Irma. Go to him, madam, speak to him;

He is unqualitied with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me.—O!

Eros. Must noble sir, arise; the queen a-prunes;

Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her; but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation;

A most unobedient swerving

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt! See,
How I convey my shame out of time eyes
By looking back on what I have left behind
'Stroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord!
Forgive my fearful snail! I little thought,
You would have follow'd.

Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome:
Nothing more dear to me. You are ahn'd
Beyond the mark of thought: and the high gods,
To do you justice, make them ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Best of comfort;
And ever welcome to us.

Ant. Welcome, dear madam.
Each heart in Rome does love and pity you.
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noises it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?
Ans. Most certain. Sister, welcome: Pray
you,
Be ever known to patience: My dearest sister!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. — Antony's Camp, near to the Promontory of Actium.

Enter Cleopatra and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.
Ans. But, why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast forspoke my being in these
And say'st, it is not fit.

Ans. Well, is it, is it?
Cleo. Is't not! Denounce against us, why should not we
Be there in person?

Ans. [Aside] Well, I could reply:—
If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely lost; the mares would bear

A soldier, and his horse. What is't you say?
Ans. Your presence needs must puzzle An-
tony:

Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his time,
What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity: and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus an eunuch, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear i'th war.

And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Ans. Nay, I have done:
Here comes the emperor.

Enter Antony and Canidius.

Ant. Is't not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarvntum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in 'Toryne!—You have heard on't, sweet!

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Canidius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?
Ans. Why will my lord do so?

Ans. For he dares us to't.
Cleo. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.
Ans. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia.
Where Caesar fought with Pompey: But these offers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off.
And so should you.

Ans. Your ships are not well mann'd:
Your mariners are muleteers, rascals, people
Ingru'd by swift impress; in Caesar's fleet
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought:
Their ships are yare—yours, heavy. No diagram
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.
Ans. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land:
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance: and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.
Cleo. I have sixty sails, Caesar none better.
Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the head of Actium

Beat the approaching Caesar. But if we fail,

Enter a Messenger.

We then can do't at land.—Thy business?
Mess. The news is true, my lord: he is descried;
Caesar has taken 'Toryne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible:
Strange, that his power should be—Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse:—We'll to our ship:

Enter a Soldier.

Away, my Thetis!—How now, worthy soldier?
Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you remember
This sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,

And the Phoenicians, go a ducking; we
Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away
[Exeunt Antony, Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.]

Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am i'th right.
Ans. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows

Not in the power on't: So our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?
Ans. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Junius,
Publius, and Celsus, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Caesar's Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions, as Besu'd all spies.

Ans. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?
Sold. They say, one Taurus.
Ans. Well, I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls for Canidius Ans. With news the time's with labour: and throes forth.
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. — A Plain near Actium.

Enter Caesar, Taurus, Officers, and others.
Ans. Taurus,—

SCENE V.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter Enobarbus and Eros, meeting.

Ero. How now, friend Eros?

Ero. There's strange news come, sir.

Ero. What, man?

Eros. Caesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Ero. This is old: What is the success?

Eros. Caesar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry; would not let him partake in the glory of the action; and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him: So the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confine.

Ero. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no more;

And throw between them all the fond thou hast, They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurns

The rust that lies before him; cries, Fool, Lepidus!

And threats the throat of that his officer. That murder'd Pompey.

Ero. Our great navy's rigged.

Eros. For Italy, and Caesar. More, Domitius; My lord desires you presently: my news I might have told hereafter.

Ero. 'Twill be naught;

But let it be—Bring me to Antony. [Exit.

Eros. Come, sir.

SCENE VI.—Rome. A Room in Caesar's House.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas.

Ca. Contemning Rome, he has done all this; And more;

In Alexandria—here's the manner of it,—I'll the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd, Cleopatra and herself in chairs of gold Were publicly enthron'd: at the feet, sat Cæsarion, whom they call my father's son; And all the unlawful issue, that their lust Bore then hath made between them. Unto her He gave the 'Mabishment of Egypt; made her Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the publick eye?

Ca. I'll the common show-place, where they exercise.

His sons he there proclaim'd. The kings of kings;

Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia, He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia: His In the habitation of the goddess Isis That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience As 'twas reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus inform'd.

Ag. Who queens with his insolence

Already, will their good thoughts call from him.

Ca. The people know it; and have now receiv'd

His accusations.

Ag. Whom does he accuse?

Ca. Caesar: and that, having in Sicily Seiz'd Pompeius son'd, we had not rat'd him His part of the job: then does he say, he lent me

Some clappnet unrat'd: lastly, he frets,

That Lepidus of the triumvirate Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain All his revenues.

Ag. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Ca. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone.

I've told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel;

That he his high authority abus'd,

And did deserve his change: for what I've conquer'd,

I grant him part: but then, in his Armenia,

And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I

Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Ca. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter Octavia.

Oct. Hail, Caesar, and my lord! hail, most dear

Caesar!

Ca. That ever I should call thee, most-away!

Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Ca. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You come not

Like Caesar's sister: The wife of Antony

Should have an army for an usher, and

The neighs of horse to tell of her approach,

Long ere she did appear: the trees by the way,

Should have borne use; and expectation faint'd,

Longing for what it had not: nay, the dust

Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,

Rais'd by your populous troops: But you are

come

A market-maid to Rome: and have prevented

The onset of our love, which, left unshown,

Is often left unlov'd: we should have met you

By an augur and laid; supplying every stage

With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it

On my free-will. My lord, Mark Antony,

Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted

My griev'd ear withal: whereon, I begg'd

His pardon for return.

Ca. Which soon he granted,

Being an obstruct 'tween his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord.

Ca. I have eyes upon him,

And his affairs come to me on the wind.

Where is he now?

Oct. My lord, in Athens.

Ca. No, my most wretched sister; Cleopatra Hath suck'd him to her. He hath given his empires

Up to a whore; who now are levying

The kings of the earth for war: he hath assembled

Bocchus, the king of Libya; Archelaus,

Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, king

Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas;

King Mithridates of Armenia; king of Pont;

Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king

Of Comagene; Polemon and Amantius,

The kings of Mede, and Lycosia, with a

More larger list of scepters.

Oct. Ah me, most wretched,

That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,

That do afflict each other!

Ca. Welcome hither:

Your letters did withhold our breaking forth;

Till we perceiv'd, both how you were wrong'd,

And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart:

Be you not troubled with the time, which drives

O'er your content these strict necessities;

But let determin'd things to destiny

You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come;
I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go.
And give you to the gods.

Cleo. Adieu; be happy!
Cap. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!

Cleo. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses Octavia.]
Ant. Farewell!

[Trumpets sound. Exeunt]

SCENE III. — Alexandria. A Room in the Palace

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?

Alex. Half afeard to come

Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, sir.

Enter a Messenger.

Alex. Good majesty.
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: But how! when Antony is gone Through whom I might command it.—Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious majesty,—

Cleo. Didst thou behold
Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.

Cleo. Where?

Mess. Madam, in Rome
I look'd her in the face; and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mess. She is not, madam.

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongued, or low?

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is low-voiced.

Cleo. That's not so good:—he cannot like her long.

Cher. Like her? O Isis! 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian; dull of tongue, and dwarfish!—

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look't on majesty.

Mess. She creeps;
Her motion and her station are as one:

She shows a body rather than a life;
A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?

Mess. Or I have no observance.

Cher. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing.
I do perceiv't:—There's nothing in her yet:—
The fellow has good judgment.

Cher. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I prythee.

Mess. Madam.

She was a widow.

Cleo. Widow?—Charmian, hark.

Mess. And I do think she's thirty.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? Is't long, or round?

Mess. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part too.
They are foolish that are so.—Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam: And her forehead is as low

As she would wish it.

Cleo. There is gold for thee.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—
I will employ thee back again; I find thee
Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready:
Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit Messenger.]

Cher. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repeat me much,
That so I hurry'd him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.

Cher. O nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Cher. Hath he seen majesty? Is it else defend,
And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good Charmian:

But 'tis no matter: thou shalt bring him to me
Where I will write: All may be well enough.

Cher. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. — Athens. A Room in Antony's House.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import,—but he hath wag'd
New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read it

To public ear:
Spoke scantly of me: when perforce he could not

But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly.
He vented them; most narrow measure lest me:
When the heart's hint was given him, he not took't,
Or did it from his teeth.

Oct. O my good lord,
Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all! A move unpry lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Frying for both parts;

And this good gods will work me presently.
When I shall pray, O, bless my lord and husband!

Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
O, bless my brother! Husband win, win brother,
Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway.

"I wixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself: better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested, Yourself shall go between us: The mean time,
lady,

I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall stain your brother; Make your soonest
haste;

So your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.
The Jove of power make me, most weak, most weak,

Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain wou'd
As if the world should cleave, and that sla's
men

Should adder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,

Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Providing you sing;

Choose your own company, and command what
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.]

Men. No, to my cabin.—
These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!— let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell
To these great fellows: Sound, and be hang'd, sound out.

[A flourish of trumpets, with drums.]
Men. Ho, says 'a!—There's my cap.
Eco. Ho!—noble captain!
Come. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Plain in Syria.

Enter Ventidius, as after conquest, with Silius, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead body of Paccorus borne before him.

Ven. Now darting Parthia, art thou struck:
and now

Pleas'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death
Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body
Before our army: Thy Paccorus, Oracles,
Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Nob. Noble Ventidius,
Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow; spar through Media.

Mammotamus, and the sheilters whither
The routed fly: so thy grand captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius,
I've done enough: A lower place, note well,
May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius;
Better leave undone, than by our deed acquire
Too high a fame, when him we serve's away.
Caesar, and Antony, have ever won
More in their officers than persons: Scævus,
One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour.
Who does it the wars more than his captain can,
Becomes his captain's captain: and ambition,
The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss,
Than gain, which darkens him.
I could do more to do Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him; and in his offence
Should my performance perish.

Nob. Thou hast, Ventidius,
That without which a soldier, and his sword,
Grants scarce distinction: Thou wilt write to Antony?

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected;
How, with his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' the field.

Nob. Where is he now?
Ven. He peripeth to Athens: whither with what haste

The weight we must convey with us will permit,
We shall appear before him—On, there; pass along. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. An Ante-Chamber in Caesar's House.

Enter Agrippa, and Enobarbus meeting.

Agp. What, are the brothers parted?
Eco. They have despatch'd with Pompey, he is gone;
The other three are seeling. Octavia weeps
To part from Rome: Caesar is sad; and Lepidus.

Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled
With the green sickness.

Agp. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.
Eco. A very fine one: O, how he loves Caesar!
Agp. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark An-
tony!
Eco. Caesar! Why he's the Jupiter of men.
Agp. What's Antony! The god of Jupiter.
Eco. Spake you of Caesar? How! the Pompeyreil!

Agp. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!
Eco. Would you praise Caesar, say,—Caesar:— go no further. [Praises.]

Agp. Indeed, he ply'd them both with excellent
Eco. But he loves Caesar best;—Yet he loves Antony: [cannot]

Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets,
Think, speak, read, write, sing, number, ho, his love
To Antony. But as for Caesar,
Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agp. Both he loves.
Eco. They are his sharers, and he their beetle.
So,— [Trumpets.]

This is to horses—Adieu, noble Agrippa. [well.]
Agp. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, and Octavia.

Ant. No further, sir.
Caes. You take from us a great part of myself;
Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest bond

Shall pass on thy approval.—Most noble Antony,
Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
The fortress of it: for better might we
Have lov'd without this mean, if on both parts
This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended
In your distress.
Caes. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find,
Though you be therein curious, the least cause
For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep you,
And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends!
We will here part.

Caes. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Oct. My noble brother!—
Ant. The April's in her eyes: It is love's spring,
And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.

Oct. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—Caes. What.

Octavia!
Oct. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can [feather,]
Her heart inform her tongue: the swan's down
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
And neither way inclines.

Eco. Will Caesar weep? [Aside to Agrippa.]
Agp. He has a cloud in's face.
Eco. He were the worse for that, were he a
So is he, being a man.

Agp. Why, Enobarbus?
When Antony found Julius Caesar dead,
He cried almost to roaring: and he wept,
When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eco. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound, he wail'd:
Believe it, till I weep too.

Caes. No, sweet Octavia,

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Ene. Not till you have slept; I fear me, you'll be in, till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly. I have heard the Ptolemy pyramids are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. Pompey, a word. [Aside.]

Pom. Say in mine ear: what is't?

Men. Forake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain. [Aside.]

And hear me speak a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon.—

This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth: it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it: and the elements once out of it, it transmutates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Ces. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very escure.

Pom. [To Menas, aside.] Go, hang, sir, hang!

[Tell me of that I away!]

Do as I bid you—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me.

Rise from thy stool. [Aside.]

Pom. I think, thou'rt mad. The matter!

[Rises, and walks aside.]

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith:

What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus,

Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Will thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Will thou be lord of the whole world?

That's twice!

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, and,

Although you think me poor, I am the man

Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove:

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,

Is thine, if thou wilt have't.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors,

Are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable;

And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:

All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou should'st have done,

And not have spoke on't! In me, 'tis villany;

In thee, it had been good service. Thou must know,

'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour:

Mine honour. It. Repent, that e'er thy tongue

Hath on betray'd things act: Being done unknown,

I should have found it afterwards well done;

But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. For this. [Aside.]

I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more.—

Who seeks, and will not take, when once it's offer'd.

Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus.

Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge it for him,

Pompey.

Ene. Here's to thee, Menas. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill, till the cup be hid.

Ene. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off Lepidus.]

Men. Why?

Ene. He hears

The third part of the world, man. See'st not?

Men. The third part then is drunk: 'Would it were all!

That it might go on wheels!

Ene. Drink thou; increase the reels.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrine feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels, ho!

Here is to Caesar.

Ces. I could well forbear it.

It's monstrous labour, when I wash my brain,

And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Ces. Passes it, I'll make answer: but I had rather fast.

From all four days, than drink so much in one.

Ene. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Antony.]

Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanale,

And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Let's ha't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let us all take hands;

'Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our senses

In soft and delicate Lethe.

Ene. All take hands.—

Make battery to our ears with the loud music:—

The while, I'll place you: Then the boy shall sing:

The holding every man shall bear, as loud

As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.]

SONG.

Come, thou monarch of the wine,

Pompey Bacchus, with pink eyes

In thy vats our currs be dross'd;

With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd;

Cup us, till the world go round!

Cup us, till the world go round!

Ces. What would you more?—Pompey, good night. Good brother,

Let me request you off: our graver business

Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part;

You see, we've burnt our cheeks: strong Enobarbus

Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue

Splits what it speaks: the wild disports hath almost Antick'd us all. What needs more words? Good

night.—

Good Antony, your hand.

Pom. I'll try you o' the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O, Antony,

You have my father's house,—But what! we are

friends:

Come, down into the boat.

Ene. Take heed you fall not.—

[Exeunt Pompey, Caesar, Antony, and Attendants.]

Menas, I'll not on shore.

I crave, our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Ces. That's the next to do.

Pom. We'll feast each other, ere we part; and let us

Draw lots, who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the lot; but, first,
Or bid, your fine Egyptian cookery
Shall have the same. I've heard, that Julius

Cesar
Grew fat with feasting these.

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard:—
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—
Eso. No more of that:—He did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?

Eso. A certain queen to Caesar in a mattress.
Pom. I know thee now; how far's thou soldier?

Eso. Well;

And well am like to do; for, I perceive,
Your feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand;
I never tasted thee: I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eso. Sir,
I never lov'd you much; but I have prais'd you,
When you have well deserv'd ten times as much
As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.

Ah, my gallier, I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Ces. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom. Come.

(Exeunt Pompey, Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, Soldiers, and Attendants.)
Mrs. Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—(Aside.)—You and I have known, sir.

Eso. At sea, I think.

Mrs. We have, sir.
Eso. You have dipp'd well by water.

Mrs. And you by land.

Eso. I will praise any man that will praise me;
though it cannot be denied what I have done by
land.

Mrs. Nor what I have done by water.
Eso. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Mrs. And you by land.

Eso. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Mends: if our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Mrs. All men's faces are true, whatsoever their hands are.

Eso. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Mrs. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eso. We came hither to fight with you.

Mrs. For my part, I am sorry it is turn'd to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his sorrows.

Eso. If he do, sure, he cannot weep it back
again.

Mrs. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here: Pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eso. Caesar's sister is call'd Octavia.

Mrs. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius
Marcellus.

Eso. But she is now the wife of Marcus An-tonius.

Mrs. Pray you, sir—

Eso. 'Tis true.

Mrs. Then is Caesar, and he, for ever knit together.

Eso. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Mrs. I think, the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Eso. I think so too. But you shall find, the band that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Mrs. Who would not have his wife so?

Eso. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish-again: then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Caesar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is; he married but his occasion here.

Mrs. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you abound? I have a health for you.

Eso. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt.

Mrs. Come; let's away. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VII.—On board Pompey's Galley, lying near Misenum.

Musick. Enter Two or Three Servants, with a banquet.

1 Serv. Here they'll be, man: Some o' their plants are ill-rooted already, the least wind'll the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drink almsdrink.

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, so more; reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between himself and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, thus it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service, as a partizan I could not beware.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disfigure the cheeks.

A sennet sound'd. Enter Caesar, Antony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Mecenas, Enobarbus, Menedemus, with other captains.

Ant. Thus do they, sir: [To Caesar.] They take the flow o' the Nile

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know,
By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth.

Or famine, follow: The higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises; as it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ag. Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit, and some wine—A health to Lepi-dus.

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself:
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents 'scape not the thunder-bolt.—

Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again;
Though I am mad, I will not bite him!—Call.

Char. He is afraid to come.
Cleo. I will not hurt him!—
These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause—Come hither, sir.

Re-enter Messenger.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news: Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worse than I do,
If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would, thou didst;
So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made
A eastern fur seal'd snakes! Go, get thee hence:
Hast thou Narcissus in thy face, to see
Thou would'st appear most ugly. He is married!

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. Take no offence, that I would not offend
you.

To punish me for what you make me do,
Seems much unequal: He's married to Octavia.

Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knave of
thee.
That art not!—What! thou'rt sure of't!—Get thee hence:

The merchandises which thou hast brought from
Rome,
Are all too dear for me; lie they upon thy hand,
And be undone by 'em!

Char. Good your highness, patience.
Cleo. In praising Antony, I have disprais'd
Cæsar.

Char. Many times, madam.
Cleo. I am paid for't now.

Lend me from hence,
I faint: O Iras, Charmian,—'Tis no matter:—
Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him
Report the feature of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination; let him not leave out
The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.

Let him for ever go:—Let him not:—Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
'Tother way he's a Mars:—Bid you Alexas
(To Mardian).

Bring me word, how tall she is.—Pity me, Char-mian,
But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.

(Exeunt.)

SCENE VI.—Near Misenum.

Enter Pompey and Menas, at one side, with drum and trumpet; at another, Cæsar, Lepidus, Antony, Enobarbus, Mecænas, with Soldiers marching.

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine
And we shall talk before we fight.

Cæs. Most meet,
That first we come to words; and therefore have we

Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know
If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword:
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth.
That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all thrive,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods—I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son, and freeds: since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was it,
That saw'd pale Cassius to o'erspire? And what Made the all-honour'd, honest, Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, cooptiers of beauteous
freedom,

To drench the Capitol: but that they would Have one man but a man! And that is it,
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden
The anger'd ocean fumes; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratitude that despicable Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time.
Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails,
We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou
know'st

How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pom. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house;
But, since the cockles bulks not for himself,
Remain in't, as thou may'st.

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us,
(For this is from the present,) how you take
The offers we have sent you.

Cæs. There's the point.
Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embrac'd.

Cæs. And what may follow,
To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Bid all the sea of praies; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: This greed upon,
To part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our large undinted.

Cæs. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.
Pom. Know then,
I came before you here, a man prepar'd
To take this offer: But Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience:—Though I kiss
The praise of it by telling, you must know,
When Cæsar and your brothers were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily, and did find
Her welcome freely.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks,
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand:
I did not think, sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds i' the east are soft; and thanks to you,
That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither;
For I have gain'd by it.

Cæs. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon me. Well, I know not
What counts hank fortune casts upon my face;
But in my bosom shall she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.
Pom. I hope so, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed

Is all afraid to govern thee near him;

But, he away, 'tis so!.

Ant. Get thee gone:
Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him:—
(Exit Soothsayer.)

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap,
He hath spoken true: The very dice obey him;
And, in our sports, my better cunning fante
Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speeds;
His rooks do win the battle still of mine.
When it is all to nought: and his quans ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds: I will to Egypt:
And though I make this marriage for my peace.

Enter Ventidius.

[The east my pleasure lies:—O, come, Ventidius.
You must to Parthia; your commission's ready:
Follow me, and receive it. (Exeunt.)]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Street.

Enter Lepidus, Meneas, and Agrippa.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you hasten

Your generals after. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell

Mec. We shall.
As I conceive the journey, be at mount
Before you, Lepidus

Lep. Your way is shorter,
My purposes do draw me much about;
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec. Ant. Sir, good success!
Lep. Farewell. (Exeunt.)

SCENE V.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas
Cleo. Give me some music; music, merrily
Of us that trade in love
Attend. The music, ho:

Enter Mardian.

Cleo. Let it alone: let us to billiards:
Come, Charmian

Chor. My arm is more, best play with Mardian.
Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd,
As with a woman:—Come, you'll play with me, sir!

Mec. As well as I can, madam.
Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though it come too short,

The actor may plead pardon: I'll nose now:—
Give me mine angle.—We'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fishes: my handled hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws: and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, he! you're caught.

Chor. 'Twas merry, when
You wagar'd on your angling; when your dver
Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time!—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience; and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;
Then put my tires and smocks on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philipian. O! from Italy;

Enter a Messenger.

Ram thou the fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long to be have been barru.

Mec. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead!—
If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress:
But well and free,
If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss: a hand, that kugs
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mec. First, madam, he's well.
Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, sirrah, mark; we use

To say, the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee, will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mec. Good madam, hear me.
Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there's no goodness in thy face: If Antony
Be free, and healthful,—why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings? If not well,
Thou should'st come like a fury crown'd with
Not like a formal man. (smokes)

Mec. Will't please you, hear me?
Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou
speak'st:

Yet, if thou say, Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Caesar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee

Mec. Madam, he's well.
Cleo. Well said.
Mec. And friends with Caesar.
Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.
Mec. Caesar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.
Mec. But yet, madam,—
Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does ally
The good precedence; fly upon but yet:
But yet is as a snail to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Pr'ythee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear.
The good and bad together: He's friends with Caesar; (free)

In state of health, thou say'st; and, thou say'st,
Mec. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:
He's bound unto Octavia.

For what good turn?
Mec. For the best turn: the best.
Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.
Mec. Madam, he's married to Octavia.
Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!
(Strikes him down.)

Mec. Good madam, patience.
Cleo. What say you?—Hence,
(Strikes him again.)

Horrible villain! or I'll spur thee eyes
Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head;
(She heels him up and down.)

Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in brine.

Smarting in ding'ring pickle. Gracious madam,
I, that do bring the news, made not the match.
Cleo. Say, 'tis not so, a promise I will give
thee,

And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hast

Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage;
And I will beat thee with that gift heads
Thy medes y' can beg.

Mec. He's married, madam.
Cleo. Rague, thou hast lov'd too long.
(Draws a dagger.)

Mec. Nay, then I'll run:—
What means you, madam? I have made no fault.

(Exit)

Ces. About the Mount Misenum
Ant. What's his strength
By land?

Ces. Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame:
'Would, we had spoke together! Haste we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business, we have talk'd of.

Ces. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Enter Cesar, Ant., and Lepidus.]

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.
Evo. Half the heart of Cesar, worthy Mecnas!—my honourable friend, Agrippa!

Ag. Good Enoberus!
Mec. We have cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested. You stay'd well by it in Egypt.

Evo. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild bears roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true?

Evo. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of feasts, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.

Evo. When she first met Mark Antony, she purged up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

Ag. There she appeared indeed; or my reporter devised well for her.

Evo. I will tell you:
The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfumed, that
The winds were love-sick with them; the oars were silver;

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made

The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own part begg'd all description: she did lie (son, in her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue.)
O'er-picturing that Venus, where we see,
The fancy out-work nature: on each side her,
stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they could, did.

Ag. O, rare for Antony!

Evo. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i'th' eyes,
And made their bends adorings: at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackle Swell with the touches of those flower-soft
hands,

That farcely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthron'd in the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Ag. Rare Egyptian!

Evo. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she replied,
It should be better, he became her guest;

Which she entreated: Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And, for his ordinary, pays his heart,
For what his eyes eat only.

Ag. Royal wench!
She made great Cesar lay his sword to bed;
He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.

Evo. I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the publick street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and pant-
That she did make defect, perfection, (ed,
And, breathless, power breathes forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.
Evo. Never: he will not;
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: Other women (try,
Clay th' appetites feed; but she makes him
Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselves in her; that the holy priests
Bless her, when she is riggish.

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him:

Ag. Let us go.—
Good Enoberus, make yourself my guest
Whilst you abide here.

Evo. Humbly, sir, I thank you
(Exeunt.)

SCENE III. — The same. A Room in Cesar's House.

Enter Cesar, Antony, Octavia between them, Attendants, and a Soothsayer.

Ant. The world, and my great office, will sometimes

Divide me from your bosom.

Oct. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my hlemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.—

Oct. Good night, sir.

Ces. Good night.

Ant. Now, sirrah! (Cesar and Octavia
Exit)
You do wish yourself in Egypt?

Sooth. 'Would I had never come from thence,
Thither!

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see't in My motion, have it not in my tongue: But yet
Hie you again to Egypt.

Ant. Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Cesar's, or
mine?

Sooth. Cesar's.

Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable.
Where Cesar's is not; but, near him, thy angel, Becomes a Fear, as being o'erpower'd; therefore Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds: thy love
thickens,
When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit

Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother never Did urge me in his act; I did acquire it;
And have my learning from some true reports,
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather

Discredit my authority with yours;
And make the wars like against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this, my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Ces. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgment to me; but
You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so;
I know you could not tack. I am certain on't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I Your partner in the cause gainst which he fought.

Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
Which 'fronted mine own peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her spirit in such another:
The third o' the world is yours; which with a suffice

You may prove easy, but not such a wife.
Ene. Would we had all such wives; that the men might go to wars with the women!
Ant. So much scurvy, her garb, Caesar,
Made out of her impudence, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too), I grieving grant,
Did you too much disquiet: for that, you must
But say, I could not help it.

Ces. I wrote to you,
When sitting in Alexandria: you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my merrime out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me, are admitted; then
Three kings I had me fostered, and did want
Of what I was i' the morning; but, next day,
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon: Let this follow
Be nothing of our strife; if we contend,
Out of our question wipe him.

Ces. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Caesar.
Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak;
The honour's mine which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack'd it: But on, Caesar;
The article of my oath.—

Ces. To lead me arms, and aid, when I requir'd them;
The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather:
And then, when person'd hour had bound me up
From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
I'll play the peasant to you; but mine honesty
Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
Work without it: Truth is, that Fulvia
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon, as heeds mine honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. This nobly spoken.
McC. If it might please you, to enforce no further

The grief between ye: to forget them quite,
Were to remember that the present need.
Speaks to some you

Lep. Worthily spoke, Mecenas.
Roe. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only: speak no more.
Ene. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak
no more.

Ene. Go to then; your considerate stone.
Ces. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech: for it cannot be,
We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' the world I would pursue it.

Agp. Give me leave, Caesar,—

Ces. Speak, Arrippa.
Agp. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side, Admir'd Octavia: great Mark Antony is now a widower.

Ces. Say not so, Arrippa;

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Caesar: let me hear Arrippa further speak.

Agp. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unslipp'd knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men;
Whose virtue, and whose several graces, speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,

All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing: truths would be but tales.

Where now half tales be truths: her love to both,
Would, each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke:
For 'tis a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Caesar speak?

Ces. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Arrippa,
If I would say, Arrippa, be it so,
To make this good?

Ces. The power of Caesar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly, shows,
Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand:
Further this act of grace; and, from this hour,
The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
And sway our great designs!

Ces. There is my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, when no brother
Did ever love so dearly: Let her live
To join our kingdoms, and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst
Pompey:

For he hath had strange courtesies, and great,
Of late upon me: I must thank him only.
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report:
At best of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon us.
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. And where lies he?

ACT II.

SCENE I. — Messina. A Room in Pompey's House.Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Messa.Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.Messa. Know, worthy Pompey,
That what they do delay, they not deny.Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne,
The thing we sue for.Messa. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers
Deem us for our good; so find we profit,
By losing of our prayers.Pom. I shall do well:
The people love me, and the sea is mine;
My power's a crescent, and my anuring hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make
No wars without doors: Caesar gets money, where He loses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.Messa. Caesar and Lepidus
Are in the field: a mighty strength they carry.Pom. Where have you this? 'tis false.Messa. From Silvius, sir.Pom. He dreams; I know, they are in Rome together.Looking for Antony: But all charms of love
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wad' lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts;
Keep his brain fuming; Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till a Lethe'd dulness.—How now, Varrus!Enter Varrus.Varr. This is most certain that I shall deliver:
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected; since he went from Egypt, 'tis
A space for further travel.Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Messa. I did not think,
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd his balm.For such a petty war: his soldiiership
Is twice the other twain: But let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-wearied Antony.Messa. I cannot hope,
Caesar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife, that's dead, did trespass to Caesar;
His brother warr'd upon him: although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.Pom. I know not, Messa,
How lesser amities may give way to greater.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square between themselves;For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords: but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be it as our gods will have it! It only stands
Our lives upon, to use our strongest hands.
Come, Messa. [Exeunt.]SCENE II. — Rome. A Room in the House of Lepidus.Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed.
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain

To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat himTo answer like himself: if Caesar move him,
Let Antony look over Caesar's head.And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shav' to-day.Lep. 'Tis not a time

For private stomaching.

Eno. Every time

Serves for the matter that is then born in it.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way

Eno. Not if the small come first*Lep.* Your speech is passion:

But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes

The noble Antony.

Enter Antony and Ventidius.Eno. And yonder Caesar.Enter Caesar, Messana, and Agrippa.Ant. If we suppose well here, to Parthian:

Hark you, Ventidius.

Caes. I do not know.Messana; ask Agrippa.Lep. Noble friends,

That which combined us was most great, and let not

A lesser action rend us. What's amiss,

May it be gently heard: When we debate

Our trivial difference loud, we do commit

Murder in healing wounds: Then, noble parti-ners,

(The rather, for I earnestly beseech,)

Touch you the sorest points with sweetest terms.

Nor curstness grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well:

Were we before our armies, and to fight,

I should do thus.

Caes. Welcome to Rome.Ant. Thank you.Caes. Sit.Ant. Sit, sir!Caes. Nay,

Then—

Ant. I learn, you take things ill, which are not

Or, being, concern you not. [To Caes.]

Caes. I must be laugh'd at,

If, or for nothing, or a little, I

Should say myself offended; and with you

Chiefly I the world more laugh'd at, that I should

Once name you derogately, when to sound your

name

It not concern'd me,

Ant. My being in Egypt, Caesar,

What was't to you?

Caes. No more than my residing here at Rome

Might be to you in Egypt: Yet if you there

Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt

Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, praetor?Caes. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent.

By what did here befall me. Your wife, and brother,

Made wars upon me; and their contestation

Was theme for you, you were the world of war.

With keels of every kind: Many hot inroads
They make us lively; the borders maritime
Lack blood to think on't, and flush youth revolt:
No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen: for Pompey's name strikes more,
Than could his war wearied.

Ces. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassails. When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow: whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer: 'thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture
sheds,

The barks of trees thou browsed'st; on the Alps
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on: And all this
(It wounds thee now, that I speak it now.)
Was herein so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lea. It is pity of him.

Ces. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome: 'Tis time we twain
Did show ourselves i' the field; and, to that end, Assemble we immediate council: Pompey
Thrives in our illnesses

Lea. To-morrow, Caesar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To front this present time.

Ces. Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lea. Farewell, my lord: What you shall know mean time

Of stir abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Ces. Doubt not, sir;
I knew it for my band. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. — Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian,—

Cher. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha!—

Give me to drink mandragora.

Cher. Why, madam!

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time.

My Antony is away.

Cher. You think of him

Too much.

Cleo. O, treason!

Cher. Madam, I trust, not so.

Cleo. These, couch! Marlian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no
pleasure

In sight an eunuch has: 'Tis well for thee,

That, being unsex'd, thy freer thoughts

May not be forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yea, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do nothing

But what indeed is honest to be done:

Yet I have serv'd affections, and think,

What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian,

Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?

O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!

Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
And burgonet of men.—He's speaking now.

Or murm'ring, Where's my serpent of old Nile?

For so he calls me: Now I feed myself

With most delicious poison:—Thunk on me,

That am with Phobus' amorous pinches black,

And wrinkled deep in time! Broad-fronted Caesar,

When thou wast here above the ground, I was

A morsel for a monarch: and great Pompey

Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my brow;

There would he anchor his aspect, and die

With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas.

Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail!

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!

Yet coming from him, that great new-time hath

With his time clad thee.

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,

He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,—

This orient pearl:—His speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. Good friend, quoth he,

Say, The firm Roman to great Egypt sends

This treasure of an asp; at whose foot,

To ward the pelted present, I will place

Her opulent throne with kinsmen; All the east,

Say thou, shall call her mistress. So he saddled,

And soberly did mount a turgant steed,

Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke

Was hoarsely dumb'd by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the extremes

Of heat and cold; he was not sad nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him.

Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note

him:

He was not sad; for he would shine on those

That make their looks by him; he was not merry;

Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay

In Egypt with his joy: but between both:

O heavenly mingle!—Be't thou sad, or merry,

The violence of either thus becomes:

So does it no man else.—Met'st thou my posts?

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:

Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day

When I forget to send to Antony,

Shall die a beggar,—ink and paper, Charmian.—

Welcome, my good Alexas—Dad I, Charmian,

Ever love Caesar so!

Cher. O that brave Caesar!

Cleo. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!

Say, the brave Antony.

Cher. The valiant Caesar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,

If thou with Caesar paragon again

Men of men.

Cher. By your most gracious pardon,

I sing but after you.

Cleo. My salad days:

When I was green in judgment:—'Old in blood,

To say as I said then!—But, come, away:

Get me ink and paper: he shall have every day

A several greeting, or I'll unspeuple Egypt.

[Exeunt.]

Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world,
Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would, I had thy inches; thou should'st know.

There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen:

The strong necessity of time commands
Our services a while; but my full heart
Remains in use with you. Our Italy
Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the port of Rome:
Equality of two domestic powers Breeds scrupulous faction: The hated, grown to strength.

Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd Potho-
Rich in his father's honour, creeps space
Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my
Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. I thought age from folly could not give me freedom.

It does from childishness:—Can Fulvia die?

Ant. She's dead, my queen:

Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read
The garb she awak'd; at the last, best—
See, when, and where she died.

Cleo. O most false love!

Where be the sacred vials thou should'st fill
With sorrowful water! Now I see, I see.

In Fulvia's death how mine recovery shall be!

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to know

The purposes I bear: which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice: Now, by the fire
That quickens Nilus' slimes, I go from hence,
Thy soldier, servant: making peace or war,
As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come!—
But let it be.—I am quickly ill, and well:
So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear:

And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An hour-long trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.

I prythee, turn aside, and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say, the tears
Belong to Egypt: Good now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll beat my blood; no more.

Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target.—Still he mends:

But this is not the best: Look, prythee, Char-
How this Herculean Roman does become (mean,
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.

Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it;
Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it;
That you know well: Something it is I would,—
O, my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour,

To bear such killenous as near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me:
Since my becoming kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you: Your honour calls you hence;
Therefore be deaf to my unplotted folly,

And all the gods go with you! upon your sword
Set laurel! victory! and smooth success
Be strew'd before your feet! Let us go. Come;

Ant. Our separation an abides, and flies,
That thou reading here, go'st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeing, here remain with thee.
Away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Rome. An Apartment in Caesar's House.

Enter Octavius Caesar, Lepidus, and Attendants.

Caes. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth
It is not Caesar's natural vice to hate [know,
One great competitor: from Alexandria
This is the news; He fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel: is not more unlike Than Cleopatra; nor the queen Ptolemy
More womanly than he: hardly gave audience, or Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners: You shall find there

A man, who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think, there are
Evils enough to darken all his goodness:
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd; what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Caes. You're too indulgent: Let us grant, it is not Amis to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;

To give a kingdom for a mirth; to set

And keep the turn of tippling with a slave;

To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knives that smell of sweat; say, this becomes him.

(As his composure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish,) yet must Antony

No way excuse his soils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,

Full softers, and the dymnes of his house,

Call on him forth: but, to confound such time,

That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud

As his own state, and ours.—'Tis to be child

As we rate boys: who, being mature in knowledge,

Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,

And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mes. Thy bidlings have been done; and every hour

Most noble Caesar, shalt thou have report

How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong of sea

And it appears, he is belov'd of those

That only have fear'd Caesar: to the ports

The discontented repair, and men's reports

Give him much wrong'd.

Caes. I should have known no less —

It hath been taught us from the primal state,

That he, which is, was wish'd, until he were:

And the child man, ne'er lov'd, till ne'er worth

Love,

'Comes dear'd, by being lack'd. This comes—

Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,

Goes to, and back, lacking any varying tide.

To rot itself with motion.

Mes. Caesar, I bring thee word,

Menecrates and Meunas, famous pirates,

Make the sea serve them; which they can and

would

2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.
Ant. Where died she?
 2 Mess. In Sicron:
 Her length of sickness, with what else more seleniteth these to know, this bears. [Rings a bell.]
Ant. Forbear me.—
[Exit Messenger]
 There's a great spirit gone: Thus did I desire it:
 What our contempts do often hurt from us,
 We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
 By revolution lowering, does become
 The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone;
 The hand could pluck her back, that shov'd her on.
 I meet from this enchanting queen break off;
 Ten thousand harnes, more than the ill I know,
 My allness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!

Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?
Ant. I must with haste from hence.
Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.
Ant. I must be gone.
Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die: it were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least note of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think, there is mettle in death, which counsels some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.
Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.
Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears;
 they are greater storms and tempests than almsmen can report: this cannot be cunning in her;
 if it be, she makes a shewer of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. 'Would I had never seen her!
Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blessed withal, would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Eno. Sir!
Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Eno. Fulvia!
Ant. Dead.
Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleases their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to men the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, there had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented: this grief is crowned with remission; your old garment brings forth a new indifferent;—and, indeed, the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath brunched in the cannot endure my absence. [state]
Eno. And the business you have brunched here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.
Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers have notice what we purpose. I shall break the custom of our expedience to the queen, and get her love to part. For not alone
 The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
 Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too
 Of many our contriving friends in Rome

Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius
 Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands
 The empire of the sea: our slippery people
 Whose love is never link'd to the deserver,
 Till his deserts are past, begin to throw
 Pompey the great, and all his dignities,
 Upon his son; who, high in name and power,
 Higher than high in blood and life, stands up
 For the main soldier: whose quality, going on,
 The sides of the world may danger. Much is breeding.
 Which, like the ewer's hair, hath yet but life,
 And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure,
 To such whose place is under us, requires
 Our quick remove from hence.
Eno. I shall do't. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is he?
Char. I did not see him since.
Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does:—
 I did not send you:—If you find him and,
 Say, I am dancing; if in mirth, report
 That I am suddenly sick: Quick, and return. [Exit Alex.]
Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,
 You do not hold the method to enforce
 The like from him.
Cleo. What should I do, I do not?
Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.
Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose him. [hears;]
Char. 'Tis not so too far: I wish, for-in time we hate that which we often fear.

Enter Antony.

But here comes Antony.
Cleo. I am sick, and sullen.
Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose.
Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall it cannot be thus long, the moes of nature [fall;]
 Will not sustain it.
Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—
Ant. Pray you, stand further from me.
Ant. What's the matter?
Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman?—You may go;
 'Would, she had never given you leave to come!
 Let her not say, 'tis I that keep you here,
 I have no power upon you: hers you are.
Ant. The gods best know.—
Cleo. O, never was there queen
 So mightily betray'd! Yet, at the first,
 I saw the treasons plotted.
Cleopatra.—
Cleo. Why should I think, you can be mine, and true.

Though you in swearing shake the throned gods,
 Who have been false to Fulvia? Rites of mausoleum
 'Tis he entangled with those smooth-made vows,
 Which break themselves in swearing!
Ant. Most sweet queen,— Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going. [Exit.]
 But bid farewell, and go: when you stand stay-
 'till was the time for words: No going then:—
 Eternity was in our lips, and eyes,
 Blue in our brows' beat; none our parts so poor,
 But was a race of heaven: They are so still, thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen! O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must change his horns with garlands!

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, sir, that know Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy, A little I can read.

Alex.

Show him your hand.

Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly: wine Cleopatra's health to drink. [enough, Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush! [loved

Sooth. You shall be more beloved, than be-

Char. I had rather hear my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage: find me to marry me with Octavius Caesar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than

Age.

Sooth. You've seen and proved a fairer former

fortune

Char. Then, belike my children shall have no names: Prythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,

And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras here.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nile presageth famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot sooth-say. Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.—Prythee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how? I give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. And I not an inch of fortune better than she!

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend! Alexas—come, his fortune, his fortune.—O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Ias, I beseech thee! And let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cockhold! Good Ias, hear me this prayer, though thou dany me a matter of more weight; good Ias, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncockhold: Therefore, dear Ias, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now! if it lay in their hands to make me a cockhold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd not.

Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.

Char. Not he, the queen.

Enter Cleopatra.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the sudden

A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus. Madam. [Alexas!

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's

Alex. Here, madam, at your service—My lord approaches.

Enter Antony, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: Go with us

[Exit Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Alexas, Iras, Charmian, Soothsayer, and Attendants.

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius!

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state Made friends of them, joining their force 'gainst

Caesar;

Whose better issue in the war, from Italy,

Upon the first encounter, drove them.

Ant. What worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the Ant. When it concerns the soul, or outward.—

On—

Things that are past are done with me.—The

Who tells me true, though in his tale be death,

I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess.

[This is stiff news] hush, with his Parthian force

Extended Asia from Euphrates;

His conquering banner shook from Syria

To Lydia, and to Ionia;

Whilst—

Antony, thou would'st say,—

Mess. O, my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home, mine not the general league;

Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome:

Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice

Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth

words,

When our quick winds lie still; and our aim is as our earing. Fare thee well a while.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.

Ant. From Sicily how the news! Speak there.

1 Ant. The man from Sicily.—Is there such as

2 Ant. He stays upon your will. [Exit.

Ant. Let him appear.

These strong Egyptian fetters I must break,

Enter another Messenger.

Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE, — dispersed; in several parts of the Roman Empire.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Alexandria. A Room in Cleopatra's Palace.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

PHI. Nay, but this dotage of our general's O'erflows the measure: those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now
turn,
The office and devotion of their view
Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper;
And is become the bellows and the fan,
To cool a gipsy's lust. Look, where they come!

Flourish. Enter Antony and Cleopatra, with their Train; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's buggery in the love that can be reckon'd.

Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be believ'd.
Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter an Attendant.

All. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—The sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony:

Fulvia, perchance, is angry: Or, who knows
If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you, Do this, or this;
Take in that knot, and enfranchise that;
Perform 't, or else we damn thee.

How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and must like!
You must not stay here longer, your dismissal
Is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.—
Where's Fulvia's process? Cæsar's, I would say!

—Both?—

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen,
Thou blishest, Antony: and that blood of thine
Is Cæsar's homager: else so thy cheek pays shame,
When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds.—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tiber melt! and the wide
Of the rang'd empire fill! Here is my space;
Kingsloms are clay: our duny earth alike
Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair,

And such a twain can do't, in which, I bind
On pain of punishment, the world to weet,
We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!
Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.—
Now, for the love of love, and her soft hours,
Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:
There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Pish, wrangling queen!
Whom every thing becomes,—to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee, fair and admur'd!
No messenger; but thine, and all mine,
To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note

The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt Ant. and Cleop with their Train.]

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I'm full sorry
That he approves the common liar, who
Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same. Another Room.

Enter Charisma, Iras, Alexas, and a Soothsayer.
Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, must any

I dare assure thee, that no enemy
Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:
The gods defend him from so great a shame!
When you do find him, or alive, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,

A prize no less is worth: keep this man safe,
Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on,
And see who's Brutus, or alive, or dead:
And bring us word, unto Octavius' tent,
How every thing is chanc'd. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Vollumnus.

Br. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

Cl. Statilius show'd the torch-light; but, my
lord,

He came not back; he is, or taken, or slain.

Br. Sit thee down, Clitus: Slaying is the word;

It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus —

[Whispering.]

Cl. What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

Br. Peace then, no words.

Cl. I'll rather kill myself.

Br. Hark thee, Dardanius! [Whispers him.]

Der. I do such a deed!

Cl. O, Dardanius!

Der. O, Clitus!

Cl. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Der. To kill him, Clitus; Look, he meditates.

Cl. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

Br. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Br. Why this, Volumnius:

The ghost of Cæsar hath appeared to me

Two several times by night: at Sardis, once;

And, thus last night, here in Philippi's fields

I know, my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Br. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius

Thou see'st the world, Volumnius, how it goes:

Our enemies have heat us to the jet:

It is more worthy, to leap in ourselves,

Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,

Thou know'st, that we two went to seal'd together:

Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,

Hold thou my sword-hilt, whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.]

Cl. Fly, fly, my lord; there is an hurrying here.

Br. Farewell to you—and you;—and you, Vo-
lumnus:—

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep:

Farewell to thee too, Strato!—Countrymen

My heart doth joy, that yet, in all my life,

I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day,

More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,

By their vile conquest shall attain unto.

So fare you well at once: for Brutus' tongue

Hath almost ended his life's history:

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,

That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within; Fly, fly, fly.]

Cl. Fly, my lord, fly.

Br. Hence: I will follow thee.

[Exeunt Clitus, Dardanius, and Volumnius.]

I pray thee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in it:

He then my sword, and turn away thy face,

While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Str. Give me your hand first: Fare you well,
my lord.

Br. Farewell; good Strato. — Cæsar, now be still:

I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his sword, and dies.]

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Octavius, Antony, Mes-sala, Lucilius, and their army.

Oct. What man is that?

Mes. My master's man. — Strato, where is thy master?

Str. Free from the bondage you are in, Mes-
sala:

The conquerors can but make a fire of him;

For Brutus only overcame himself,

And no more else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found — I thank thee, Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain
them.

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Str. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?

Str. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee.

That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:

All the conspirators save only he,

Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;

He, only, in a general honest thought,

And common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle; and the elements

So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,

And say to all the world, This was a man!

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,

With all respect, and rites of burial.

Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,

Most like a soldier, order'd honourably —

So, call the field to rest: and let's away.

To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.]

My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—

[Exit Pindarus.]

This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end:

My life is run his compass—Sirrah, what news?

Pin. [Above.] O my lord!

Cas. What news?

Pin. Titinius is

Enclosed round about with horsemen, that Make to him on the spur;—yet he spurs on—
Now they are almost on him; now, Titinius!—
Now some light!—O, he lights too:—he's ta'en;
—and hark!

[Shout.]

They shout for joy.

Cas. Come down, behold no more.—
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

Enter Pindarus.

Come hither, sirrah:

In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;

And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,

That whatsoever I did bid thee do,

Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath!

Now be a freeman; and, with this good sword,
That ran through Cæsar's bowels, search this bosom.

Stand not to answer: Here, take thou the hilt;
And, when my face is cover'd—'tis his now,
Guide thou the sword—Cæsar thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Pin. So, I am free: yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him.

[Exit.]

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius: for Octavius is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsolate,

With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

Mes. Is not that he that lies upon the ground?

Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala.

But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun!

As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,

So in his red blood Cassius' day is set;

The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone;

Clouds, dew, and dangers come; our deeds are dun!

Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this

O fearful error, melancholy's child! [Dies.]

Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men

The things that are not? O error, soon convinc'd,

Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,

But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Tit. What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius: whilst I go to meet

The noble Brutus, thrusting this report

Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;

For piercing steel, and darts envenomed,

Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus

As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala.

And I will seek for Pindarus the while

[Exit Messala]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,

And bid me give't thee? Didst thou not bear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee, take this sword on thy brow;

Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Cæsar's sword.

By your leave, gods!—This is a Roman's part:
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart.

[Dies.]

Alarum. Re-enter Messala, with Brutus, young Cato, Strato, Volturrius, and Lucilius.

Br. Where, where, Messala, doth his body
lie?

Mes. Lo, yonder; and Titinius mourning it.

Br. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato. He is slain.

Br. O Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet!

Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails. [Loud alarms.]

Cato. Brave Titinius!

Look, wh'er he have not crown'd dead Cæsar!

Br. Are yet two Romans living such as these?

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!

It is impossible, that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more
tears

To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.—

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thasos send his body;

His funeral shall not be in our camp.

Let it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come!

And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—

Laboe, and Flavius, set our battles on—

The three o'clock; and, Romans, yet are eight.

We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

*Alarum. Enter fighting, Soldiers of both Armies;
then Brutus, Cato, Lucilius, and others.*

Br. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your hands!

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go

I will proclaim my name about the field:—

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend;

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

[Charges the enemy.]

Br. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;

Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus

[Exit, charging the enemy. Cato is overpowered, and falls.]

Lac. O young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius,

And may'st be honour'd, being Cato's son.

1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Lac. Only I yield to die.

There is so much, that thou wilt kill me straight.

[Offering money]

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!

2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

1 Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the general:—

Enter Antony

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Lac. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough;

Brutus.—How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here?
 I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes
 That shapes this monstrous apparition.
 It comes upon me.—Art thou anything?
 Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
 That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stand?
 Speak to me, what thou art.

JULIUS CÆSAR, Act IV.—Scene iii.

Ant. Villains, you did not so, when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cæsar:
You show'd your teeth like asps, and fawn'd like hounds.

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Cæsar's feet;
Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind,
Struck Cæsar on the neck. O flatterers!
Cas. Flatterers!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself:
This tongue had not offended so to-day,
If Cassius might have rul'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: If arguing make us sweat,

The proof of it will turn to redder drops.

Look;

I draw a sword against conspirators;
When think you that the sword goes up again?—
Never, till Cæsar's three-and-twenty wounds
Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæsar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Brv. Cæsar, thou canst not die by traitors,
Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Oct. So I hope;
I was not born to die on Brutus's sword.

Brv. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou could'st not die more honourably.

Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honour.

Join'd with a musker and a reveller.

Ant. Old Cassius still!

Oct. Come, Antony, away.—
Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth;
If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;
If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and their Army.]
Cas. Why now, blow, wind! swell, billow; and swim, bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Brv. Ho!

Lucilius; hark, a word with you.

Luc.

[Brutus and Lucilius converse apart.]
My lord.

Cas. Messala.—

Mes.

Cas.

What says my general?

Mesala:

This is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cæsar's horn. Give me thy hand, Messala:
Be thou my witness, that against my will,

As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set
Upon one battle all our liberties.
You know, that I held Epicurus strong,
And his opinion: now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our foremost ensign
Two mighty eagles fell; and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;
Who to Philippi here consorted us;
This morning are they fled away, and gone;
And in their stead do ravens, crows, and kites,
Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,
As we were sickly prey: their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;
For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd
To meet all perils very constantly.

Brv. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The grails to-day stand friendly: that we may,
Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age!
But, since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.
If we do lose this battle, then is this

The very last time we shall speak together:
What are you then determin'd to do?

Brv. Even by the rule of that philosophy,
By which I did blame Cæsar for the death
Which he did give himself:—I know not how,
But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life:—arming myself with patience,
To stay the providence of some high powers,
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Through the streets of Rome!

Brv. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble Roman.

That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work, the ides of March began;
And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:—
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why we shall smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cas. Fur ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Brv. Why then lead on.—O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business, ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end.

And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. The Field of Battle.

Alarm. Enter Brutus and Messala.

Brv. Rude, rude, Messala, rude, and give these tells

Unto the legions on the other side.

[Load alarm.]

Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing.
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.

Rude, rude, Messala: let them all come down.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Another Part of the Field.

Alarm. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy:
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early:
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

[Enter Pindarus.]

Pra. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord!

Fly therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

Cas. This hull is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;

Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,

Mount thou my horse, and bid thy spurs to him,

Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,

And here again; that I may rest assur'd,

Whether yond' troops are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.

[Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill.

Re-enter Lucius, with the poem.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily!

Four knives, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter Varro and Claudius.

Var. Calls my lord!

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep:
It may be, I shall raise you by and by.

On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand and watch your pleasure.

Bru. I will not have it so; lie down, good sirs;
It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so:
I put it in the pocket of my gown.

Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it
me. [Gratful.]

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much fur-cast; thou hold'st up thy heavy eyes awhile.
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, as I please you.

Bru. It does, my boy:
I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir.

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy night;
I know, young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It is well done; and thou shalt sleep
I will not hold thee long: if I do live, [again:]
I will be good to thee. [Music, and a Song.]

This is a sleepy tune:—O murderous slumber!
Lay'st thou thy leaden nuce upon my boy,
That plays these musick?—Gentle knave, good
night;

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.
If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument;
I'll take it from thee: and, good boy, good night.
Let me see, let me see:—Is not the leaf turn'd
down

Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down.]

Enter the Ghost of Cæsar.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here?
I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon me: art thou any thing?

Art thou some good, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stand?
Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well; [happi.]

Thou I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

[Ghost vanishes.]
Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi then.—
Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest:

Ill spirits, I would hold more talk with thee—
Boy!—Lucius!—Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks, he still is at his instrument.—
Lucius, awake.

Luc. My lord!

Bru. Did'st thou dream, Lucius, that thou saw'st
me?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: Didst thou see any thing?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius!

Fellow thou! awake.

Var. My lord.

Cass. My lord [sleep!]

Bru. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?

Var. Cass. Did we, my lord?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Cass. Nor I, my lord.

Bru. Go, and commend me to my brother Cas-sius: bid him set on his powers betimes before, [sirs:]
And we will follow.

Var. Cass. It shall be done, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered:

You said the enemy would not come down;

But keep the hills and upper regions;

It proves not so: their battles are at hand;

They mean to warn us at Philippi here.

Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know

Wherefore they do it; they could be content

To visit other places; and come down

With fearful bravery, thinking by this face

To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;

But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals:

The enemy comes on in gallant show;

Their bloody sign of battle is hung out,

And something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on,

Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I, keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March.]

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army;

Lucilius, Titinius, Messian, and others.

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.

Cass. Stand fast, Titinius: We must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge.

Make forth, the generals would have some words.

Oct. Stir not until the signal.

Bru. Words before blows: is it so, countrymen?

Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes,

Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good

words:

Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart.

Crying, Long live! hail, Cæsar!

Cass. Antony,

The posture of your blows are yet unknown;

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,

And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.

Bru. O yes, and soundless too;

For you have stol'n their buzzing Antony,

And, very wisely, threat before you sting.

Enter Post.

Cas. How now! What's the matter?
Post. For shame, you generals! What do you mean!
 Love, and he friends, as two such men should be;
 For I have seen more years, I am sure, than ye.
Cas. Ha, ha; how vilely doth this cynick rhyme!
Bra. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence.
Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.
Bra. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time:
 What should the wars do with these jiggling fools?
 Companion, hence.

Cas. Away, away, be gone.
(Exit Post.)

Enter Lucilius and Titinius.

Bra. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders
 Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.
Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala
 with you

Immediately to us. (Exit Lucilius and Titinius)
Bra. Lucius, a bowl of wine
Cas. I did not think, you could have been so angry.

Bra. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.
Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use.
 If you give place to accidental evils. (Lead)
Bra. No man bears sorrow better:—Portia is Cas. Ha! Portia?
Bra. She is dead. (Exit)
Cas. How scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you
 O insupportable and touching loss!—
 Upon what sickness?

Bra. Impatience of my absence;
 And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony
 Have made themselves so strong;—for with her death

Those tidings came:—With this she fell distract,
 And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire.

Cas. And died so?

Bra. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter Lucius, with some and tapers.

Bra. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine:—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. (Drinks.)
Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge:—
 Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;
 I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. (Drinks.)

Re-enter Titinius with Messala.

Bra. Come in, Titinius:—Welcome, good Mes-
 sala—

Now sit we close about this taper here,
 And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?
Bra. No more, I pray you.—
 Messala, I have here received letters,
 That young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
 Come down upon us with a mighty power,
 Binding their expedition toward Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the self same tenor.
Bra. With what addition?

Mes. That by proscription, and bills of outlawry,
 Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
 Have put to death a hundred senators.

Bra. Therein our letters do not well agree;

Nine speak of seventy senators, that died
 By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one?

Mes. Ay, Cicero is dead

And by that order of proscription.—

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bra. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

Bra. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bra. Why ask you? Hear you aught of her?

Mes. No, my lord. (Yours?)

Bra. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:

For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bra. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die,

Messala:

With meditation that she must die once,

I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. 'E'en so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,

But yet my nature could not bear it so

Bra. Well, to our work alive. What do you

Of marching to Philippi presently? (Think)

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bra. Your reason?

Cas. 'Tis a:

'Tis better, that the enemy seek us:

So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,

Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,

Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bra. Good reason must, of force, give place to better.

The people, 'twixt Philippi and this ground,

Do stand but in a forced affection;

For they have grudg'd us contribution:

The enemy, marching along by them,

By them shall make a fuller number up,

Come on refresh'd, new-aided, and encourag'd,

From which advantage shall we cut him off.

If at Philippi we do face him there,

'Tis ease people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.

Bra. Under your pardon.—You must note beside.

That we have try'd the utmost of our friends,

Our legions are brim-full, our cause is ripe:

The enemy increaseth every day,

We, at the height, are ready to decline.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,

Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;

Omitted, all the voyage of their life

Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.

On such a full sea are we now afloat;

And we must take the current when it serves,

Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on.

We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.

Bra. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,

And nature must obey necessity;

Which we will neglect with a little rest.

There is no more to say?

Cas. No more. Good night;

Early to-morrow will we meet hence.

Bra. Lucius, my gown. (Exit Lucius.) Farewell, good Messala:—

Good night, Titinius:—Noble, noble Cassius,

Good night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother!

This was an ill beginning of the night:

Never came such division 'tween our souls!

Let it not, Brutus.

Bra. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.

Bra. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good night, lord Brutus.

Bra. Farewell, every one.

(Exit all.)

Br. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet That every nice offence should bear its comment. Br. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm; To sell and mart your offices for gold, To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm? You know, that you are Brutus that speak this, Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last. Br. The name of Cassius honours this corruption.

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement! Remember! Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake? What villain touch'd his body, that did stab, And not for justice? What! shall one of us, That struck the foremost man of all this world, But for supporting robbers; shall we now Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? And sell the mighty space of our large honours, For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?— I'd rather be a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay not me, I'll not endure it: you forget yourself, To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I, Older in practice, slier than yourself To make conditions.

Br. Go to; you're not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Br. I say, you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself: Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Br. A way, slight man!

Cas. Is't possible?

Br. Hear me, for I will speak. Most I give way and room to your rash choler? Shall I be frightened, when a madman stares?

Cas. O gods! ye gods! Most I endure all this?

Br. All this? ay, more: Fret, till your proud heart break:

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are, And make your bondmen tremble. Must I bulge? Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch Under your teary humour? By the gods, You shall digest the venom of your spleen, Though it do split you: for, from this day forth, I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter, When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Br. You say, you are a better soldier: Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well: For mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong Cass. You wrong me; not a better:

I said, an elder soldier, not a better: Did I say, better?

Br. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Caesar liv'd, he durst not thus have wrong'd me.

Br. I durst not? (ed him.)

Br. Peace, peace; you durst not so have tempt-

Cas. I durst not?

Br. No.

Cas. What! durst not tempt him?

Br. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love, I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Br. You have done that you should be sorry There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats; For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,

That they pass by me as the idle wind, Which I respect not. I did send to you For certain sums of gold, which you deny'd me:— For I can raise no money by vile means; By heaven, I had rather coin my heart, And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash, By any indirection. I did send To you for gold to pay my legions, Which you denied me: Was that done like Cas-sius? Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius as I? When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous, To lock such racial counters from his friends, Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts, Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I denied you not.

Br. You did.

Cas. I did not:—he was but a fool, That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'n my heart:

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities, But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Br. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Br. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

Br. A flatterer's would not, though they do appear.

As huge as high Olympus.

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius, For Cassius is weary of the world.

Hated by one he loves; bray'd by his brother; Check'd like a boudian; all his faults observ'd,

Set in a note-book, learn'd and coun'd by rote, To rage into my teeth. O, I could weep Myself from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,

And here, my naked breast: within, a heart Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold.

If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth: I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart: Strike, as thou didst at Cæsar: for, I know, When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'd'st him better.

Than ever thou lov'd'st Cassius.

Br. Sheath your dagger:

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope:

Do what you will, dishonour shall be honour.

O Cassius, you are yok'd with a lamb,

That carries anger, as the fin bears fire:

Who, much enforc'd, shows a hasty spark,

And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,

When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him?

Br. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Br. And my heart too.

Cas. O Brutus!—

Br. What's the matter?

Cas. Have you not love enough to hear with me, (me,

When that rash humour, which my mother gave

Makes me forgetful?

Br. Yes, Cassius; and, henceforth,

When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,

He'll think you rather chide, and leave you so.

(Noise within.)

Post. (Within.) Let me go in to see the generals;

There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet

They be alone.

Luc. (Within.) You shall not come to them.

Post. (Within.) Nothing but death shall stay

me.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — The same. A Room in Antony's House.

Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus, seated at a table.

Ant. These many then shall die; their names are prick'd.

Oct. Your brother too must die; Consent you, Lep. I do consent. [Lepidus]

Oct. Prick him down, Antony.

Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live, Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spirit I damn him.

But, Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house;

Fetch the will hither, and we will determine How to cut off some charges in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here, or at The Capitol. [Exit Lepidus.]

Ant. This is a slight nummerable man, Meot to be sent on errands: Is it fit, The three-fold world divided, he should stand One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him, And took his voice who should be prick'd to die, In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you, And though we lay these honours on this man,

To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads, He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,

To groan and sweat under the business, Either led or driven, as we point the way;

And having brought our treasure where we will, Then take we down his load, and turn him off,

Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears, And graze in commons.

Oct. You may do your will; But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and, for that, I do appoint him store of provender.

It is a creature that I teach to fight, To wind, to stop, to run directly on;

His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit. And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so;

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth: A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds

On objects, arts, and imitations; Which, out of use, and stall'd by other men,

Begin his fashion: Do not talk of him, But as a property. And now, Octavius, Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius Are levying powers: we must straight make head: Therefore, let our alliance be combin'd, Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out;

And let us presently go sit in council, How covert matters may be best disclos'd,

And open perils surer answered.

Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake, And bay'd about with many enemies;

And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear, Millions of mischief. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Lucius, and Soldiers: Titinius and Pindarus meeting them.

Brus. Stand here.

Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Brus. What now, Lucilius? is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand: and Pindarus is come To do you salutation from his master.

[Pindarus gives a letter to Brutus.]
Brus. He greets me well.—Your master Pindarus,

In his own charge, or by ill officers, Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand, I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt, But that my noble master will appear Such as he is, full of regard and honour.

Brus. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius: How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy, and with respect enough; But not with such familiar instances,

Nor with such free and friendly conference, As he hath used of old.

Brus. Thou hast describ'd A hot friend cooling: Ever note, Lucilius,

When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth an enforced ceremony

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith. But hollow men, like horses butt at hand,

Make gallant show and promise of their mettle; But when they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?

Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;

The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassius. [March within.]

Brus. Hark, he is arriv'd:—March gently on to meet him.

Enter Cassius and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho! [Brus. Stand, ho!] Speak the word along.

Within. Stand. Within. Stand.

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

Brus. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I must one. And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs;

And when you do them—

Brus. Cassius, be content, Speak your griefs softly.—I do know you well:—

Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing but love from us,

Let us not wrangle: Bid them move away; Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,

And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus, Bid our commanders lead their charges off A little from this ground.

Brus. Lucilius, do the like; and let no man Come to our tent, till we have done our conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — Within the Tent of Brutus.

Lucius and Titinius at some distance from it.

Enter Brutus and Cassius.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella, For taking bribes here of the Sardians;

Wherein, my letters, praying on his side, Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd him!
This was the most unkindest cut of all:
For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
Quit vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty
heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us, fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what weep you, when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here,
Here is himself, marr'd as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O piteous spectacle!
2 Cit. O noble Cæsar!
3 Cit. O woful day!
4 Cit. O traitors, villains!
1 Cit. O most bloody sight!
2 Cit. We'll be revenged: revenge; about,— seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor
live.

Ant. Stay, countrymen
1 Cit. Peace there!—Hear the noble Antony.
2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They, that have done this deed, are honourable:
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
That made them do it; they are wise and honourable.

And will, in doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;
I am no orator, as Brutus is:
But as you know me well, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full
well

That gave me public leave to speak of him.
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;
I tell you that, which you yourselves do know;
Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me: But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Cit. We'll mutiny
1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.
3 Cit. Away then, come, seek the conspirators.
Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me
speak.

Cit. Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble Antony. (what:
Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves!
Alas, you know not—I must tell you then:—
You have forgot the will I told you of.

Cit. Most true; the will:—let's stay, and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal.
To every Roman citizen he gives,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.

2 Cit. Most noble Cæsar!—we'll revenge his
3 Cit. O royal Cæsar!

Ant. Hear me with patience.
Cit. Peace, no!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbores, and new-planted orchards,
On this side Tyber; he hath left them you.
And to your heirs for ever: common pleasures,
To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.

Here was a Cæsar:—When comes such another?
1 Cit. Never, never:—Come, away, away;
We'll burn his body in the holy place.
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.

Take up the body.
2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.
3 Cit. Pluck down benches.
4 Cit. Pluck down fountains, windows, any thing.

(Exeunt Citizens, with the body.)
Ant. Now let it work:—Mischief, thou art about!

Take thou what course thou wilt!—How now,
Enter a Servant.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.
Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him:
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.

Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Betide, they had some notice of the people,
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.
(Exeunt.)

SCENE III. — The same. A Street.

Enter Cinna, the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night, that I did feast with Cæsar.
And things unluckily charge my fantasy:
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

Enter Citizens.

1 Cit. What is your name?
2 Cit. Whither are you going?
3 Cit. Where do you dwell?
4 Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?
2 Cit. Answer every man directly.
1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.
4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.
3 Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.
Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly. Wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

2 Cit. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry: You'll bear me a bang for that. I fear. Proceed; directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.
1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.
2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.

4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly
Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.
Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Cit. Tell him to piece; he's a conspirator.
Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4 Cit. Tell him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.

2 Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.
3 Cit. Tear him, tear him. Come, brands, ho!—
fire-brands. To Brutus, to Cassius; turn us.
Some to Decius' house, and some to Cæsar's;
some to Ligarius: away; go. (Exeunt.)

Cit. Live, Brutus, live! live! [house.
 1 Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his
 2 Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.
 3 Cit. Let him be Cæsar.

4 Cit. Cæsar's better parts
 Shall now be crown'd in Brutus.
 1 Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen,—
 2 Cit. Peace; silence! Brutus speaks.
 1 Cit. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
 And, for my sake, stay here with Antony;
 Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech
 Tending to Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony,
 By our permission, is allow'd to make.
 I do entreat you, not a man depart,
 Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

1 Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.
 3 Cit. Let him go up into the publick chair;
 We'll hear him: Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you.
 4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Cit. He says for Brutus' sake,
 He finds himself beholden to us all. [here.

4 Cit. 'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus
 1 Cit. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Cit. Nay, that's certain:
 We are blest'd, that Rome is rid of him.
 2 Cit. Peace: let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—
Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.
Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.
 'The evil, that men do, lives after them;
 'The good is oft interred with their bones;
 So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus
 Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious:
 If it were so, it was a grievous fault;
 And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.
 Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
 (For Brutus is an honourable man;
 So are they all, all honourable men)
 Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me;
 But Brutus says, he was ambitious;
 And Brutus is an honourable man.
 He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
 Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:
 Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept:
 Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:
 Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
 And Brutus is an honourable man.
 You all did see, that on the Lupercal,
 I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
 Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
 And, sure, he is an honourable man.
 I speak not to reprove what Brutus spoke,
 But here I am to speak what I do know.
 You all did love him once, not without cause;
 What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?

O Judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
 And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me;
 My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,
 And I must pause till it come back to me.
 1 Cit. Methinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,
 Cæsar has had great wrong.
 3 Cit. Has he, masters?

I fear, there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;
 Therefore, 'tis certain, he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abate it.
 2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping. [Antony.

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome than 4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.
Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might
 Have stood against the world; now lies he there,
 And none so poor to do him reverence.

O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir
 Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
 I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
 Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose
 To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you
 Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar;
 I found it in his closet, 'tis his will;
 Let but the commons hear this testament,
 (Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read.)

And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds,
 And dip their napkins in his sacred blood;
 Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,
 And dying, mention it within their wills,
 Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
 Unto their issue.

4 Cit. We'll hear the will: Read it, Mark Antony. [will.

Cit. The will, the will: we will hear Cæsar's.
Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not
 read it;

It is not meet you know now Cæsar lov'd you.
 You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;
 And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,
 It will inflame you, it will make you mad;

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;
 For if you should, O, what would come of it!

4 Cit. Read the will; we will hear it, Antony:
 You shall read us the will: Cæsar's will!

Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay a while?

I have o'er-shot myself, to tell you of it.
 I fear I wrong the honourable men,
 Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar: I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: Honourable men!
Cit. The will! the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: The will! read the will!

Ant. You will compel me then to read the will!
 Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar,
 And let me show you him that made the will.

Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?
Cit. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend. [He comes down from the pulpit.
 3 Cit. You shall have leave.

4 Cit. A ring; stand round. [body.
 1 Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the 2 Cit. Room for Antony:—most noble Antony.

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.
Cit. Stand back! room! hear him back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them
 now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember
 The first time ever Cæsar put it on,
 'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent;
 That day he overcame the Nervii—

Look! in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through:
 See, what a rent the envious Cassius made;
 Through this, the well-belov'd Brutus stabb'd;

And, as he pleas'd, has carved steel away,
 Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it;
 As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd
 If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;

Our reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek,
And am moreover suitor, that I may Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as he comes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Br. You shall, Mark Antony.
Cæ. Brutus, a word with you.—
You know not what you do: Do not consent.

[Aside.]

That Antony speak in his funeral:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter?

Br. By your pardon;—
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Cæsar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protect;
He speaks for leave and by permission;
And that we are contented, Cæsar shall
Have all true rites, and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cæ. I know not what may fall; I like it not.
Br. Mark Antony, here, take your Cæsar's body.

You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar;
And say, you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: And shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going.
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.
Br. Prepare the body then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but Antony.]

Ant. O, pardon me, thou piece of bleeding earth,
That I am weak and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man.
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Wee to the hand that shed this costly blood
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the venge and utterance of my tongue;—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestick fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds;
And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these conflicts with a monarch's voice,
Cry, 'Havock,' and let slip the dogs of war;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him, to come to Rome.
Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming;
And bid me say to you by word of mouth,—

O Cæsar!—
[Serving the body.]

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Push back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd:

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet;
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while;
Thou shalt not back, till I have borne thee come Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lead me your hand. [Exeunt with Cæsar's body.]

SCENE II.—The same. The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.

Cit. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.

Br. Then follow us, and give me audience
friends—

Cassius, go you into the other street,
And post the numbers— [here;]
Those that will bear me speak, let them stay;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Cæsar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,

When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit Cassius, with some of the Citizens.]

Brutus goes into the Rostrum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!

Br. Be patient till the last!

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour; and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe; censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his life.
If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer,—Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more.
Had you rather Cæsar were living and die all slaves; than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant,
I honour him; but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: There is tears for his love; joy for his virtue; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended.
Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman?
If any, speak; for him have I offended! Who is here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

Cit. None, Brutus, none.

[Several speaking at once.]
Br. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar, than you should do to Brutus.
The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitulum; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Antony and others, with Cæsar's body.

Here comes his body, mourn'd by Mark Antony; who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; As which of you shall not?
With this I depart; That as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself; when it shall please my country to need my death.

Re-enter Trebonius.

Cas. Where's Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd:
Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run,
As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures:—
That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,
And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life,
Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:
So are we Cæsar's friends, that have shak'd
His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,
And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood
Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords;
Then walk we forth, even to the market-place;
And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,
Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages
hence,

Shall this our brutish scene be acted over,
In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in That now on Pompey's lust lies along. [report.
No worthier than the last?

Cas. So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the knot of us be call'd:
The men that gave our country liberty.

Der. What, shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away:
Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels
With the most bold and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Bru. Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's. [knock]

Ser. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me
Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down:

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say.
Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest:
Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:

Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him;
Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony
May safely come to him, and be resolv'd
How Cæsar hath deserv'd to be in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead
So well as Brutus living; but will follow
The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,
Through all the hazards of this untrud state,
With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;
I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,
He shall be admitted: and, by my honour,
Depart untroubled.

Ser. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit Servant]

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish, we may: but yet have I a mind,
That fears him much; and my magnifying soul
Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Re-enter Antony.

Bru. But here comes Antony—Welcome, Mark
Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cæsar! Dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Strunk to this little measure?—Fare thee well.—
I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
Who else must bathe blood, who else is rank:
If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Cæsar's death's hour; nor no instrument

Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich
With the most noble blood of all this world.

I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard, [smoke,
Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and Foul'd your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die:

No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O Antony! beg not your death of us.
Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As, by our hands, and thus our present act,
You see we do: yet see you but our hands;
And this the bleeding business they have done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome
(As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity,) hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
To you our swords have leaden points, Mark An-
tony:

Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts,
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cas. Your voices shall be as strong to my ears
In the disposing of new dignities.

Bru. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude, heads themselves with fear,
And then we will deliver you the cause.

Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.
Let each man render me his bloody hand:
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;
Next, Cassius, do I take your hand.

Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Metellus;
Yours, Cimber;—and, my valiant Cæsar, yours:—
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.

Gentlemen all,—alas!—what shall I say?
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad ways you must cut me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.—

'Tis I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 'tis true:
If then thy spirit look upon us now,
Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,
Most noble! in the presence of thy corpse?

Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better, than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies.

Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou lay'd, brave hart;

Here didst thou fall; and here thy bannets stand,
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy death.
O world! thou wast the first to this hart;
And thus, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—
How like a deer, sicken'd by many princes,
Dost thou here lie!

Cas. Mark Antony,—
Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:

The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;
Then, in a friend, it is cold mockery.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends,
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was,
indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.

Friends am I with you all, and love you all;
Upon this hope, that you shall give us reasons,
Why, and wherein Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow;
The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
Of senators, of prætors, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exit.]
For, I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus!
The heavens speed thee in thine enterprize!
Sure, the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit
That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint:—
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;
Say, I am merry: come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The Capitol: the Senate sitting.

A crowd of people in the street leading to the Capitol; among them Artemidorus, and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Cæco, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lepidus, Popilius, Publius, and others.

Cæsar. The ides of March are come.

Sooths. Ay, Cæsar: but not gone.

Art. Hall, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,

At your best leisure, this his humble suit.
Art. O, Cæsar, read mine first: for mine's a suit
That touches Cæsar nearer: Read it, great Cæsar.

Cæsar. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cæsar. What is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.
Cæsar. What urge you your petitions in the Come to the Capitol. [street.]

Cæsar enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish your enterprize to-day may thrive.

Cæsar. What enterprize, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well.
[Advances to Cæsar.]

Brutus. What said Popilius Lenus?

Cæsar. He wish'd, to-day our enterprize might
I fear, our purpose be discovered. [Thrives.]

Brutus. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: Mark him.

Cæsar. Cæco, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—
Brutus, what shall he do? If this he known,
Cæco or Cæsar never shall turn back,
For I will slay myself.

Brutus. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Lenus speaks not of our purposes:
For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not chince.

Cæsar. Trebonius knows his time: for, look you,
Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.
[Exeunt Antony and Trebonius, Cæsar and the Senators take their seats.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,
And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Brutus. He is address'd: press near, and second him. [hand.]

Cin. Cæco, you are the first that rears your Cæsar. Are we all ready? what is now amiss,
That Cæsar, and his senate, must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant

Cæsar,
Metellus Cæsar throws before thy seat
As humble heart:— [Kneeling.]

Cæsar.

I must prevent thee, Cimber.
These couchings, and these lowly courtesies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men;
And turn pre-ordinance and first decree
Into the law of children. Be not fond.
To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools; I mean sweet
words.

Low crooked cart'ries, and base spaniel fawning.
Thy brother by decree is banish'd:
If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn, for him,
I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.
Know, Cæsar doth not wrong: nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own.

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear,
For the repelling of my banish'd brother?

Brutus. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar;
Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may
Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cæsar. What, Brutus!

Cæsar. Pardon, Cæsar: pardon:

As low as to thy foot doth Cæsar fall.

I'll beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæsar. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you;
If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:
But I am constant as the northern star,

Of whose true fix'd and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,
They are all fire, and every one doth shine;
But there's but one in all doth hold his place:

So, in the world; 'tis furnish'd well with men,
And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive,
Yet, in the number, I do know but one

That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion: and, that I am he,
Let me a little show, even in this:

That I was constant, Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Cæsar,—

Cæsar. Hence! Wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Cæsar,—

Cæsar. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Cæsar. Speak, hands, for me.

[Cæsar strikes Cæco in the neck. Cæsar catches hold of his arm. He is then stabbed by several other conspirators, and at last by Marcus Brutus.]

Cæsar. Et tu, Brute!—Then fall, Cæsar.

[Decius. The senators and people retire in confusion.]

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—
Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cæsar. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out,
Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!

Brutus. People, and senators! be not affrighted;
Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Cæco. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec.

Brutus. Where's Publius?

Cæsar. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Should chance— [Cæsar's]

Brutus. Talk not of standing:—Publius, good cheer:

There is no harm intended to your person.

Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cæsar. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Brutus. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed,
But we the doers.

Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell grey-beards the truth?
Decius, go tell them, Caesar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause.

Least I be laugh'd at, when I tell them so.
Cæs. The cause is in my will;—I will not come;
That is enough to satisfy the senate.

But, for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will tell you know:
Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home:
She dreamt to-night she saw my statue,

Which like a fountain, with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.
And these does she apply for warnings, portents,
And evils imminent; and on her knee

Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted;

It was a vision, fair and fortunate:
Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood; and that great men shall press
For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance.
This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Cæs. And this way have you well expounded it.
Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say:

And know it now: the senate have concluded
To give, this day, a crown to mighty Caesar.
If you shall send them word, you will not come.
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock

Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
Break up the senate till another time.
When Caesar's wife shall meet with better dreams.
If Caesar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
Lo, Caesar is afraid?

Pardon me, for by my dear, dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reason to my love is liable.

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now,
Calphurnia!

I am ashamed I did yield to them.—
Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Cæcus, Trebolius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good-morrow, Caesar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publius.—
What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?
Good-morrow, Cæcus.—Caius Ligarius,
Caesar was ne'er so much your enemy,
As that same age which hath made you lean.—
What isn't o'clock?

Br. Caesar, 'tis strucken eight.

Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

See! Antony, that reveals long nights,
Is notwithstanding up:—
Good-morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Caesar.
Cæs. But then prepare within:—
I am to blame to be thus waited for.—
Now, Cinna:—Now, Metellus:—What, Trebo-lus have an hour's talk in store for you?
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar, I will:—and so near will I be,
[Aside.]

That your best friends shall wish I had been further.

Cæs. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine
with me.

And we, like friends, will straightway go together.
Br. That every like is not the same, O Caesar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a paper.

Art. Caesar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cas-sius; come not near Caesar; have an eye to Cinna;
trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber;
Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about you: Security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, Artemidorus.

Here will I stand, till Caesar pass along,
And as a sutor will I give him this.
My heart laments, that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Caesar, thou may'st live:
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Say not to answer me, but get these gone:
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know thy errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there, and here
again.

Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there—
O constancy, be strong upon my side!
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!
I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!—
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Run to the Capitol, and nothing else!
And so return to you, and nothing else!

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look
well.

For he went sickly forth: And take good note,
What Caesar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Prythee, listen well.

I hear a bustling rumour, like a fray.

And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter Sothearius.

Por. Come hither, fellow

Which way hast thou been?

Soth. At mine own house, good lady

Por. What is't o'clock?

Soth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Caesar yet gone to the Capitol?

Soth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,

To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Caesar, hast thou?

Soth. That I have, lady: if it will please

Caesar.

To be so good to Caesar, as to hear me,

I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Soth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.

For, if this were true, then should I know this secret.

I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman that lord Brutus took to wife;
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman well-reputed; Cato's daughter.
Think you, I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd, and so husband'd? Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose them:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here, in the thigh: Can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Reader me worthy of this noble wife!

[Knocking within.
Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in a while;
And by and by thy kinsman shall partake
The secrets of my heart.
All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the charactery of my sad brows:—
Leave me with haste.]

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that, knocks?
Luc. Here is a sick man, that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.— Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how!

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble Ligarius.

Bru. O what a time have you chose out, brave
To wear a kerchief! 'Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,
I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!
Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins!

Thus, like an exorcism, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,
And I will strive with things impossible;

Yes, get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A piece of work, that will make sick men whole.

Lig. But are not some whole, that we must make sick?

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going—
To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;
And, with a heart new fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth,
That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me then. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in Cæsar's Palace.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Cæsar in his nightgown.

Cæsar. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace
to-night.

Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out,
Help, ho! They murder Cæsar! Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord!

Cæsar. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit]

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What mean you, Cæsar? Think you to walk forth!

You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Cæsar. Cæsar shall forth: The things that threaten'd me, [see

Ne'er look'd but on my back: when they shall
The face of Cæsar, they are vanish'd.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me. There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A lioness hath whelped in the streets;
And graves have yawnd, and yiel'd up their
dead:

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurtled in the air,
Horses did neigh, and dyin' men did groan;
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.

O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cæsar. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods?

Yet Cæsar shall go forth: for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen: [princes.

The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of kings.

Cæsar. Cowards die many times before their deaths:

The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should Speak that death, a necessary end, [fear;

Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

Serv. They would not have you stir forth today. Picking the entrails of an offering forth, [day.

They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæsar. The gods do this in shame of cowardice:
Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.

No, Cæsar shall not: Danger knows full well,
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.

We were two lions later'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible;
And Cæsar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consumed in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day: Call it my fear,
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.

We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house;
And he shall say, you are not well to-day:

Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cæsar. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well;
And, for thy humour, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Cæsar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy
Cæsar!

I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

Cæsar. And you are come in very happy time,
To bear my greeting to the senators.

And tell them, that I will not come to-day.
Cannot be false; and that I dare not, falser:
I will not come to-day: Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick.

Shall Cæsar send a lie?

Should outlive Cæsar: We shall find of him
A shrewd contriver; and, you know his owns,
If he improve them, may well stretch so far,
As to annoy us all: which to prevent,
Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.

Brus. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius
Cassius.

To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs;
Like wrath in death, and envy afterwards:
For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar.

Let us be sacrificers, but no butchers, Caius.
We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar;
And in the spirit of men there is no blood:
O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not diminish Cæsar! But, alas,
Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds:
And let our hearts, as subtle ministers do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide them. This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious;
Which as appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him;
For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm,
When Cæsar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I do fear him:
For in the ingrained love he bears to Cæsar,—

Brus. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him:
If he love Cæsar, all that he can do
Is to himself; take thought, and die for Cæsar:
And that were much he should: for he is given
To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Trub. There is no fear in him: let him not die;
For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

[Clock strikes.]

Brus. Peace, count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Trub. 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet,
Where Cæsar will come forth to-day, or no:
For he is superstitious grown of late:
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fancy, of dreams, and ceremonies:
It may be, these apparent prodigies,
The unaccustom'd terror of this night,
And the perception of his augurs,
May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that: If he be so resolv'd,
I can o'erway him: for he loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glaucous, elephants with holes,
Lions with toils, and men with flatterers;
But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers,
He says, he does: being then most flattered,
Let me work.

For I can give him humour the true bent;

And will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him. [most]

Brus. By the eighth hour: is that the utter-most. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Cæsar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey;
I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Brus. Now, good Metellus, go along by him;
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon us: We'll leave you, Brutus:— [her]

And, friends, disperse yourselves: but all remember what you have said, and show yourselves true
Romans.

Brus. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily;
Let not our looks put on our purposes;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits, and formal constancy:
And so, good Morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but Brutus.]

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep! it is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber:
Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men:
Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord!

Brus. Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you now?

It is not for your health, thus to commit

Your weak condition to the raw-cold morning

Por. Nor for your's neither. You have un-generally, Brutus,

Stolen from my bed: And yesternight, at supper
You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your arms crossed;
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks:
I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head,

And tog impatiently stamp'd with your foot:

Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not;

But, with an angry walture of your hand,

Gave sign for me to leave you: So I did;

Fearing to strengthen that impatience,

Which seem'd too much enkindled: and, withal,

Hoping it was but an effect of humour,

Which sometime hath his luny with every man.

It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;

And, could it work so much upon your shape,

As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,

I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,

Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Brus. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and, were he not in health,

He would embrace the means to come by it.

Brus. Why, as I do:—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick? and is it physical

To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours

Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick;

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,

To dare the vile contagion of the night?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air

To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus:

You have some sick offence within your mind,

Which, by the right and virtue of my place,

I ought to know of: And, anon, my knees,

I charge you, by my own commended beauty,

By all your vows of love, and that great vow

Which did incorporate and make us one,

That you unfold to me, yourself, my self,

Why you are heavy: and what men to-night

Have had resort to you; for here have been

Some six or seven, who did hide their faces

Even from darkness.

Brus. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need, if you were gentle

Brutus.

Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,

Is it excepted, I should know no secrets

That appertain to you? Am I yourself,

But, as it were, in suit, or limitation;

To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,

And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,

Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

Brus. You are my true and honourable wife,

Re-enter Lucius

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir. Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper, thus seal'd up; and, I am sure, It did not lie there when I went to bed.

Br. Get you to bed again, it is not day. Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?

Luc. I know not, sir.

Br. Look in the calendar, and bring me word

Luc. I will, sir.

Br. The exhalations, whizzing in the air, Give so much light, that I may read by them.

[Opens the letter, and reads.]

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.

Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake.

Such instigations have been often dropp'd

Where I have took them up.

Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out:

Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What!

Rome?

My ancestor did from the streets of Rome

The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.

Speak, strike, redress!—Am I entreated then

To speak, and strike? O Rome! I make thee promise

If the redress will follow, thou receivest.

Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter Lucius

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.

[Knock within.]

Br. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody

knocks.

[Exit Lucius.] Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar,

I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing

And the first motion, all the interim is

Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:

The genius and the mortal instruments

Are then in council; and the state of man,

Like to a little kingdom, suffers then

The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door,

Who doth desire to see you.

Br.

Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.

Br.

Do you know them?

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears.

And half their faces buried in their cloaks,

That by no means I may discover them

By any mark of favour.

Br.

Let them enter.

[Exit Lucius.]

'They are the faction. O conspiracy!—[light,

Sham't thou to show thy dangerous brow by

When evils are most free? O, then, by day,

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough

To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles and affability:

For if thou put thy native resemblance on,

Not Trebonius' self were dim enough

To hide thee from prevention.

Enter Cassius, Cæsar, Decius, Cinna, Metellus

Cleber, and Trebonius.

Cæ. I think we are too bold upon your rest:

Good morrow, Brutus: Do we trouble you?

Br. I have been up this hour; awake, all night.

Knew I these men, that came along with you?

Cæ. Yes, every man of them; and no man here,

But honours you: and every one doth wish,

You had but that opinion of yourself,

Which every noble Roman bears of you.

'Tis Trebonius.

Br. He is welcome neither.

Cæ. This Decius Brutus.

Br.

He is welcome too.

Cæ. This, Cæsar; this, Cinna;

And this, Metellus Cimber.

Br.

They are all welcome.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves

Between your eyes and night?

Cæ. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.]

Dec. Here lies the east: Duth not the day break

Cæsar. No.

Cin. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and you grey lines,

'Tis that fret the clouds, are messengers of day

Cæsar. You shall confess, that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises;

Which is a great way growing on the south,

Weighing the youthful season of the year.

Some two months hence, up higher toward the north

He first presents his fire; and the high east

Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Br. Give us your hands all over, one by one.

Cæ. And let us swear our resolution.

Br. No, not an oath: If not the faces of men,

The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—

If these be motives weak, break off betimes,

And every man hence to his idle bed;

So let high-sighted tyranny range on,

Till each man drop by lottery. But if these,

As I am sure they do, hear fire enough

To kindle courage, and to steel with valour

The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,

What need we any spur, but our own cause,

To prick us to redress? What other bond,

Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,

And will not utter? and what other oath,

Than honesty to honesty engag'd,

That this shall be, or we will fall for it?

Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous,

Old feeble carriers, and such suffering souls

That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear

Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain

The even virtue of our enterprise,

Nor th'innocent metal of our spirits,

To think that, or our cause, or our performance,

Did need an oath: when every drop of blood,

That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,

Is guilty of a several bastardy,

If he do break the smallest particle

Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cæ. But what of Cæsar? Shall we sound him?

I think, he will stand very strout with us.

Cæsar. Let us not leave him out.

Cin.

No, by no means.

Met. O let us have him: for his silver hairs

Will purchase us a good opinion,

And his grey cheeks will more commend our deeds:

It shall be said, his judgment rul'd our hands;

Our youths, and wildness, shall no wit appear,

But all be buried in his gravity. [Him.]

Br. O, name him not: let us not break with

For he will never follow any thing

That other men begin.

Cæ.

Then leave him out.

Cæsar. Indeed, he is not fit.

Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only

Cæsar?

[meat.]

Cæ. Decius, well urg'd:—I think it is not

Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,

As doth the lion in the Capitol.

A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Cæsar. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean: Is it not,
Cassius?

Cæsar. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have thews and limbs like to their ancestors;
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.

Cæsar. Indeed, they say the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Cæsar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cæsar. I know where I will wear this dagger then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak must strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be relativeto the strength of spirit:
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.

Cæsar. So can I. So can I.
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cæsar. And why should Cæsar be a tyrant then?
Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees, the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straw: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæsar? But, O grief!
Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know
My answer must be made: But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Cæsar. You speak to Cæsar: and to such a man,
That is no fltering tell-tale. Hold my hand:
Be factious for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cæsar. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Cassius, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-miud Romans,
To undergo with me an enterprize
Of honourable dangerous consequence;
And I do know by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: For now, this fearful night,
There is no stir, or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element
Is favour'd, like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Cæsar. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cæsar. 'Tis Cinna. I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend.—Cinna, where hast thou go?

Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cæsar. No, it is Cæsar; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not stand for, Cinna?

Cin. I'm glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cæsar. Am I not stand for, Cinna? Tell me.
Yes.

You are. O, Cassius, if you could but win
The noble Brutus to our party—

Cæsar. Be you content: Good Cinna, take the paper.

And look you lay it in the praetor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it: and throw this
In at his window: set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done. [Exit]

Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find Id Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there!

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber: and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will hit,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cæsar. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre.

[Exit Cinna.]

Come, Cæsar, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Cæsar. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts:
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.

Cæsar. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him.

You have right well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight: and, ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Brutus's Orchard.

Enter Brutus.

Brutus. What, Lucius, ho!

I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to-day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when! Awake, I say! What, Lucius!

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?

Brutus. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:

When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit]

Brutus. It must be by his death; and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:—
How that might change his nature, there's the question.

It is the bright day, that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him!—
That;—

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins
Remorse from power: And, to speak truth of Cæsar,

I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the topmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scornful the base degrees
By which he did ascend: So Cæsar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel
Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus: that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities;
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous;

And kill him in the shell.

offered them his throat to cut. — An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues:—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done, or said, any thing amiss, he desired their wormships to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no need to be taken of them; if Cæsar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Brutus. And after that, he came, thus end, away!

Cæsar. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Cæsar. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Cæsar. Nay, as I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' the face again: But those that understood him, smiled at one another, and shook their heads: but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Cæsar?

Cæsar. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Cæsar. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good: I will expect you.

Cæsar. Do so: Farewell, both. [Exit Cæsar.]

Brutus. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be! He was quick mettle when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now, in execution Of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form. This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite. [Enter Brutus.]

Brutus. And so it is. For this time I will leave To-morrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so:—till then, think of the world. [Exit Brutus.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see, Thy honourable metal may be wrought From that it is dispos'd: Therefore 'tis meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes: For who so firm, that cannot be seduc'd? Cæsar doth hear me hard: But he loves Brutus: If I were Brutus now, and he were Cæsar, He should not honour me. I will this night, In several hands, at his windows throw, As if they came in at several cities, Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at: And, after this, let Cæsar see him sure; For we will stake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Street.

Thunder and lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, Cæsar, with his sword drawn, and Cicero.

Cic. Good even, Cæsar: Brought you Cæsar home?

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?
Cæsar. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth

Shakes like a thing unfirm? O Cicero, I have seen tempests, when the soulding winds Have riv'd the knobby oaks; and I have seen The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam, To be exalted with the threatening clouds:

But never till to-night, never till now, Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.

Either there is a civil strife in heaven:

Or else the world, too stony with the gods,

Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Cæsar. A common slave (you know him well by sight.)

Held up his left hand, which did flame, and burn

Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,

Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.

Besides, (I have not since put up my sword.)

Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,

Without annoying me: and there were drawn

Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women,

Transformed with their fear, who swore, they saw

Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets.

And, yesterday, the bird of night did sit,

Even at noon day, upon the market-place,

Hooting, and shrieking. When these prodigies

Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,

These are their reasons,—They are natural:

For, I believe, they are portentous things

Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-dispos'd time:

But men may construe things after their fashions,

Clear from the purpose of the things themselves.

Comes Cæsar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Cæsar. He doth; for he did bid Antonius

Send word to you, he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good night then, Cæsar: this disturbed sky

Is not to walk in.

Cæsar. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit Cicero.]

Enter Cassius.

Cas. Who's there?

Cæsar. A Roman.

Cas. Cæsar, by your voice.

Cæsar. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night

is this?

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Cæsar. Whoever knew the heavens' meaning so?

Cas. Those that have known the earth so full of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,

Submitting me unto the perilous night;

And, thus unbraced, Cæsar, as you see,

Have har'd my bosom to the thunder-stone;

And, when the cross-blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heaven, I did present myself

Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Cæsar. But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. [Light.]

Cas. You are dull, Cæsar; and those sparks of

That should be in a Roman, you do want,

Or else you use not: You look pale, and gaze,

And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder

To see the strange impatience of the heavens:

But if you would consider the true cause,

Why all these fires, why all these ghiding ghosts,

Why birds and beasts, from quality and kind;

Why old men, fools, and children calculate;

Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures, and pre-form'd faculties,

To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,

That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits,

To make them instruments of fear, and warning,

Unto some monstrous state. Now could I, Cæsar,

Name to thee a man most like this dreadful night;

That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars

[do believe, that these appulses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar.
Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow
world,

Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates.
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus, and Cæsar: What should be in that
Cæsar?

Why should that name be sounded more than Write them together, your's is as fair a name:
Soud them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.

[Shout.]
Now in the name of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed?
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd!
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome.

That her wild walks encompass'd but one man!
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
'There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome.
As easily as a king.'

[Ious;]
Bru. That you do love me I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim;
How I have thought of this and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter: for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear: and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I'm glad, that my weak words [Brutus]
Have struck but thus much show of fire from

Re-enter Cæsar and his Train

Bru. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Cas. As they pass by, pluck Cæsar by the
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day.

Bru. I will do so.—But, look you, Cæsar,
The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train:
Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Cæsar will tell us what the matter is.
Cas. Antonius!

Ant. Cæsar!

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men and such as sleep o' nights;
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. 'Would he were fatter:—But I fear him
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid

So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much:
He is a great observer, and he looks [plays]
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves to
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music;
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease.
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves,
And therefore are they very dangerous.

I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear, for always I am Cæsar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exeunt Cæsar and his train. Cæsar stops behind.]

Cas. You pull'd me by the cloak; Would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Cæsar; tell us what hath chanc'd today. That Cæsar looks so sad?

Cas. Why you were with him, were you not?
Bru. I should not then ask Cæsar what hath chanc'd.

Cas. Why, there was a crown offer'd him;
and being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?
Cæsar. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice; What was the last cry for?

Cas. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Cas. Ay, marry was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than the other; and at every putting by, mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?

Cas. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Cæsar.

Cas. I can as well be hang'd, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery. I did not mark it.
I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;
—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it.

Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chopp'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refused the crown, that it had almost choke'd Cæsar; for he swoon'd;
—and, fell down at it: And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you; What I did Cæsar
swoon?

Cas. He fell down in the market-place and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like: he hath the falling sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you and I,
And honest Cæsar, we have the falling sickness.

Cas. I know not what you mean by that; but,
I am sure Cæsar fell down. If the tag-rag people did put, clasp him, and kiss him, according as he pleased, and displeased them, as they used to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Cas. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he pluck'd me ope his doublet, and Cæsar. Peace, ho! Cæsar speaks.

[Musick ceases.
Calphurnia,—

Cæs. Here, my lord.
Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course—Antonius!
Ant. Cæsar, my lord!

Cæs. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia: for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their sterili curse.

Ant. I shall remember:
When Cæsar says, Do this, it is perform'd
Cæs. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.
[Musick.

Sooth. Cæsar.
Cæs. Ha! Who calls?
Cæs. Bid every noise be still:—Peace yet again.
[Musick ceases.

Cæs. Who is it in the press, that calls on me?
I bear a tongue, shriller than all the musick,
Cry, Cæsar: Speak; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.
Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. What man is that?
Bru. A soothsayer, hush you heware the ides of March.

Cæs. Set him before me; let me see his face.
Cæs. Follow, come from the throng: Look upon Cæsar. [agrain.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once
Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. He is a dreamer; let us leave him:—pass.
[Exeunt all but Bru. and Cæs.

Cæs. Will you go see the order of the course?
Bru. Not I.
Cæs. I pray you, do.

Bru. I am not gamesome: I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Let me not flatter, Cæsar, your desires;
I'll leave you.

Cæs. Brutus, I do observe you now of late:
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love, as I was wont to have:
You hear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cæsar,
Be not deceiv'd: If I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Ver'd I am,

Of late, with passions of some difference,
Conceptions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours:

But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd;
[Among which number, Cæsar, he you use:]
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cæs. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion;

By means whereof, this breast of mine hath barbed Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.
Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No, Cæsar: for the eye sees not itself,
But by reflection, by some other thing.

Cæs. 'Tis just:
And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirror, as will turn
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
[Except immortal Cæsar,] speaking of Brutus,
And grooming underneath his age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me,
Cæsar,

That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me?

Cæs. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to
And, since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself which you yet know not of.
And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laughier, or did use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish, and shout.
Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear, the
people
Chime Cæsar for their king.
Cæs. Ay, do you fear it?
Then must I think you would not have it so.
Bru. I would not, Cæsar; yet I love him
well:—
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?
If it be aught toward the general good,
Set honour in one eye, and death in the other,
And I will look on both indifferently.
For, let the gods so speed me, as I love
The name of honour more than I fear death.
Cæs. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favour.
Well, honour is the subject of my story.—
I cannot tell, what you and other men
Think of this life; but, for my single self,
I had as lief not be, as live to be
In awe of such a thing as I myself.
I was born free as Cæsar; so were you:
We both have fed as well; and we can both Endure the winter's cold, as well as he.
For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,
Cæsar said to me, *Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?*—Upon the word,
Accounted as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews: throwing it aside
And stemming it with hearts of controversy.
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cæsar cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink.
I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of Tyber

Did I the tired Cæsar: And this man
Is now become a god; and Cæsar is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body
To Cæsar's carelessly but not on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the
world,
Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and wrote his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cry'd, Give me some drink, Titinius.
As a sick girl, Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm above. [Shout. Flourish.
Bru. Another general shout!

That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me? [Shout.
Cæs. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to
And, since you know you cannot see yourself

Endure the winter's cold, as well as he.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,
Cæsar said to me, *Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?*—Upon the word,
Accounted as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.

The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews: throwing it aside
And stemming it with hearts of controversy.
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cæsar cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink.

I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of
Tyber

Did I the tired Cæsar: And this man
Is now become a god; and Cæsar is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body
To Cæsar's carelessly but not on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the
world,
Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and wrote his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cry'd, Give me some drink, Titinius.
As a sick girl, Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm above. [Shout. Flourish.
Bru. Another general shout!

SCENE.—during a great part of the Play, at Rome; afterwards at Sardis; and near Philippi.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and a rabble of Citizens.

Flav. Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;

Is this a holiday? What! know you not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk, Upon a labours day, without the sign Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?

1 Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—You, sir; what trade are you?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am out, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? Answer me directly.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad souls.

Mar. What trade, thou knave, thou naughty knave, what trade?

2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me; yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow!

1 Cit. Why, sir, cobbler you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the awl; I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever tread upon neat's-leather, have gone upon my handy-work.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day?

Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome, To grace in captive hands his chariot-wheels?

You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,

To towers, and windows, yea, to chimney-tops, Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-hour day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his chariot with apparel,

Have you not made an universal shout, That 'Tyber trembled underneath her banks,

To hear the replication of your sounds, Made in her concave shores?

And do you now put on your best attire?

And do you now call out a holiday?

And do you now strew flowers in his way, That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?

Be gone; Run to your houses, fall upon your knees, Pray to the gods to intermit the plague That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen; and, for this fault,

Assemble all the poor men of your sort; Draw them to 'Tyber banks, and weep your tears into the channel, till the lowest stream Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

[Exeunt Citizens]

See, where their basest metal be not mov'd: They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.

Go you down that way towards the Capitol: This way will I: Disrobe the images, If you do find them deck'd with cerements.

Mar. May we do so?

You know, it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images Be hung with Cæsar's trophies. I'll about, And drive away the vulgar from the streets:

So do you too, where you perceive them thick. These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing,

Will make him fly an ordinary pitch; Who else would soar above the view of men, And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

SCENE II.—The same. A publick Place.

Enter, in procession, with music, Cæsar; Antonius, for the course; Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, and Casca, a great crowd following; among them a Soothsayer.

Cæs. Calphurnia.—

With our own charge; making a treaty, where
There was a yielding: This admits no excuse.

Ans. He approaches, you shall hear him.

Enter Coriolanus, with drums and colours; a crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody pressure, led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home.

Do more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace,
With no less honour to the Antates,
Than shame to the Romans; and we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal of the senate, what We have compounded on.

Ans. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—How now!—

Ans. Ay, traitor, Marcus.

Cor. Marcus!

Ans. Ay, Marcus, Caius Marcus; Dost thou
think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name
Coriolanus, in Corioli?
You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously
He hath betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome
(I say, your city), to his wife and mother;
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory;
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?

Ans. Name not the god, thou'rt lay of tears,—

Cor. Ha!

Ans. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!—
Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave
lords,

Must give this ear the lie: and his own notion (Who wears my stripes impress'd on him: that must bear

My beating to his grave;) shall join to thrust
The lie into him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Voices; men and ladies,
Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False bound!
If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,

That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I
Flutter'd your Voices in Corioli:
Alone I did it.—Boy!

Ans. Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholly braggar
'Fore your own eyes and ears?

Cor. Let him die for't. [Several speak at once.
Cit. (Speaking promiscuously.) Tear him to pieces, do it presently. He killed my son;—my daughter;—He killed my cousin Marcus;—He killed my father.—

2 Lord. Peace, ho!—no outrage;—peace.

The man is noble, and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth. His last offence to us
Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O, that I had him,

With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,

To use my lawful sword!

Ans. Insolent villain!

Cor. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

[Aufidius and the Complotors draw, and kill Coriolanus, who falls, and Aufidius stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Ans. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullus,—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all, be quiet;

Put up your swords.

Ans. My lords, when you shall know (as in this
rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot,) the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice

That he is thus cut off. Pardon it your honours,

To call me to your senate, I'll deliver

Myself your loyal servant, or endure

Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body,

And moan you for him: let him be regarded

As the most noble corpse, that ever herald

Doll follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience

Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.

Let's make the best of it.

Ans. My rage is gone,

And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up:—

Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers; I'll be one.—

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully:

Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city he Hath wak'd and unchid'd many a one

Which to this hour bewail the injury,

Yet he shall have a noble memory.—

Ans. [Exeunt, bearing the body of Coriolanus.
A dead march sounded.

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune,
And hale him up and down; all swearing, if
The Roman ladies bring not comfort home,
They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sic. What's the news?
Mess. Good news, good news;—the ladies have prevailed.

The Voices are dislodg'd, and Marcius gone:
A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,
Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire:
Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it?

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,
As the reconforted through the gates. Why,
hark you:

[Trumpets and halloo boys sounded, and drums beaten, all together. Shouting also within.]

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Hark you!

[Shouting again.]

Mess. This is good news:
I will go meet the ladies. This Volturnia
Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full of tribunes such as you,
A sea and land full: You have pray'd well to-day;
This morning, for ten thousand of your throats
I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy!

[Shouting and music.]

Sic. First, the gods bless you for their tidings:
next,

Accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all

Great cause to give great thanks!

Sic. They are near the city!

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them.

And help the joy.

[Going.]

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome:
Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,
And make triumphant fires; strew flowers before
them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius,
Repeat him with the welcome of his mother;
Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome!

All. Welcome, ladies!

Welcome! [A flourish with drums and trumpets.]

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Antium. A publick Place.

Enter Tullia Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here:
Deliver them this paper: having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place; where I,
Even to their and in the common's ears,
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse,
The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words: Despatch!

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Enter Three or Four Conspirators of Aufidius's faction.

Most welcome!

1 Con. How is it with our general?

Auf. Even so,
As with a man by his own aims empoison'd,
And with his charity slain.

2 Con. Most noble sir,
If you do hold the same intent wherein
You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell;

We must proceed, as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst 'Twixt you there's difference; but the fall of either
Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it;
And my pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. I raise'd him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth: Who being so height-
en'd,

He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing so my friends; and, to this end,
He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,
When he did stand for consul, which he lost
By lack of stooping,—

Auf. That I would have spoke of:
Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth:
Presented to my knife his throat: I took him:
Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way
In all his own desires; nay, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish.
My best and freshest men; serv'd his designments
In mine own person: help to reap the fame,
Which he did end all his; and took some pride
To do myself this wrong: till, at the last,
I seem'd his follower, not partner; and
He wag'd me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord:
The army marvel'd at it. And, in the last,
When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd
For no less spoil, than glory.—

Auf. There was it:
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him.
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action: Therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the people.]

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base threats
With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounced shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more;
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it;
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it
What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy times: but there we sat,
Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our loves, answering the March to assault thy country, than to tread (Trust to't, thou shalt not.) on thy mother's

That brought thee to this world. (wrench)

Ver. Ay, and on mine.
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your Living to time. (noise)

Boy. He shall not tread on me;
I'll run away till I am huzer, but then I'll fight.
Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be.
Requires nor child, nor woman's face to see.
I have eat too long. (Rising)

Ver. Nay, no not from us thus.
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
The Volscians whom you serve, you might condemn
As prisoners of your honour: No; our suit [us,
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscians
May say, This mercy we have show'd; the Romans,
This we receiv'd; and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, Be bless'd
For making up this peace! Thou know'st, great son.

The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap, is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dog'd with curses:
Whose censure thou wilt writ.—The men was noble,
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out;
Destroy'd his country; and his name remains
To the enemy age abhor'd. Speak to me, son:
Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods;
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should not rive an oak. Why dost not speak!

Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak
you;

He cares not for your weeping. Speak thou, boy:
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world (prate,

More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me
Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy: (life
When she (poor hen!) fond of no second brood,
Has clerk'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
Laden with honour. Say, my request's unjust,
And spare me back: But, if it be not so,
Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague
thee,

That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away:
Down, ladies: let us shame him with our knees.
To his surname Coriolanus' looke more pride,
Than pity to our prayers. Down: An end:
This is the last:—So we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us:
This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
Dot's knees, and holds up hands, for fellowship,
Does reason our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny't.—Come, let us go:
This fellow had a Volscian to his mother;
His wife is in Coriolanus' and his child
Like him by chance:—Yet give us our despatches:
I'm wash'd until our city be afire,
And then I'll speak a little

Cor. O mother, mother!
[Holding Volturnus by the beard, silent,
What have you done! Behold the heavens do open,

The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O!
You have won a happy victory to Rome:

But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd.
If not most mortal to him. But, let it come:—
Audacious though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,
Were you in my stead, say, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius?
Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn you were:
And, sir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What peace you'll make, advise me: for my part,
I'll not to Rome. I'll back with you; and pray
you.

Stand to me in this cause.—O mother! wife!
Auf. I am glad, thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour
At difference in these: out of that I'll work
Myself a former fortune. (Aside.)

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.
Cor. Ay, by and by;
[To Volturnus, Virgilia, &c.
But we will drink together; and you shall hear
A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you: all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace. (Exeunt.)

SCENE IV.—Rome. A Public Place.
Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Men. See you yond' coign o' the Capitol; yond' corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say, there is no hope in't; our throats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is a difference between a grub, and a butterfly: yet your butterfly was a grub.
This Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He lov'd his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me; and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight year old horse. 'The tartness of his face wears ripe grapes.'
When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his tread. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye; talks like a knell, and his hem is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god, but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is 'long of you

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we have shew'd him, we respect not them; and be returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house:

Volumnia. Why dost not speak?
Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs?

COROLANUS. Act V., Scene III.

SCENE III. — The Tent of Coriolanus.Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host. — My partner in this action, You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends You have respected: stopp'd your ears against The general suit of Rome; never admitted A private whisper, no, not with such friends That thought them sure of you.

Cor. 'Tis this last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome, Loved me above the measure of a father; Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge Was to send him: for whose old love, I have (Though I shew'd sourly to him,) once more offer'd.

The first conditions, which they did refuse, And cannot now accept, to grace him only. That thought he could do more; a very little I've yielded to: Fresh embassies, and suits, Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter Will I lend ear to. — Ha! what shout is this?

(Shout within.) Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the same time 'tis made? I will not. —

Enter, in mourning habits, Virgilia, Volumnia, leading young Marcius, Valeria, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand The grand-child to her blood. But, out, affection! All bond and privilege of nature, break! Let it be virtuous, to be obstinate — What is that curtsey worth? I or those doves' eyes, Which can make gods forsworn? — I melt, and am not

Of stronger earth than others. — My mother bows; As if Olympus to a molehill should In supplication nod: and my young boy Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great nature cries, Deny not. — Let the Voices Plough Rome, and harrow Italy: I'll never Be such a gauding to obey instinct; but stand, As if a man were author of himself. And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband! Cor. These eyes are not the same I wooed in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd, Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now, I have forgot my part, and I am out, Even to a full diaphane. Best of my flesh, Forgive my tyranny; but do not say, For that, Forgive our Romans. — O, a kiss Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge: Now by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip Hath virgin'd it e'er since. — You gods! I pray, And the most noble nether of the world, Leave unsaluted: Sink, my knee, i' the earth; (Kneels.)

Of thy deep duty more impression show

'Tis that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up blessed! Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint, I kneel before thee; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all the while Between the child and parent. (Kneels.)

Cor. What is this?

Your knees to me? to your corrected son? Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun; Murd'ring impossibility, to make What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;

I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publius. The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle, That's curdled by the frost from purest snow, And hangs on Dian's temple: Dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours Which by the interpretation of full time May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers, With the consent of supreme Jove, informs Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove

To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars Like a great sun-mark, standing every flaw, And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, arrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy.

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself, Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace:

Or, if you'd ask, remember this before: The things, I have forsworn to grant, may never Be held by you demands. Do not bid meDismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Again with Rome's mechanics: — Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: Desire not To alloy my races and revenge, with Your colder reasons.

Vol. O, no more, no more! You have said, you will not grant us any thing: For we have nothing else to ask, but that Which you deny already: Yet we will ask: That, if you fail in our request, the blame May hang upon your hardness; therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Voices, mark; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private. — (Raiment, quest.)

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our And state of bodies would bewray what life: We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself, How more unfortunate than all living women Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with Constraints them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow:

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see The son, the husband, and the father, tearing His country's bowels out. And to pour we, Thine unity's most capital: thou barr'st us Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy: For how can we, Alas! how can we for our country pray, (Tory.) Whereto we are bound: together with thy voice, Whereto we are bound? Alack! or we must lose The country, our dear nurse; or else thy person, Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win: for either thou Must, as a foreign recruit, be led With manacles through our streets, or else Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruins:

And bear the palm for having bravely shed Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son, I purpose not to wait on fortune, till These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee Rather to show a noble grace to both parts, Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner

Com. He'll never hear him.
 Cic. Not I.
 Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
 Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury
 The gaster to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
 'Twas very faintly he said, Rise; dismiss'd me Thus, with his speechless hand: What he would do,
 He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
 Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions;
 So that all hope is vain.
 Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
 Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
 For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's hence,
 And with our fair entreaties haste them on.
 (Exeunt.)

SCENE II.—An advanced Post of the Volscian
 Camp before Rome. The Guard at their stations.

Enter to them Menenius.

1 G. Stay: Whence are you?
 2 G. Stand, and go back.
 Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: But, by your leave,
 I am an officer of state, and come
 To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?
 Men. From Rome.
 1 G. You may not pass, you must return: our general

Will no more hear from thence. (before)
 2 G. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire,
 You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
 If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
 And of his friends there, it is like to blanks,
 My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so: go back: the virtue of your name is not here passible.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
 Thy general is my lover: I have been
 The look of his good acts, whence men have read
 His fame unparallel'd, happily amplified;
 For I have ever verified my friends,
 (Of whom he's chief,) with all the state that verity
 Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
 Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
 I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
 Have, almost, stamp'd the leavening: therefore,
 fellow,
 I must have leave to pass.

1 G. 'Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have utter'd words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chaste. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factitious on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, (as you say, you have,) I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does.
 Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palmed intercession of such a decayed dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived: therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

 Men. Surral, if thy captain knew I were here,
 he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.
 1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say; so, lest I let forth your half pint of blood:—
 back,—that's the utmost of your having;—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,—

Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, your companion, I'll say an errand for you; you shall know now, that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a jack guardant cannot offend me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not i' the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering:
 behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.—The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does!
 O, my son! my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee: but being assured, none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sight; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dream of it upon this varlet here; this who, like a block, hath doted my access to thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. Hw! away!

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs

Are servanted to others: Though I owe
 My revenge properly, my resentment lies
 In Volscian breasts: That we have been familiar, Ingrate forgetfulness shall remove, rather Than pity note how much.—Therefore, be gone.
 Mine ears against your suits are stronger, than Your gates against my force. Yet, for I lov'd
 thee,

Take this along; I writ it for thy sake

(Gives a letter.)

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,
 I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
 Was my beloved in Rome: yet thou behold'st—
 Auf. You keep a constant temper.

(Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.)

1 G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power: You know the way home again?

1 G. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?

2 G. What cause, do you think, I have to
 swoon?

Men. I neither care for the world, nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, or so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself, fears it not from another.
 Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age! I say to you, as I was said to, Away!
 (Exit.)

1 G. A noble fellow. I warrant him.

2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: He is the rock, the oak not to be wind shaken.

(Exeunt.)

SCENE VII. — A Camp; at a small distance from Rome.

Enter Aufidius and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman? [Exit]
Lien. I do not know what witchcraft's in him;
Your soldiers use him as the grace fore meat;
They talk at table, and their thanks at end;
And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now;
Unless, by using means, I leave the foot
Of our design. He hears himself more prouder
Even to my person, than I thought he would
When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature
In that's no chancing; and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lien. Yet I wish, sir,
(I mean, for your particular,) you had not Join'd in communion with him; but either
Had borne the action of yourself, or else
To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and he thou sure.
When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent
To the vulgar eye, that he hears all things fairly,
And shows good husbandry for the Volscian
state;

Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone
That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine,
Where'er we came to our account.

Lien. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry
Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him as he sits down:
And the nobility of Rome are his:
The senators, and patricians, love him too:
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty
To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome,
As is the upspring to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honour even: whether 'twas pride,
Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man: whether defect of judgment,
To fail in the disposing of these chances
Which he was lord of: or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion, but commanding
peace

Even with the same austerity and garb
As he controll'd the war; but, one of these,
(As he hath spies of them all, not all,
For I dare so far free him,) made him fear'd.
So hated, and so less wh'd: But he has a merit,
To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair
To extol what it hath done.
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights fouler, strength by strengths do fall

Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine, Thou art possessor of all; then shortly art thou mine. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I — Rome. A publick Place.

*Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus,
and others.*

Men. I'll not go: you hear, what he hath said.

Which was sometime his general: who lov'd him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me, father.
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him,
A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear!

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to: forbad all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name i' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so: you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coal cheap: A noble memory!

Com. I minded him, how royal 'twas to pardon
When it was less expected: He replied
It was a bare petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd.

Men. Very well;
Could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard
For his private friends: His answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of unsome musty chaff: He said, 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unbarn'd,
And still to nose, the offence.

Men. For one poor grain
Or two? I am one of those; his mother, wife,
His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains:

You are the musty chaff: and you are smelt
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuse your
In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good
tongue

More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.

Cic. I pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?
Brut. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men. Well, and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard: what then? —
But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness! Say't be so!

Cic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the manner
As you intended well. [Exit]

Men. I'll undertake it:
I think, he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well: he had not dind:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We put upon the morning, are unsharp

To give or to forgive: but when we have stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch
Till he be dieted to my request, [Exit]
And then I'll set upon him.

Brut. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success. [Exit.]

And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sec. Tell not me;
I know, this cannot be.
Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles, in great earnestness, are gone
All to the senate-house: some news is come, (ing
That turns their countenances.

Sec. 'Tis this slave:—
Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his rain-
Nothing but his report! (ing!

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sec. What more fearful?
Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths.
(How probable, I do not know.) That Marcius
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome;
And vows revenge as spacious, as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sec. This is most likely!
Bru. Rain'd only that the weaker sort may wish Good Marcius home again.

Sec. The very trick on't.
Mess. This is unlikely:
He and Aufidius can no more stone,
Than violent contrariety.

Enter another Messenger

Mess. You are sent for to the senate;
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, races
Upon our territories: and have already O'erborne their way, consumed with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. O, you have made good work!
Mess. What news! what news!
Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters,
and
To melt the city leads upon your gates:
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses:—
Mess. What's the news! what's the news!
Com. Your temples burned in their ornament;
and

Your franchise, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an angry's horse.

Mess. Pray now, your news!—
Com. You have made fair work, I fear me:—Pray your news!

If Marcius should be join'd with Volscianus.—
Com. If!

He is their god; he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature.
That shapes men better: and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Mess. You have made good work,
You, and your apron men: you that stand so Upon the voice of occupation, and (much
The breath of garlick-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

Mess. As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit: You have made fair work!

Bru. But in this true, sir!
Com. Ay: and you'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the regiments
Do smugly revolt; and, who rears,
Are only mock'd for valiant ignorance,

And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame him?

Your enemies, and his, find something in him.
Mess. We are all unclean, unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?
The tribunes cannot do't for shame: the people
Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they (even
Should say, Be good to Rome, they charge'd him
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.

Mess. 'Tis true:
If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, Beseech you, cease.—You have made fair
hands,

You, and your crafts! you have crafted fair!
Com. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

Tri. Say not, we brought it.
Mess. How! Was it we! We lov'd him; but,
like beasts,

And cowardly nobles, gave way to your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But, I fear,
They'll roar him in again. Tullus Aufidius,
'The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer:—Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Mess. Here comes the cluster.—
And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasy caps, in looking at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not in hurt upon a soldier's head,
Which will not prove a whip; as many conceals,
As you throw caps up, will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter;
If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

Cit. 'Faith, we hear fearful news.
1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.
3 Cit. And so did I: and, to say the truth, so did very many of us: That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, your voices!
Mess. You have made
Good work, you and your cry!—Shall us to the
Com. O, ay: what else? (Capitol!

[Exeunt Com. and Mess.
Sic. Go, masters, get you home, be not demay'd;

These are a side, that would be glad to have
This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home,
And show no sign of fear.

1 Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were i'the wrong,
when we banished him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home.
[Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. I do not like this news.
Sec. Nor I.

Mess. Let's to the Capitol:—'Would, half my would buy this for a lie!

Sec. Pray, let us go.
[I stand.

1. 2 Serv. What, what, what! let's partake.
3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations;
I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1. 2 Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thrack our general, — Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thrack our general?
3 Serv. I do not say thrack our general; but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on't; before Coriolani he scouted him and notched him like a cartoonado.

2 Serv. Ah, he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news!

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o' the table: no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand baid before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with's hand, and turns up the white o' the eye, to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowle the porter of Rome gates by the ears: He will now down all before him, and leave his passage polled.

2 Serv. And he's as like to do't, as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do't! he will do't: For, look you, sir, he has as many friends as enemies: which friends, sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, sir,) show themselves (as we term it,) his friends, whilst he's in brocade.

1 Serv. Directitude! what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like comes after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's spritely, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; muffled, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a gutter of more bastard children, than war's a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so: and as war, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher; so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason: because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money, I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. — Rome. A Publick place.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame if the present peace
And quietness o' the people, which before

Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends

Blush, that the world goes well; who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold
Dissensions numbers pestering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Bru. We stood to't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind
Of late. — Hail, sir!

Men. Hall to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus, sir, is not much miss'd,
But with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand;

And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. Ah! well; and might have been much better, if

He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where as he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his Hear nothing from him. [Exit.]

Enter Three or Four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good-even, our neighbours.

Bru. Good-even to you all, good-even to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees.

Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: We wish'd
Coriolanus

Had lov'd you as we did.

Cit. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Citizens.]

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying, Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving. —

Sic. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation,
If he had gone forth consul, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Sue safe and still without him. [Rome]

Enter Edilia.

Ed. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison.

Reports, — the Volces with two several powers
Are enter'd in the Roman territories;

And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world;

Which were inshe'll'd, when Marcius stood for
And durst not once peep out. [Rome]

Sic. Come, what talk you
Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rammour whip'd. — It cannot
The Volces dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record, that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this
Least you shall chance to whip your informant.

Cor. Ay; 'tis an homelier service than to meddle with thy mistress:
Thou prat'st, and prat'st; serve with thy trencher,
hence: [Beats him away.]

Enter Aufidius and the second Servant.

Auf. Where is this fellow?
2 Serv. Here, sir: I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what would'st thou? Thy name?
Why speak'st not? Speak, man: What's thy name?
Cor. If Tullus, [Unmistaking.]

Not yet thou know'st me, and seem'st me, dost not think me for the man I am, necessarily Commands me name myself

Auf. What is thy name?
[Servant retire.]

Cor. A name unseasonable to Volscian ears,
And harsh to sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?
Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,
Thou show'st a noble vessel: What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown: Know'st thou
Cor. I know thee not:—Thy name? [see yet]
Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Volscians, Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may
My surname, Coriolanus: The painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are requited;
But with that surname; a good memory,
And witness of the malice and displeasure
Which thou should'st bear me: only that name
The cruelty and envy of the people, [renounce];
Permitted by our dastard nobles, who
Have all forsworn me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffered me by the voice of slaves to be Whom'd out of Rome. Now, thus extremity
Hath brought me to thy hearth; Not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if
I had fear'd death, of all the men i'th' world
I would have lov'd this: but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. 'Thou if thou hast
A heart of wreak in thee, that will revenge Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those names [straight,
Of shame won through thy country, speed thee
And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,
That my revenged services may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my cunker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fiends. But if so be Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more far,
Thou art tir'd, then, in a word, I also am [tunes
Larger to live most wroth, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice:
Which not to cut, would show thee but a fool;
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tears of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live, but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcius, Marcius,
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from
my heart
A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter [say Should from yon cloud speak divine things, and
'Tis true; I'd not believe them more than thee,
All noble Marcius.—O, let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the marrow with splinters! Here I clip
The steel of my sword; and do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sighed truer breath: but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my weaklied mistress saw Beside thy threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell
thee,

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't: Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dream'd of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbacking helms, fastening each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius,

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and, pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-brat. O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods!
Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have

The leading of thine own revenge, take
The one half of my commission; and set down,—
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways:

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fructify them, ere destroying. But come in;
Let us commend these first to thy choice, that shall Say, yet, to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand! Most welcome!

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.]

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have struck him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.
1 Serv. What an arm he had! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, no thought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so; looking as it were,— 'Would I were hang'd, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: he is simply the rarest man i'th' world.

1 Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he, you wot use.

2 Serv. Who? my master?

1 Serv. He's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six of him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that; for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves, I can tell you news; news, you rascals.

Vol. Hath been! Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness, to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. Thus lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banished?

Rom. Banished, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, 'The fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband.' Your noble Tullius Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vol. A most royal one: the centurions, and their charges, ductively billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the more, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Antium. Before Aufidius's House.

Enter Coriolanus, in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium: City, 'Tis I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair offices 'fore my wars Have I heard groan, and drop: then know me not; [stomach.]

Lest that thy wives with spits, and boys with

Enter a Citizen.

In play battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state, At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, 'beseech you?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir; farewell. [Exit Citizen.]

O, world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn, Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart, Whose houses, whose beds, whose meals, and exercise, Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love Unseparable, shall within this hour, In a dissolution of a dot, break out To bitterest enmity: So feildest foes, Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep

To take the one the other, by some chance, Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,

And interjoin their issues: So with me:—My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon This enemy town.—I'll enter: if he slay me, He does fair justice: if he give me way, I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same. A Hall in Aufidius's House.

Musick within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here?

I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotes? my master calls for him.

Cotes! [Exit.]

Enter Coriolanus.

Cor. A goodly house. The feast smells well: Appear not like a guest. [But I]

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away! Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house: Prythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand: I will not hurt your hearth.

3 Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Some pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you: pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, go!

And batten on cold bits [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, will you not? Prythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here. [Exit.]

2 Serv. And I shouldst thou!

Cor. Under the canopy?

3 Serv. Under-the-canopy?

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. I'the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. I'the city of kites and crows?—What an ass is it!—Then thou dwellest with daws too!

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir? Do you meddle with my master?

I have seen these stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hard'ning spectacles: tell these sad women,
'Tis fated to wait inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. — My mother, you wot
well

My hazards still have been your soles: and Believe't not lightly, (though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen,) your son

Will, or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautious baits and practices.

Vol. My first son.
Whither wilt go? Take good Cominius
With thee awhile: Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!
Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us.
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needier.

Cor. Fare ye well: —
Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the war's surfeits, to go rove with one
That's yet unbruised: bring me but out at gate. —
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still: and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear. — Come, let's not weep. —
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand.
Com. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter Scinius, Brutus, and an Edile.

Sc. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further. —
The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
In his behalf.

Br. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.

Sc. Bid them home:
Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Br. Dismiss them home.
[Exit Edile.]

Enter Volumentia, Virginia, and Menenius.

Here comes his mother.

Sc. Let's not meet her.

Br. Why?

Sc. They say, she's mad.

Br. They have ta'en note of us:

Keep on your way.

Vol. O you're well met: The hoarded plague
Of the gods

Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear, —

Nay, and you shall hear some. — Will you be gone?
[To Brutus.]

Vir. You shall stay too: [To Scin.] I would, I had the power
To say so to my husband.

Sc. Are you mankind?
Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame? — Note but this fool. —

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou forship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sc. O blessed heavens!
Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise
words;

And for Rome's good — I'll tell thee what: — I let Nay, but thou shalt stay too: — I would my arm
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him.
His good sword in his hand.

Sc. What then?

Vir. What then!

He'll make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all —

Good men, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace

Sc. I would he had continu'd to his country,

As he began; and not unknit himself

The noble knot he made.

Br. I would he had.

Vol. I would he had! 'Twas you incens'd the rabble:

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysterious which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Br. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, set you going: [This:]

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear

As far as doth the Capitol exceed

The newest houses in Rome — so far, my son,

(This lady's husband here, this, do you see,) —

Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Br. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sc. Why stay we to be hated
With one that wants her wit?

Vol. Take my prayers with you. —
I would the gods had nothing else to do

[Exeunt Tribunes.]

But to confirm my curses! Could I meet them

But once a day, it would unloose my heart

Of what lies heavy on't.

Men. You have told them home,

And, by my troth, you've cause. You'll sup with
me!

Vol. Anger's my nut; I sup upon myself.

And so shall starve with feeding. — Come, let's go:

Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do

In anger Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fye, fye, fye! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — A Highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman and a Volscian, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me your name, I think, is Adran.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against them: Know you me yet?

Vol. Nicanor! No.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard, when I last saw you;

but your favour is well appeared by your tongue.

What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out: there you have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

You find him like a soldier: Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than every you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter,
That being pleas'd for counsel with full voice,
I'm so dishonour'd, that the very hour
You take it off again?

Sen. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true I ought so. [take

Sen. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to
From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;

For which you are a traitor to the people

Cor. How! Traitor!

Men. Nay; temperately: Your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!

Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune!

Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,

In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in

Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,

Thou best, unto thee, with a voice as free

As I do pray the gods.

Sen. Mark you this, people?

Cl. To the rock with him; to the rock with him

Sen. Peace.

We need not put new matter to his charge:

What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,

Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,

Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying

Those whose great power must try him; even thus,

So criminal, and in such capital kind,

Deserves the extremest death.

Br. But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What, do you prate of service?

Br. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You!

Men. Is this

The promise that you made your mother? Know,

I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further;

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,

Vagabond exile, flying; Pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word;

Nor check my courage for what they can give,

To have't with saying, Good morrow.

Sen. For that he has

(As much as in him lies) from time to time

Carried against the people, seeking means

To pluck away their power; as now at last

Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence

Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers

That do distribute it: In the name o' the people, and

In the power of us the tribunes, we,

Even from this instant, banish him our city:

In peril of precipitation

From off the rock Tarpeian, never more

To enter our Rome gates: I' the people's name,

I say, it shall be so.

Cl. It shall be so,

It shall be so: let him away: he's banish'd.

And so it shall be. [fretful]

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common

Sen. He's sentenc'd; no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak:

I have been consul, and can show from Rome,

Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love

My country's good, with a respect more tender,

More holy and profound, than mine own life,

My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase

And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that—

Sen. We know your drift: Speak what!

Br. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd.

As enemy to the people, and his country:

It shall be so.

Cl. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath
I hate

As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize

As the dead carcasses of unburied men

That do corrupt my air, I banish you;

And here remain with your uncertainty!

Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!

Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,

Fan you into despair! Have the power still

To banish your defenders: till, at length,

Your ignorance, (which finds us, till it feels,)

Making no reservation of yourselves,

(Still your own foes), deliver you, as most

Abated captives, to some nation

That won you without blows! Despising,

For you, the city, thus I turn my back:

There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, Menenius,

Senators, and Patricians.

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone

Cl. Our enemy's banish'd! he is gone! Hoo!

hoo!

[The people shout, and throw up their caps.

Sen. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,

As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;

Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard

Attend us through the city. [come:—

Cl. Come, come, let us see him out at gates:

The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter Coriolanus, Volunnius, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:
—the best

With many heads butts me away—Nay, mother,

Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;

That common chances common men could bear;

That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike

Show'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,

When most struck home, being gentle wounded,

craves

A noble cunning: you were us'd to lead me

With precepts, that would make invincible

The heart that could't them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I pray thee, w. man,—

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in

And occupations perish! [Rome.

Cor. What, what, what!

I shall be lov'd, when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,

Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,

If you had seen the wife of Hercules,

Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd

Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius,

Droop not; mine.—Farewell, my wife! my mother!

I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,

Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,

And venomous to mine eyes.—My sometime general.

You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calumny, or by absence; all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech!

Com. I think, 'twill serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will:—

Prythee, now, say, you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd scouge?
Must I

With my base tongue, give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do't:
Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust should grind
it. [place it—

And throw it 'gainst the wind. — To the market-You've put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I prythee now, sweet son; as thou hast
My praises made thee first a soldier, so, [said
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't:

Away my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an enutch, or the virgin voice
That babies lull asleep! The smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks; and school boys' tears take up
The glumes of my sight! A hoggar's tongue Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,

Who how'd but in my stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an aim! — I will not do't:
I see I surcease to honour mine own truth,
And, by my body's action, teach my mind
A most insubstantial business.

Vol. At thy choice then:

To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour,
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin; let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiancy was mine, thou suck'd'st it from
But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content;

Mother, I'm going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home below'd.

Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going:
Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul;
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I the way of flattery, further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.

Com. Away, the tribunes do attend you: arm
yourself

To answer mildly: for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly:—Pray you let us go:
Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The same. The Forum

Enter Scinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects

Tyrannical power: if he evade us there,
Inform him with his envy to the people;
And that the spoil, got on the Antistee,
Was ne'er distributed. —

Enter an Edile.

What, will he come?

Ed. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?

Ed. With old Menenius, and those senators

That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue

Of all the voices that we have procur'd,

Set down by the poll?

Ed. I have; 'tis ready, here.

Ed. Have you collected them by tribes?

Ed. I have

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither:

And when they hear me say, I shall be so

I the right and strength o' the commons, he it either

For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them,

If I say live, cry live; if death, cry death;

Insisting on the old prerogative

And power i' the truth o' the cause.

Ed. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,

Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd

Enforce the present execution

Of what we chance to sentence. Very well.

Ed. Make them be strong and ready for this hint.

When we shall hap to give't them.

Bru. Go about it. —

[Exit Edile.

Put him to choler straight: He hath been us'd

Ever to conquer, and to have his worth

Of contradiction: Being once chaf'd, he cannot

Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks

What's in his heart: and that is there, which looks

With us to break his neck.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius, Senators, and Patricians.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece

Will bear the knave by the volume. — The honour'd gale

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

Supplied with worthy men! plant love among us!

Through our harts temples with the shows of peace,

And tick our streets with war!

I Sen.

Men. A noble wish.

Amen, amen!

Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Ed. List to your tribunes; audience: [I say,

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say. — Peace, ho.

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here?

Sic.

I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,

Allow their officers, and are content

To suffer lawful censure for such faults

As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor.

I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says, he is content:

The warlike service he has done, consider;

Think on the wounds his body bears, which show

Like graves i' the holy churchyard!

Cor.

Scorn with bribes,

Scars to move laughter only.

Men.

Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen.

He throws without distinction Give me leave.
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
(In peace) to his utmost peril.

Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody; and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sc. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer:—
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.
Sc. Meet on the market-place:—We'll attend
you there:

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Mrs. I'll bring him to you:—
I let me desire your company. [To the Senators.]

He must come.
Or what is worst will follow.
1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — A Room in Coriolanus's House.

Enter Coriolanus and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present me
Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock;
That the precipitous might down stretch
Believe the beam of sight, yet will I still Be thus to them.

Enter Volunius.

1 Pat. You do the nobler.
Cor. I muse, my mother
Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them wretched vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats: to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace, or war. I talk of you;

[To Volunius.]
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have False to my nature? Rather say, I play
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go, [you are,
Vol. You might have been enough the man
With striving less to be so: Lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.
Vol. Ay, and bury 'em.

Enter Menenius and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough;
You must return, and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsel'd:
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger,
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman:
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that
The violent fit 'o' the time craves it as play-act
For the whole state, I would put mine armour
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?
Mrs. Return to the tribunes.
Cor. Well,

What then? what then?
Mrs. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute:
Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
[rep.]
I'the war do grow together: Grant that, and tell
In peace, what each of them by th' other lose,
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!
Men. A great demand.

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem
The same you are not, (which, for your best ends
You adopt your policy,) how is it less or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?
Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction, Nor by the matter which your heart prompts
you to,

But with such words that are but rotes in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance, to your husband's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood—
I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd,
I should do so in honour: I am in this.
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general love,
How you can frown, than spend a frown upon them
For the inheritance of their lives, and safeguard
Of what that want might run.

Men. Noble lady!—
Come, go with us; speak fair: you may save so
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I pry'thee, now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it, (here be with them,)

Thy knee bussing the stones, (for in such baseness
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears,) waving thy hand,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble, as the ripest mulberry,
That will not hold the handling: Or, say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim.
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power, and person.

Mrs. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, all their hearts were yours:

For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pry'thee now
Go, and be rul'd: although I know thou had'st
Follow'd thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Thou'lt flatter him as a tower. Here is Cominius.

Enter Cominius.

Com. I have been i'the market-place; and as
'tis fit

And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous
Where the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon
And bear him to the rock. [him,

Cor. No; I'll die here.
[Drawing his sword.]
There's some among you have belied me fighting;
Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen
me

Men. Down with that sword:—Tribunes, withdraw awhile.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help, help, Marcius! help,
You that be noble: help him, young and old!

Cl. Down with him, down with him!
[In this mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ediles, and the people, are all beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone, away.
All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone.

Cor. Stand fast;
We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

1 Sen. The gods forbid!
I prythee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. Fur 'tis a sore upon us.
You cannot tent yourself: Begone, hence you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.
Cor. I would they were barbarians, (as they are,

Though in Rome litter'd,) not Romans, (as they Though call'd 't' the porch o' the Capitol.)—

Men. Be gone:
Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;
One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground.

Men. I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself
Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And unhand'd as call'd foolery, when it stands
Against a falling fabrick.—Will you hence.

Before the tag return! whose rage doth read
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone:
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With these that have but little; this must be patch'd

With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.
[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, and others.]

1 Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune
Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth.

What has breast forges, that his tongue must
And, being angry, does forget that ever 'twas
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.]

Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were a-head!
Men. I would they were in Tyber!—What, the vengeance,

Could be not speak them fair!

Re-enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the rabble.

Sc. Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—

Sc. He shall be thrown down the Tarpean rock

With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall so on him further trial
Than the severity of the publick power,
Which he so sets at nought.

1 Cl. He shall well know,
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.

Cl. He shall, sure on't.
[Several speak together.]

Men. Sir,—

Sc. Peace.

Men. Do not cry, havoc, where you should but hunt
With modest warrant.

Sc. Sir, how comes it, that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak:—
As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults:—

Sc. Consul!—what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He a consul!

Cl. No, no, no, no.

Men. If by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good
people,

I may be heard, I'd crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm,
Than so much loss of time.

Sc. Speak briefly then,
For we are peremptory, to despatch
This viperous traitor: to eject him hence,
Were but one danger; and to keep him there,
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed,
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!

Sc. He's a disease, that must be cut away.

Men. O, he's a limb, that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death?
Killing our enemies! The blood he hath lost,
(Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath,
By many an ounce,) he dropp'd it for his country:
And, what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all, that do't, and suffer it,
A brand to the end o' the world.

Sc. This is clean kam.

Bru. Merely awry: When he did love his
It honour'd him. [country,

Men. The service of the first
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was?

Bru. We'll hear no more:—
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;
Least his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-fac'd race, when it shall find
The arm of unaccount'd swiftness, will, too late,
The leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by protest parties (as he is belov'd) break out, [cous,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Bru. If it were an,—

Sc. What do ye talk?

Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Our Ediles smacked! ourselves roasted!—Come:—

Men. Consider this;—He has been bred 't' the wars

Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bouted language; meal and bran together

Thou ever frown'd in Greece! By Jove himself,
It makes the consuls base: and my soul akes,
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other.

Com. Well—on to the market-place.
Cor. Whoever gave that counsel to give forth
The corn o' the store-house gratis, as 'twas us'd
Sometime in Greece.—

Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. (Though there the people had more absolute power.)

I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One, that speaks thus, their voice!

Cor. I'll give my reasons.
More worthy than their voices. They know, the corn

Was not our recompense; resting well assur'd
They us'd did service for't: Being press'd to the war.

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates: this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis: being i' the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the native
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?

How shall this treason multiplied digest
The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express
What's like to be, their words.—We did request it;

We are the greater poll, and in true tear
They gave us our demands:—Thus we debate

The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares, fears: which will in time break ope
The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crows

To peck the eagles.—

Men. Come, enough.
Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more:
What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Sent what I end withal!—Thus double worship,—

When one part does disdain with cause, the other Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom

Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance,—it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while

To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it follows,
[you,—

Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore, beseech
You that will be less fearful than discreet;
That love the fundamental part of state,

More than you doubt the change of't; that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous sickness

That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and berenes the state
Of that integrity which should become it;
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For the ill which doth control it.

Bru. He has said enough.
Cor. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee!
What should the people do with these build tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience falls
To the greater bench: in a rebellion,

When what's not meet, but what must be, was law.

Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet, be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i' the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason.
Sic. This a counsel! no.

Bru. The Ædiles, ho!—Let him be apprehended

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit Brutus.] in whose name, myself

Attach thee, as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee
And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat.
Sen. & Pat. We'll surely him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.
Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy houses

Out of thy garments.
Sic. Help, ye citizens.

Re-enter Brutus, with the Ædiles, and a rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.
Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, Ædiles.
Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[Several speak.]
2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about Coriolanus.]
Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what ho!—
Scimus, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Cit. Peace, peace, peace: stay, hold, peace!
Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath;
Confusion's near; I cannot speak:—You tribunes
To the people,—Coriolanus, patience!—

Speak, good Scimus.
Sic. Hear me, people;—Peace.

Cit. Let's hear our tribunes:—Peace. Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcus would have all from you: Marcus,
Whom late you've nam'd for consul.

Men. Fye, fye, fye!
This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.
Sic. What is the city: but the people.

Cit. True,
The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd
The people's magistrates.

Cit. You so remain.
Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat;
To bring the roof to the foundation;
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
in heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.
Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,
Or let us lose it:—We do here pronounce,
Upon the part o' the people, in whose power
We were elected their's, Marcus is worthy
Of present death.

Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him;
Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him.
Cit. Yield, Marcus, yield.

Men. Hear me, one word.
Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ædi. Peace, peace.
Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's
friend,

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?
 Lar. He had, my lord; and that it was, which
 Our swifter conquest

Cor. So then the Voices stand but as at first;
 Really, when time shall prompt them, to make Upon us again

Com. They are worn, lord consul, on,
 That we shall hardly in our ages see
 Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?
 Lar. On safeguard he came to me; and did curse

Against the Voices, for they had so vilely
 Yekled the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of us?

Lar. He did, my lord

Cor. How I what?
 Lar. How often he had met you, sword to
 sword:

That, of all things upon the earth, he hated
 Your person most: that he would pawn his for-
 To hopeless restitution, so he might

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lar. At Antium.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
 To oppose his hatred fully—Welcome home.

(To Lartius.)

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
 The tongues o' the common mouth. I do deprecate
 them;

For they do prank them in authority,
 Against all noble sufferance

Sec. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Br. It will be dangerous to Go on: no further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the
 Br. Commons, no?

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place

Br. The people are incens'd against him.

Sec. Stop,

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?

Must these have voices, that can yield them now,
 And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your officers?

Br. (tooth) You being their mouths, why rule you not their
 I have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpose'd thing, and grows by plot,
 To curb the will of the nobility:

Softer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
 Nor ever will be rul'd.

Br. Call't not a plot:

The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,
 When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;

Scandal'd the supplicants for the people; call'd
 them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Br. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Br. How! I inform them?

Cor. You are like to do such business.

Br. No, unlike.

Each way, to better yours.

Cor. Why then should I be consul? By your clouds,

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
 Your fellow tribune.

Sec. You show too much of that,

For which the people stir: if you will pass
 To where you are bound, you must inquire your way.

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;

Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd:—Set on.—Thus pall'ring

Becomes not Rome: nor has Coriolanus

Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely
 I the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak't again:—

Men. Not now, not now.

1 Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends,
 I crave their pardons:—

For the multitude, rank-scented many, let them Regard me as I do not flatter, and

Therein behold themselves: I say again,
 In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
 Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd,

and scatter'd.

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;

Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
 Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

1 Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more?

As for my country I have shed my blood,
 Not fearing outward force, so shall my tongue

Chain words till their decay, against these menzels,
 Which we disdain about t'other us, yet sought
 The very way to catch them

Br. You speak o' the people,

As if you were a gal to punish, not
 A man of their affinity.

Sec. 'Twere well,

We let the people know't.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,

By Jove, 'twould be my mind.

It is a mind,

That shall remain a poison where it is,
 Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!—

Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark you
 His absolute shall?

Com. 'Twas from the canon.

Cor. Shall!

O good, but most unwise patricians, why,
 You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
 That with his peremptory shall, being but
 The horn and sound o' the monster's, wants not spirit

To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch,
 And make your channel him? If he have power,

Then veil your ignorance: if none, awake
 Your dangerous lenity. If you are learned,

Be not as common fools; if you are not,
 Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,

If they be senators: and they are no less,
 When both your voices blend, the greatest taste

Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrates:

And such a one as he who puts his shall,
 His popular shall, against a graver touch

Sc.

[Exeunt Coriol. and Menen.]
He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
'Tis warm at his heart.

Br. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sc. How now, masters? have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir. [Loves.]

Br. We pray the gods, he may deserve your

2 Cit. Amen, sir: To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly,
He flouted us down-right.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock us. [Says.]

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but
He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his country.

Sc. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Cit. No; no man saw 'em.

[Several speak.]

3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consul, says he: aged custom,
But by your voices would not so permit me;

Your voices therefore: When we granted that,
Here was, — I thank you for your voices, — thank you, — [voices.]

Your most sweet voices: — now you have left your

I have no further wish you: — Was not this mockery?

Sc. Why, either were you ignorant to see't?
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness

To yield your voices?

Br. Could you not have told him,
As you were lesson'd, — when he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy; ever spake against

Your liberties, and the charters that you bear
I' the body of the weal: and now, arriving

A place of potency, and sway o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain

Fast foe to the plebeian, your voices might
Be curses to yourselves: You should have said,

That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for; so his gracious nature

Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love,

Standing your friendly lord.

Sc. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit,

And try'd his inclination: from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,

As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or else it would have call'd his surly nature,

Which easily endures no article
Tying him to ought; so, putting him to rage,

You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unselected.

Br. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in free contempt,

When he did need your loves: and do you think,
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,

When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bulks

No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to cry
Against the relationship of judgment?

Sc. Have you
Ere now deny'd the asker? and, now again,

On him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your aid-for-tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him
2 Cit. And will deny him: [Exit.]

I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Cit. I twice five hundred, and their friends to peace 'em. [Friends.]

Br. Get you hence, instantly: and tell those They have chose a consul, that will from them take

Their liberties; make them of no more voice

Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
And therefore kept to do so.

Sc. Let them assemble;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke

Your ignorant election: Enforce his pride,
And his old hate unto you; besides, forget not

With what contempt he wore the humble weed:
How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your loves,

Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,

Which gingerly, ungravelly, he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Br. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes: that we labour'd
(No impediment between) but that you must

Cast your election on him.

Sc. Say, you chose him
More after our commandment, than as guided

By your own true affections; and that, your minds
Pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do

Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul: Lay the fault on us. [Exit.]

Br. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to How youngly he began to serve his country,

How long continued: and what stuck he springs of.

The noble blood o' the Marquians: from whence
That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,

Who, after great Hostilius, here was king:
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,

That our best water brought by conduits hath:
And Censorinus, darling of the people,

And nobly nam'd so, being censor twice,
Was his great ancestor.

Sc. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought

To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you have found,

Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke

Your sudden approbation.

Br. Say, you ne'er had done't,
(Harp on that still) but by our putting on:

And presently, when you have drawn your arms
Repair to the Capitol [Exit.]

Cit. We will so: almost all [Several speak.]
Repent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens.]

Br. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard,

Than stay, past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage

With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sc. To the Capitol:
Come; we'll be there before the stream o' the

people;

And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have guided onward. [Exeunt]

ACT III.

SCENE I. — The same. A Street.

Corneio. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Censorinus, Titus Lartius, Senators, and Patricians

I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus and Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility; mark his behaviour. We are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content.

[Exeunt.]

Men. O sir, you are not right: have you not known

The worthiest men have done 't?

Cor. What must I say?—What must I pray sir.—Plague upon't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace:—Look, sir;—my wounds:—

I got them in my country's service, when Some certain of your brethren ruin'd, and ran From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods! You must not speak of that: you must desire To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang 'em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues Which our divines lose by them.

Men. You'll mar all; I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to them, I pray you, in wholesome manner. [Exit.]

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces, And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace,

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.
1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to't.

Cor. Mine own desert.
2 Cit. Your own desert? Cor. Ay, not Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?
Cor. No, sir:

'Twas never my desire yet, To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, We hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the citizenship!

1 Cit. The price is, sir, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly! Sir, I pray, let me ha't: I have wounds to show you.

Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, sir:

What say you?

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir:—
There is in all two worthy voices begg'd:—
I have your thanks; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again.—But 't is no matter. [Exeunt two Citizens.]

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the time of your voices, that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your envious!

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends: you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them: 'tis a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly: that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them: I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Exeunt.]

Cor. Most sweet voices!—
Better it is to die, better to starve, Than crave the hire which first we do deserve. Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here, To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear, Their needless vouchers? Custom calls me to't:—What custom wills, in all things should we do't. The dust on antique time would lie unswept, And mountainous error be too highly heap'd. For truth to over-peer,—Rather than fool it so, Let the high office and the honour go. To one that would do thus,—I am half through; The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices.—
Your voices: for your voices I have fought; Watch'd for your voices; for your voices, bear Of wounds two dozen odd; battles three six I have seen and heard of; for your voices, have Done many things, some less, some more: for your voices:

Indeed, I would be consul.
5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice

6 Cit. Therefore let him be consul: The gods give him joy: and make him good friend to the people!

All. Amen, amen.—
God save thee, noble consul! [Exeunt Citizens. Worthy voices!]

Re-enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice: Remains, That, in the official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharged:

The people do admit you; and are summoned To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus

Cor. May I then change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,

Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you along?

Men. We stay here for the people.

Men. Masters o' the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter,
(That's thousand to one good one,) when you now see.

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one of his ears to hear it:—Proceed, Cominus.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,

The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fourth
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,

When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him: he bestrid
An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats,

When he might not the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he would like a you;

And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd all swords o' the garland. For this Before and in Corioli, let me say, (last,
I cannot speak him home: He stopp'd the fliers;
And, by his rare example, made the coward

Turn terror into sport: as waves before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd. (stamp)
And fell below his stem: his sword (death's)

Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was timed with drum-croak: alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' the city, which he painted

With shameless destiny, and then came off,
And with a sudden re-enforcement struck
Corioli, like a planet: Now all's his:
When by and by the din of war 'gun pierce

His ready sense: then straight his doubled spirit
Re-quick'n'd what in flesh was fatigued,
And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if

'Twere a perpetual spout: and, till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with pausing.

Men. Worthy man!
I Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world: he covets less
Than misery itself would give; rewards
His deeds with doing them; and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Men. He's right noble;
Let him be call'd for.
I Sen. Call for Coriolanus.

Qf. He doth appear.
Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.
Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erstep that custom: for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage:
please you.

That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Ser. the people
Must have their voices: neither will they hate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't:—
Pray you, go fit you to the custom; and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that?
Cor. To brag unto them,—Thus I did, and thus;—
Show them the unaking scars which I should
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire (louds,
Of their breath only:—

Men. Do not stand upon't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them,—and to our noble consul
With we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!
(Flourish. Then exeat Senators.)
Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.
Sic. May they perceive his intent! He will require them.

As if he did content him to be requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here; on the market-place,
I know they do attend us. (Exeunt.)

SCENE III.—The same. The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them: so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stand up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us
the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been call'd so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some sable, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent—one direct way should be at once to all points
o' the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way do you judge my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will, 'tis strongly wedged up in a block-head; but if it were at liberty, 't would, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog: where being three parts melted away with rotten dew, the fourth would return for conscience' sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—
You may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it.

Bra. It was his word: O, he would miss it, rather Than carry it, but by the salt o' the earth to him, And the desire of the nobles.

Sec. I wish no better, Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it In execution.

Bra. 'Tis most like, he will.
Sec. It shall be to him then, as our good will; A sure destruction.

Bra. So it must fall out To him, or our authorities. For an end, We must suggest the people, in what hatred He shall hold them; that, to his power, he would Have made them mutes, silenc'd their pleaders, and Dispersed their freedoms: leaving them, In human action and capacity,

Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world, Than ciphers in their war; who have their provand Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows For making under them.

Sec. 'Tis, as you say, suggested At some time when his scolding insolence Shall teach the people, (which time shall not want, If he be put upon't; and that's as easy, As to set dogs on sheep,) will be his fire To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bra. What's the matter?
Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis thought

That Marcus shall be consul: I have seen The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind To hear him speak: The matrons flung their gloves,

Ladies made their scarfs and handkerchiefs, Upon him as he pass'd: the nobles bent As to Jove's statue; and the common made A shower, and thunder, with their caps, and shouts: I never saw the like.

Bra. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time, But hearts for the event.

Sec. Have with you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same. The Capitol.

Enter Two Officers, to lay cushions.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here: How many stand for cushions!

2 Off. 'Tis thought of, they say: but 'tis thought of every one. Coriolanus will carry it.

Off. That's a brave fellow; but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. Faith, there have been many great men that have flattered the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and, out of his noble carelessness, let's them plainly be.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he wou'd indifferently twist doing them neither good nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country: And his account is not by such easy degrees as these, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, banqueted without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury: to report otherwise, were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him: he is a worthy man: Make way, they are coming.

A Scream. Enter, with lictors before them, Cominius the Consul, Menenius, Coriolanus, many other Senators, Sicinius and Brutus. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.

Men. Having determin'd of the Voices, and To send for Titus Lartius, it remains.

As the main point of this our after-meeting.

To gratify his noble services, that (please you, Hath thus stood for his country: Therefore, Most reverend and grave elders, to desire The present counsel, and last general In our well-found successes, to report A little of that worthy work perform'd By Caius Marcus Coriolanus; whom We meet here, both to thank, and to remember With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius: Leave nothing out for length, and make us think, Rather our state's defective for requital, Than we to stretch it out. Masters o' the people, We do request your kindest ears; and, after, Your loving motion toward the common body, To yield what passes here.

Sec. We are convened Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts Inclined to honour and advance The theme of our assembly.

Bra. Which the rather We shall be pleas'd to do, if he remember A kinder value of the people, than He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. 'That's off, that's off: I would you rather had been silent: Please you To hear Cominius speak!

Bra. Most willingly: But yet my caution was more pertinent, Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people, But he him not to be their bedfellow.

Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place. (Coriolanus rises, and offers to go out.)

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon: I had rather have my wounds to heal again, Than hear say how I got them.

Bra. Sir, I hope, My words dis-bench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir: yet oft, When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.

You smoth' not, therefore hurt not: But, your I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head 'T' the sun,

When the alarm were struck, than idly sit To hear my nothings monster'd.

[Exit Coriolanus.]

Mes. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?
Vol. Titus Lartius writes.—they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had stand by him, I would not have been so fiduious for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, wow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true:—Where is he wounded?—God save your good worships! [To the Tribunes, who come forward] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. I the shoulder, and i' the left arm: There will be large cicatrices to show the people, when he shall stand by his place. He received, in the repulse of Tarquin, seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One in the neck, and two in the thigh,—there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave: [a shout and flourish] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him

He carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears:
 Death, that dark spirit, in's nerry arm doth lie;
 Which being advanc'd, declines; and then men die.

A great Trumpets sound. Enter Cominius and Titus Lartius; between them, Coriolanus, crowned with an oak leaf garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli's gates: where he hath won, With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these In honour follows, Coriolanus:—Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

[Flourish.]
All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this, it does offend my heart; Pray bow, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother.—
Cor. O!

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods For my prosperity.

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up; My gentle Marcus, worthy Caius, and by deed-achieving honour newly nam'd,

What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee? But, O thy wife—

Cor. My gracious silence, hail! Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home.

That weep'd to see me triumph? Ah, my dear, Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear,

And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!
Cor. And live you yet!—O my sweet lady, pardon.

[To Valeria.]

Vol. I know not where to turn;—O welcome home!

And welcome, general;—And you are welcome

Mes. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep.

And I could laugh; I am light and heavy: Well—A curse begin at very root of his heart,

That is not glad to see thee!—You are three That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men,

We have some old crab-trees here at home, that be grafted to your relish.

Yet welcome, warriors: We call a nettle, but a nettle; and The faults of fools, but folly.

Com. Ever right.
Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on.
Cor. Your hand, and yours: [To his wife and another.]

Ere in our own house I do shade my head, The good patricians must be visited;

From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings, But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have lived To see inherited my very wishes,

And the buildings of my fancy: only there Is one thing wanting, which I doubt not, but Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother, I had rather be their servant in my way, Than away with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitol.
[Flourish.] Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before.

The Tribunes remain.
Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleav'd sights

Are spectacled to see him: Your prattling nurse Into a rapture lets her baby cry,

While she chums him; the kitchen malkin pines Her richest lorum 'bout her reechy neck,

Clambering the walls to eye him: Stalls, bulks, windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd With variable complexions; all agreeing

In earnestness to see him: sold-shows dainties Do press among the popular throngs, and puff

To win a vulgar station: our well-dances Commit the war of white and damask, in

Their nicely-gawdied cheeks, to the wanton spoil Of Pkissbus' burning kisses: such a pothor,

As if that whatsoever god, who lends him, Were slyly crept into his human powers,

And gave him graceful posture.

Sc. On the sudden, I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may.

During his power, go sleep.

Sc. He cannot temperately transport his lust From where he should begin, and end; but will Love those that he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sc. Doubt not, the countess, for whom we stand.

But they, upon their ancient malice, will Forget, with the least cause, these his new honours;

Which that he'll give them, make as little question As he is proud to do't.

Bru. I heard him swear, Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put The unpleas' vesture of humility;

Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds To the people, beg their stinking breath.

Sc. 'Tis right.

How the world goes; that to the pace of it
I may spar on my journey.

1 Sol.

I shall, sir. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A publick Place.

Enter Menenius, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Men. The augurer tells me, we shall have news
to-night.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Murcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that bays like a bear.

Men. He's a bear, indeed, that lives like a lamb.
You two are old men; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. Is what enormity is Marcius poor, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now.—Will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter: for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your disposition the reins, and be angry at your pleasures: at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcius for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone: for your helps are many; or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O, that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O, that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (alias fools,) as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of alloying Tyber in't; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint: hasty, and tender-like, upon too trivial motion: one that courtesies more with the buttock of the night than with the forehead of the morning. What I think, I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meeting too such weak-men as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurguses) is the drink you give me, touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say, your worths have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to hear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they be deadly, that tell, you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it, that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bison conspicuous glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' cape and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon, in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fasset seller; and then return the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the chink, you awake faces like mummers; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a clamor-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause, is, calling both the parties knaves: You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary benchman in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your heads; and your heads deserve not so honourable a grave, as to stuff a butcher's cushion, or to be en-tomb'd in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Deuca-lion: though, peradventure, some of the best of them were hereditary haugmen. Good even to your worship; more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[Brutus and Sicinius retire to the back of the scene.]

Enter Volumentia, Virgilia, and Valeria, 4c.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the anon, were she earthly, no nobler,) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches: for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcius coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee:
—Hail! Marcius coming home!

Two Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another; and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:
—A letter for me!

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricistick, and, to this preervative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wout to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:— Brings a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. O, his brows, Menenius: he comes the third time home with the taken garland.

Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison:
Hast thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done.

As you have done; that's what I can; induce'd
As you have been; that's for my country:
He, that has but effected his good will
Hath overta'en mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving: Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest: Therefore, I beseech
(in sign of what you are, not to reward you,
What you have done,) before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they
To hear themselves remember'd. [Smart]

Com. Should they not,
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses, [all]

(Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store,) of
The treasure, in this field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth: to be ta'en forth,
Before the common distribution, at
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it,
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A loud flourish. They all cry, Marc'us! Marc'us! cast up their caps and lances; Cornilius and Lartius stand bare.]

Mar. May these same instruments, which you profane, [shall]
Never sound more! When drums and trumpets
I the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-faced soothing! When steel gruvs

Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made
An overture for the war! No more, I say:
For that I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or fill'd some debile wretch,—which, without
note,

Here's many else have done,—you shout me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical:
As if I lov'd my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you;
More cruel to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper harm,) in manna-
-clea, [known]

Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it
As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marc'us Wears this war's garland: in token of the which
My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging; and, from this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,
Caius Marc'us Coriolanus.—
Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.]

All. Caius Marc'us Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you—
I mean to stride your steed; and, at all times.
To undermost your gould addition,
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent:
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.
Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 'tis yours.—What is it?
Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd!
Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free, as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marc'us, his name! By Jupiter, forgot:—
I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.—
Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:
The blood upon your visage dries: 'tis time
It should be look'd to: come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Volces.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Titus Aufidius, bloody, with Two or Three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta'en! [tutti.]
1 Sol. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good conditions.
Auf. Condition!—

I would, I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a Volce, be that I am.—Condition!
What good condition can a treaty find
I the part that is at mercy? Five times, Marc'us,
I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:

And would'st do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we out.—By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him heard to beard,
He is mine, or I am his: Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't, it had: for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force, [way; (True sword to sword), I'll potch at him some or wrath, or craft, may get him.

1 Sol. He's the devil.
Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle: My valour's possession!

With only suffering stain by him; for him
Shall fly out of itself: nor sleep, nor sanctuary
Being unlock'd, sick: nor fume, nor Capitol.
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marc'us: where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard, ere a time
Against the hospitable canon, would I Wash my fierce hand in his heart. Go you to the Leans, how 'tis held; and what they are, that
Be hostages for Rome. [tutti.]

1 Sol. Will not you go?
Auf. I am attended at the cypress grave:
I pray you,
(Tis south the city mills,) bring me word thither

He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor.

More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meader man's.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of Bo's' instead in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you

In arms as sound, as when I woo'd; in heart
As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward.

Com. Flower of warriors,

How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man buzz'd about deprecates:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile;
Ransoming him, or paying, threat'ning t'other;
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave,

Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?

Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone.

He did inform the truth: But for our gentlemen,
The common file, (A plague!—Tribunes for
them!)

The mouse no'er shann'd the cat, as they did
From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think—

Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field?
If not, why cause you tell you are so?

Com. Marcius,

We have at disadvantage fought, and dal
Retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How has their battle? Know you on which side

They have pursu'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,

Their bands in the vaward are the Antates,
Of their best trust; o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do remember you,

By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we've shed together, by the vows
We've made to endure friends, that you directly
Set me against Aufidius, and his Antates:

And that you not delay the present; but,
Filling the air with swords advanced, and darts,
We prove this very hour

Com. Though I could wish

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Decey your meaning; take your choice of times
That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they

That must be willing:—If any such be here,
(As it were said to doubt,) that love this painting
Wherein you see me sweat'd; if any fear
Lomper his person than an ill report;

If any think, brave don't outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him alone, or so many, so minded,
Wave thus, (seeing his hand,) to express his dis-
And follow Marcius.

Com. [They all shout, and wave their swords; take him up on their arms, and cast up their caps.

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me!
If I were shown to not outward, which of you
But as four to one! None of you, but as

Able to bear against the great Aufidius

A shield as hard as his. A certain number.

Though thanks to all, must I select: the rest

Shall bear the business in some other fight,

As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;

And four shall quickly draw out my command,

Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows:

Make good this ostentation, and you shall

Divide in all with us. [Exeunt]

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli

Titus Lartius having set a guard upon Corioli, coming with a drum and trumpet toward Cominius and Caius Marcius, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the porte be guarded; keep your duties.

As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch Thous' centuries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding: If we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Lart. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us—

Our gader, come to the Roman camp conduct us. [Exeunt]

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarum. Enter Marcius and Aufidius

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee: for I do hate thee

Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike;

Not Africk owns a serpent I abhor

More than thy fame and envy: Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first binger the other's slave,

And the gods doom him after!

Auf. If I fly, Marcius,

Helluo me like a hare.

Mar. Within three three hours, Tullius,

Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,

And made what work I pleas'd: 'Tis not my blood,

Wherein thou seest me murr'd: for thy revenge,

Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector,

That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny

Thou should'st not scape me now.

[They fight, and certain Volscians come to the aid of Aufidius.

Officious, and not valiant—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds.

[Exeunt fighting, driven in by Marcius.

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

Alarum. A retreat is sound'd. Flourish. Enter, at one side, Cominius and Romanus, at the other side, Marcius, with his arm in a scar, and some Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,

Thou'dst not believe thy deeds; but I'll report it.

Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;

Where great patricians shall attend, and murmur,

I the end, admire; where ladies shall be trick'd,
And, gladly quack'd, hear more; where the dull

Tribunes,

That, with the fiery plebeians, hate thee not—Shall say, against thy honors,—We teach the young,

Our Rome hath such a soldier!—

in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Mercia.—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you. [self.]

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself. [self.]

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.
Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum;
See him pluck down Aufidius by the hair;
As children from a bear, the Voices stunning him:
Methinks I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—
Come on, you cowards, you were got in fear,
Though you were born in Rome: His bloody brow
With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes;
Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood!
Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man,
Than gilt his trophy: The breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria,
We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!
Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee,
And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with Valeria and her Usher.

Vol. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam,—

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Vol. How do you both! you are manifest house-keepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the sword, and hear a drum, than look upon his school master.

Vol. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth, and tear it; O, I warrant, how he mammoocked it!

Vol. One of his father's mounds.

Vol. Indeed it is a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Vol. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle housewife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam: I will not out of doors.

Vol. Not out of doors?

Vir. She shall, she shall.

Vol. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Vol. Fye, you confine yourself most unreasonably; Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you!

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want law.

Vol. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would, your comb and finger were as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Vol. In truth, I, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband!

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Vol. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Vol. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Voices have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray you, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Vol. In troth, I think, she would:—Fare you well then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Prythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No: at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Vol. Well, then farewell. [Exit Vir.]

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with drums and colours, Marcius, Titus Lartius, Officers, and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—A wager, they have met!

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart. Agreed.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll not sell, nor give him: lead you him, I will.

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'larums, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I prythee, make us quick in work;

That we with smoking swords may march from hence, [blast.]

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy

They sound a parley. Enter, on the walls, some Senators, and others.

Tullius Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he.

That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums [Alarums afar off.]

Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,

Rather than they shall pound us up: Our gates,

Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with

rushes;

They'll open of themselves. Hark you, afar off; [Other drums.]

There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes

Amongst your cloven army. O, they are at it!

Mar. [Lart.] Their noise be our instruction.—Leaders, ho!

Upon my party. I'd revolt, to make
Only my wars with him: he is a lion
That I am proud to hunt.

1 Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars.
Com. It is your former promise.

Mer. Sir, it is:
And I am constant—Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullius' face:
What art thou stiff!—stand't out!

Tit. No, Caius Marcius:
I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other.
Ere stay behind in this business.

Men. O, true bred!
1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I
know,

Our greatest friends attend us.

Tit. Lead you on:

Follow, Cominius; we must follow you;

Right worthy you priority.

Com. Noble Lartius!

1 Sen. Hence! To your homes, be gone.

[To the Citizens.]

Mer. Nay, let them follow:

The Voices have much corn: take these rats

—thither,

To gnaw their garners:—Worshipful mutineers,

Your valour puts well forth; pray, follow.

[Exeunt Senators, Com. Mar. Tit. and

Menen. Citizens steal away.]

Sen. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bro. He has no equal.

Sen. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

Bro. Mark'd you his lip, and eyes?

Sen. Nay, but his taunts.

Bro. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the Sen. Be-mock the naked moon.

Bro. The present wars devour him: he is grown

Too proud to be so valiant.

Sen. Such a nature,

Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow

Which he trends on at noon: But I do wonder,

His insolence can brook to be commanded

Under Cominius.

Bro. Fame, at the which he aims,—

In whom already he is well grac'd,—cannot

Better be held, nor more attain'd, than by

A place below the first: for what mis-carries

Shall be the general's fault, though he perform

To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure

Will then cry out of Marcius, O, if he Had borne the business!

Sen. Besides, if things go well,

Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall

Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Bro. Come:

Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius,

'Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults

To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed,

In ought be merit not.

Sen. Let's hence and hear

How the desp'ch is made; and in what fashion,

More than in singularity, he goes

Upon his present action.

Bro. Let's along. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Corioli. The Senate-House.

Enter Tullius Aufidius, and certain Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,

That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,

And know how we proceed.

Ans. Is it not yours?
What ever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumvention? 'Tis not four days gone, Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think.

I have the letter here; yes, here it is: [Reads.]
They have prest'd a power, but it is not known
Whether for east, or west: The death is great;
The people mutinous; and it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,
(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you,)
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation
Whither 'tis best: most likely, 'tis for you:
Consider of it.

1 Sen. Our army's in the field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Ans. Nor did you think it folly,
To keep your great pretences veil'd, till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatchin'.

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
We shall be shorten'd in our aim: which was,
To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your commission: he you to your hands:
Let us alone to guard Corioli.

If they set down before us, for the remove Bring up your army: but, I think, you'll find
They have not prepar'd for us.

Ans. O, doubt not that:

I speak from certainties. Nay, more,

Some parcels of their powers are forth already,

And only hitherward. I leave your honours.

If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,

'Tis sworn between us, we shall never strike

Till one can do no more.

Ans. The gods assist you!

1 Sen. And keep your honours safe!

2 Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Rome. An Apartment in Marcius' House.

Enter Volumnia and Virginia: They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: If my son were my husband, I should feel freer joy in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embroacements of his bed, where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb: when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way, when, for a day of kings' entreaties, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honour would become such a person;
that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleas'd to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him: from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam, how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely:—Had I a dozen sons,—each

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little,) Patience, awhile, you'll hear the belly's answer.

1 Cl. You are long about it.
Men. Note me this, good friend; Your most grave belly was deliberate, Not rash like us answers, and thus answer'd. True is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he, That I receive the general food at first, Which you do live upon; and fit it is; Because I am the store-house, and the shop Of the whole body: But if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the brain;

And through the cranks and officers of war, The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins, From me receive that natural competency Wherby they live: And though that all at once, You, my good friends, (thus says the belly,) mark me,—

1 Cl. Ay, sir; well, well.
Men. Though all at once, cannot See what I do deliver out to each;

Yet I can mark my audit up, that all From me do back receive the flower of all, And leave me but the bran. What say you to't?

1 Cl. It was an answer: How apply you this?
Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,

And you the mutinous members: For examine Their counsels, and their cares; digest things rightly. [find.]

Touching the weal o' the common; you shall No public benefit, which you receive, But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you.

And so way from yourselves—What do you think?

You, the great toe of this assembly!—
 1 Cl. I the great toe? Why the great toe?
Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wretched rebellion, thou go'st foremost: Thou march'st that art worst in blood, to run Lead'st first, to win some vantage.—

But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs; Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. The one side must have hale.—Hail, noble Marccius!

Enter Caius Marcius.

Mar. Thanks—What's the matter, you disempious rogues, That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion, Make yourselves scabs?

1 Cl. We have over your good word, Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter

Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you cur?

That like no peace, nor war? The one affrights Men. The other makes you proud! He that trusts you, Where he should find you loose, finds you hare; Where fives, goes: You are no surer, no, Than is the owl of fire upon the ice, Or hail-stone in the sun. Your virtue is, Men. To make him worthy, whose offence subverts And cures that justice did it. Who deserves greatness, Deserves your hate; and your affections are A sick man's appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead, And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust ye!

With every minute you do change a mind;

And call him noble, that was now your hate, Him vile, that was your garland. What's the matter.

That in these several places of the city You cry against the noble senate, who, Under the gale, keep you in awe, which else Would feed on one another?—What's their seeking? [they say.]

Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof The city is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say! They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know What's done i' the Capitol: who's like to rise, Who thrives, and who declines: side factions and give out Conjectural marriages: making parties strong, And feeling such as stand not in their likens. Below their cobbled shoes. They say, there's grain enough!

Would the nobility lay aside their ruth, And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high As I could pick my lance. [sounded.]

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly per-for thought abundantly they lack discretion, Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolv'd: Hang 'em! They said, they were au-hungry; night'd forth gruverbs:— [eat:] That, hunger broke stone walls; that, dogs must That, meat was made for mouths; that, the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only:—With these shreds They vented their complainings; which being answer'd.

And a petition granted them, a strange one, 'T' break the heart of generosity, And make bold power look pale, they threw their caps

As they would hang them on the horns o' the Shouting their emulation. [moon.]

Men. What is granted them?
Mar. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wis-doms,

Of their own choice: One's Junius Brutus, Sennius Velutus, and I know not—'Sleath! The rabble should have first unroof'd the city. Ere so prevail'd with me; it will in time Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes For insurrection's arguing.

Men. This is strange.
Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger.

Men. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here: What's the matter?
Men. The news is, sir, the Volces are in arms.
Mar. I am glad on't; then we shall have means to vent

Our musty superfluity:—See, our best elders.

Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators; Janus Brutus, and Sennius Velutus.

Sen. Marcius, 'tis true, that you have lately told us;

The Volces are in arms. They have a leader, Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to't.

I am in envying his nobility, And were I any thing but what I am, I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.
Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

Cit. Speak, speak. [Several speaking at once.]
1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to finish?

Cit. Resolved, resolved.

1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

Cit. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict?

Cit. No more talking on't: let it be done: away, away.

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good. What authority suffers us, would relieve us; if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear; the lessness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our rakes, as we become rakes: for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

1 Cit. Against him first; he's a very dog to the commonality.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good reward for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done maliciously, he did it to that end; though soft-conscience'd men can be content to say, it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him: You must in no way say, he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of occasions; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in reputation. [Shouts within.] What shouts are those? The other side o' the city is risen: Why stay we prating here? to the Capitol.

2 Cit. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft; who comes here?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

1 Cit. He's our honest enough; 'Would, all the rest were so!

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you?

With bats and clubs? The matter! Speak, I pray you.

1 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know, we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

1 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable cure have the patricians of you. For your want, Your suffering in the dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them

Against the Roman state; whose course will as The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link unnumber'd, than can ever Appear in your impetiment: For the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack, You are transported by calamity

Thither where more attends you; and you slander The helms of the state, who care for you like for When you curse them as enemies. [Thers.]

1 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to finish, and their store-houses cramm'd with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you

A pretty tale; it may be, you have heard it: But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To seal it a little more.

1 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fish off our disrepute with a tale; but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:—That only like a gulf it did remain.

Like mist o' the body, vile and unactive, Still engulf'd the viand, never bearing Like labour with the rest; where the other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

1 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile,

Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus, (For, look you, I may make the belly smile, As well as speak,) it tauntingly replied

To the discontented members, the mutinous parts

That envied his receipt; even so most fitly

As you malign our senators, for that They are not such as you.

1 Cit. Your belly's answer: What! The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier, Our steel'd leg, the tongue our trumpet, For this our fabrick, if that they

Men. What then?—
'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then?

1 Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,

Who is the sink o' the body.—

Men. Well, what then?

1 Cit. The former agents, if they did complain, What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you:

For sufferance vainly: Now the time is flush,
When crouching marrow, in the hearer strong,
Cries, of itself, No more: now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And pure insolence shall break his wind,
With fear, and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble, and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee; to give thy rages balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.

2 Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promis'd means:
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.

1 Sen. These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands, from whom You have receiv'd your griefs: not are they such

That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall
For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living,
Who were the mo'ives that you first went out;
Shame that they wanted cunning, in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,
Into our city with the banners spread:
By decimation, and a titled death,
(If thy revenues hunger for that food,
Which nature loathes,) take thou the destin'd tenth;

And by the hazard of the spotted die,
Let die the spotted.

1 Sen. All have not offended:
For those that were, it is not square, to take,
On those that are, revenges: crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage:
Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which, in the blister of thy wrath, must fall
With those that have offended: like a sheep-herd,

Approach the fold, and cull the infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2 Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Than how to't with thy sword.

1 Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our ramp'd gates, and they shall open,

So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen. Throw thy glove
Or any token of thine honour else.
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcob. Then there's my glove
Descend, and open your uncharged ports;
Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own,
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
Fall, and no more; and,—to atone your fears
With my more noble meaning,—but a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied, to your publick laws
At heaviest answer

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.
Alcob. Demand, and keep your wouns.

The Senators descend, and open the gates.

Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead;
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea;
And, on his grave-stone, this inscription; which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets my poor ignorance.

Alcob. (Reads.) Here lies a wretched corpse, of wretched soul bereft:

Seek not my name: A playne consume you wicked cattiffs left!

Here lie I, Timon; who, above, all living men did
hate:

Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.

These well express in thee thy latter spirit:
Though thou shoud'st shut us in our human griefs, Scorn'd at our bruns's flow, and thine our droplets
which

From nigard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon: of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,
And I will use the olive with my sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stint war;

make each
Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.
Let our drums strike. [Exeunt.]

CORIOLANUS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Caius Marcus Coriolanus, a noble Roman.
Titus Lartius, { generals against the Volscians.
Cominius
Menenius Agrippa, friend to Coriolanus.
Sempronius Volscianus, { tribunes of the people.
Junius Brutus,
Young Marcus, son to Coriolanus.
A Roman Herald.
Tullius Aufidius, general of the Volscians.
Lucius Antidius, friend to Aufidius.
Conspirators with Aufidius

A Citizen of Antium.
Two Volscian Guards.
Volturnus, mother to Coriolanus.
Virgilia, wife to Coriolanus.
Valerius, friend to Virgilia.
Gentlewoman, attending Virgilia.
Roman and Volscian Senators, Patricians, Aediles, Licitors, Soldiers, Citizens, Messengers, Servants to Aufidius, and other Attendants.

SCENE,—partly in Rome; and partly in the territories of the Volscians and Antians.

Surprise me to the very brink of tears.

Lend me a fo-d's heart, and a woman's eyes.
And I'll bewep these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us.

And of our Athens (thine, and ours) to take
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name
Lave with authority:—so soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild;
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's pence:

2 Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword
Against the walls of Athens.

1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—
Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir:
Thus.

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon. [Athena.
That—Timon cares not. But if he sack fair
And take our proudly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virtues to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war;
Then, let him know,—and tell him, Timon speaks it,

In pity of our age, and our youth,
I cannot choose, but tell him, that—I care not,
And let him tak' at worst; for their knives care
not.

While you have threats to answer: for myself,
There's not a whistle in the unruly camp,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.

Flou. Stay not, all's in vain.
Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph;
It will be seen to-morrow: My long sickness
Of health, and living, now begin to mend,
And nothing brines me all things. Go, live still;
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

1 Sen. We speak in vain.
Tim. But yet I love my country, and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common brist doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoke.
Tim. Commend me to my loving countrymen.—
1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears, like great triumphs.

In their applauding gates.
Tim. Commend me to them;
And tell them, that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their urches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident thrills
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them:

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.
2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close.

That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it; Tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste.

Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hug himself:—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flou. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion

Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—
Laps let sour words go by, and language end:
What is misse, plague and infection need I
Graves only be men's works; and death their gain!
San, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his rage.
[Exit Timon.]

1 Sen. His discontents are unremovably
Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. — The walls of Athens

Enter Two Senators, and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd; are his
As full as thy report? [Exit Messenger.]

2 Sen. I have spoke the least:
Besides, his expedition promises

Present approach. [not Timon.]

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring Mess. I met a courier, once mine ancient friend;—
Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship in the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter Senators from Timon.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

2 Sen. No talk of Timon: nothing of him expect.—

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scolding
Doth clouke the air with dust: In, and prepare;
Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes the snare.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. — The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place;—

Who's here I speak, ho!—No answer!—What is Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his open
Some heart rear'd this; there does not live a man.
Dead, sure; and this his grave.—

What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character
I'll take with wax:
Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days:
Before proud Athens he's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.]

SCENE V. — Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades and Forces.

Alci. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach. [A parley sounded.]

Enter Senators on the walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wish
The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our travelers' arms, and breath'd

Tim I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold,
That he is worshipp'd in a baser temple,
Than where swine feed! (form;
'Tis those that rigg't the bark, and plough't the Settlest admir'd reverence in a slave:
To thee he worship! and thy saints for aye
Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!
'Tis I do meet them (Advancing.

Port. Hail, worthy Timon!
Pam. Our late noble master,
Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men!
Port. Sir,

Having often of your open bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n off,
Whom thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!
Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—
What! to you!

Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being! I'm rapt, and cannot cover
The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't the better:
You, that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seen, and known.

Pam. He, and myself,
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men
Pam. We are hither come to offer you our service.
(quite you!)

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I re-
Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Boia. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men: You have heard that I have gold;

I'm sure, you have: speak truth: you are honest men.

Pam. So it is said, my noble lord: but there-Came not my friend, nor I. (perfect

Tim. Good honest men:—Thou draw'st a coun-
Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best:
Thou counterfein'st most lively

Pam. So, so, my lord.
Tim. Even so, sir, as I say:—And, for thy fiction, (To the Post.

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth,

That thou art even natural in thine art.

Is it, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say, you have a little fault:

Happy, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I,
You take much pains to mend.

Boia. Beseech your honour.
To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Boia. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Boia. Dumb it not, worthy lord. (knows

Tim. There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a
That naturally deceives you.

Boia. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him out, see him dissemble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
Keep in your houses: yet remain assur'd,
That he's a made-up villain.

Pam. I know none such, my lord.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,
And see these villains from your companies:
Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught,

Confound them by some course, and come to me,
I'll give you gold enough.

Boia. Name them, my lord: let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this, but two in company:—

Each man apart, all single and alone,
Yet an arch-villain keeps him company.
If where thou art, two villains shall not be.

(To the Painter.
Come not near him—if thou would'st not reside
[To the Post.

But where one villain is, then him abandon—
Hence! pack! there's gold; ye came for gold, ye slaves: (Hence!

You have done work for me; there's payment:
You are an alchymist, make gold of that:—
Out, rascal dogs!

(Exit, beating and driving them out.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Flavius, and Two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;

For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave:
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike,
Men are not still the same: 'Twas time, and griefs,
That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer hand,
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him. Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.—
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends: The Athenians,
By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd:

For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a caut'ring to the root o' the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon,— Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon. (Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee,
Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague.

Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.

The senators, with one consent of love,
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They cravis,
Toward thee, forgetfulness to general, grace;
Which now the publick body,—which hath seldom
Play the reciter,—feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrow'd render,
Together with a re-awaken'd more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the drain;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;

Full of decay and failing! O monument
And wonder of good deeds evil bestow'd!
What an alteration of honour has Desperate virtue made!
What rarer thing upon the earth, than friends,
Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends!
How rarely does it meet with this time's guile,
When man was wistful to love his enemies:
Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mischief me, than those that do!
He has caught me in his eye: I will present
My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,
Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

Timon comes forward from his cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir!

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men; (thee.)

Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt man, I have forgot

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then

I know thee not: I ne'er had honest man
About me, I; all that I kept were knaves,
To serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,
Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep!—Come nearer:—
then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give,
But thorough lust, and laughter. Pity's sleeping;
Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord,
To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor wealth lasts,

To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now
So comfortable! It almost turns
My dangerous nature wild. Let me behold
Thy face.—Surely, this man was born of woman.—

Forgive my general and exceptionless rashness,
Perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim
One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one;

No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.—
How fain would I have hated all mankind,
And thou redeem'st thyself: But all, save thee,
I sell with curses.

Methinks, thou art more honest now, than woe;
For, by oppressing and betraying me,
Thou might'st have sooner got another service:
For many so arrive at second masters,
Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true,
(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,)—

Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous? (Gifts,
If not a usuring kindness, and us rich men deal Expecting in return twenty for one!) (breast)

Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late;
You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast:

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.
That which I show, Heaven knows, is merely
love,

Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind,
Care of your food and living: and, believe it,
My most honoured lord,

For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange
For this one wish, That you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich yourself. (man,
Tim. Look thee, 'tis so!—thou singly honest

Here, take:—the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasures. Go, live rich, and happy: (men;)

But thus conditioned; Thou shalt build from Hate all, curse all: show charity to none;
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs

What thou deny'st to men: let prisons swallow
them,

Debts wither them: Be men like blasted woods,
And may diseases lick up their false bloods!
And so, farewell, and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay,
And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st
Curses, stay not; fly, whilst thou'rt bless'd and free;

Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.
(Exeunt severally.)

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Post and Painter; Timon behind, unseen.

Post. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Paint. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Post. Certain: Alcibiades reports it: Phrynia and Tymandra had gold of him: he likewise riches poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Post. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Paint. Nothing else: you shall see him a paln in Athens again, and flourish with the highest.
Therefore, 'tis not amiss, we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honesty in us; and is very likely to lead our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Post. What have you now to present unto him?

Paint. Nothing at this time but my veneration;
only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Post. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Paint. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time; it opens the eyes of expectation; performance is ever the duller for his art; and,
but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. I'll promise most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will, or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Post. I am thinking, what I shall say I have provided for him: It must be a personating of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity; with a discovery of the infinite flatteries, that follow youth and opulency.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? I will thou wish thine own faults in other men! Do so, I have gold for thee.

Post. Nay, let's seek him:
Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Paint. True;
When the day serves, before black-corned night,
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light,
Come.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Ape. Youder comes a poet, and a painter: The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog than Apemantus.

Ape. Thou art the cup of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.

Ape. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains, that do stand by thee, are pure

Ape. There is no leprosy, but what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee.—

I'll beat thee—but I should infect my hands.

Ape. I would my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a many dog!

Choler does kill me, that thou art alive;

I swoon to see thee.

Ape. 'Would thou would'st burst!

Tim. Away.

Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose A stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.

Ape. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Ape. Toad!

Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!

[Apemantus retreats backward, as going.]
I am sick of this false world; and will love nougth

But even the mere necessities upon it.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;

Let where the light foam of the sea may beat

Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,

That death in me at others' lives may laugh.

O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold.

'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defiler

Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!

Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd, and delicate wooer,

Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow

That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,

That soldier'st close impossibilities,

And mak'st them kins! that speak'st with every trance

To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!

Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue

Set them into confounding odds, that beasts

May have the world in empire!

Ape. 'Would 'twere so:—

But not till I am dead!—I'll say, thou hast gold:

Thou wilt be thrugg'd to shortly.

Tim. Through'd to?

Ape. Ay.

Tim. Thy back I pry thee.

Ape. Love, and love thy misery!

Tim. Long live so, and so die!—I am quit.

[Exit Apemantus.

More things like men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender art of his remainder. The mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this wretched holy.

2 Thief. It is noted, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him; if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall'st get it?

2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him, 'tis hid.

1 Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thief. 'Tis his description.

3 Thief. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves!

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs:

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;

The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush

Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?

1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water.

As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes;

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you one,

That you are thieves profess'd; that you work

not.

In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft

In limited professions. Rascal thieves.

Here's gold: Go, suck the subtle blood of the grape,

Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth.

And so 'scape hanging; trust not the physician:

His antidotes are poison, and he slays

More than you rob: take wealth and lives together;

Do villany, do, since you profess to do't.

Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery:

The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction

Robs the vast sea; the moon's an arrant thief,

And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:

The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves

The moon into salt tears; the earth's a thief,

That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen

From general excrement: each thing's a thief.

The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough

power

Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves;

away;

Rob one another. There's more gold: Cut throats;

All that you meet are thieves: To Athens, go.

Break open shops; nothing can you steal.

But thieves do lose it: Steal not less, for this

I give you; and gold confound you howsoever!

Amen.

[Timon retires to his cave.

3 Thief. He has almost charm'd me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

1 Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us: not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens: There is no time so miserable, but a man may be true.

[Exit Thieves.

Enter Flavius.

Flav. O you gods!

Is you despis'd and ruinous man my lord?

Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,
To care thy o'er-night's surfeit I call the creatures.—

Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven; whose bare unhoussed
To the conflicting elements expos'd, (trunks,
Answer mere nature,—bid them flatter thee;
O! thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee: Depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say, thou art a catiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's:

Dost please thyself in't?

Apem. Ay. What I a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour-cold habit on

To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou

Dost it enforcedly; thou'dst courtier be again,

Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery

Outlives uncertain pomp, is crown'd before:

The one is filling still, never complete;

The other, at high wish: Best state, contentless,

Hath a distracted and most wretched being,

Worse than the worst, content.

Thou should'st desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm

With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog.

Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou would'st have plung'd
thyself

In general riot; melted down thy youth

In different beds of lust; and never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd

The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,

Who had the world as my confectionary;

The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of
men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;

That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves

Do on the oak—have with one winter's brush

Fell from thy boughs, and left me open, bare

For every storm that blows;—I, to bear this,

That never knew but better, is some burden:

Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time

Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate men?

They never flatter'd thee: What hast thou given?

If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag,

Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff

To some sea beggar, and compounded thee—

Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!

If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,

Thou hadst been a knave, and flatterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee. I, that I was No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now;

Were all the wealth I have, shut up in thee,

I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—

That the whole life of Athens were in this!

Thou wouldst I eat it. [Eating a root.]

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast.

[Offering him something.]

Tim. First mend my company; take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd:
If not, I would it were.

Apem. What would'st thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Tell them there, I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best, and truest:

For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.

Tim. Would persons were obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where would'st thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity: in thy rage thou knowest none, but art deeps'd for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a medlar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. Ah, thou hadst hated medlars sooner, thou should'st have loved thyself better now.

What man didst thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who, without these means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Would'st thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee; and still thou liv'dst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be killed by the horse: wert thou

a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard:

wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spurs of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remoteness; and thy defence, absence. What beast could'st thou be, that wert not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that meet not thy loss in transformation?

Apem. If thou could'st please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here:

The commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Will o'er some high-vio'd city hang his poison
In the sick air : Let not thy sword skip one :
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard,
He's an usurer : Strike me the counterfeit man-
It is her habit only that is honest, (iron)
Herself's a bawd : Let not the virgin's cheek
Make soft thy treacherous sword ; for those milk
peaps, (eyes)

That through the window-hare bore at men's
Are not within the leaf of pity writ ;
Set them down horrible traitors : Spare not the lame, (merry ;

Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced thy throat shall cut,
And mince it sans remorse : Swear against objects ;

Put armour on thine ears, and on thine eyes ;
Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,
Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding, Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers :

Make large confusion : and, thy fury spent,
Confound'd be thyself ! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet ? I'll take the gold
I ou'g't me.

Not all thy counsel.

Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's cure upon thee !

Phr. & Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon :
Iust thou move !

Tim. I know to make a whore forswear her trade, (aloud,

And to make whores, a bawd. Hold up, you
Your aprons moultant : You are not oathable.—
Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear,
'Tis strong shudders and to heavenly agrees
The immortal gods that bear you,—spare your oaths ;

I'll trust to your conditions : Be whores still ;
And be whose jaws breath seeks to convert you,
Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up ;
Let your curse fire predominate his smoke,
And be no turncoats : Yet may your pains, six months,

Be quite contrary : And thatch your poor thin heads (hang'd,
With burdens of the dead :—some that were
No matter :—wear them, betray with them :
whose still ;

Paint till a horse may mire upon your face :

A pox of wrinkles !

Phr. & Timon. Well, more gold ;—What then !—
Belov'd, that we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim. Consumptions now

In hollow bones of man : strike their sharp shins,
And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's vow,

That he may never more false title plead,
Nor sound his quietus shrilly : hear the flames,
That works against the quality of flesh,

And not believe himself : down with the nose,
Down with it flat : take the bridge quite away
Of him, that has particularly foremen,
Smells from the general weal : make cur'd-pale ruffians bald ;

And let the uncur'd braggarts of the war
Derive some pain from you : Plague all ;
That your activity may defeat and quell
The source of all erection.—There's more gold :—
Do you damn others, and let this damn you,
And ditch grave you all !

Phr. & Timon. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.

Tim. More whore, more mischief first ; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens.

Farewell, Timon :

If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more.

Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alcib.

Call'st thou that harm !

Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away,

Alcib.

And take thy beagles with thee.

We but offend him.—

Strike.

[Drum beat. Exeunt Alcibiades, Phrynia and Timandra.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkind-
ness,

Should yet be hungry !—Common mother, thou,

[Drumming.

Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,

Teems, and feeds all : whose self-same mottle,

Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,

Endeavors the black load, and sadder blue,

The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm,

With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven

Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine ;

Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate,

From forth thy plentiful womb, one poor rout !

Ensear thy fertile and conceptions womb,

Let it no more bring out ingrateful man !

Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears ;

Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward

Hath to the married museum all about (face

Never presented !—O, a rout !—Dear thanks !

Dry up thy narrow, viner, and plough-torn leas,

Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish druggs,

And morals unctuous, greases his pore mind,

That from it all consideration slips !

Enter Apemantus.

More man ! Plague ! plague !

Apem. I was directed hither : Men report,

Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. Tis then, because thou dost not keep a dog

Whom I would imitate : Consumption catch

Apem. This is in thee a nature but affected ;

A poor unmanly melancholy sprang (place /

From chance of fortune. Why this spade ! this

This slave-like habit ! and these looks of cure !

Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, be soft ;

Hug their dross'd perfumes, and have forgot

That ever Timon was. Shame not these wounds,

By putting on the smug of a carpenter.

Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive

By that which has undone thee : hug the knee

And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,

Blow off thy cap : praise his most vicious strain,

And call it excellent : Thou wast told thus :

Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters, that to welcome

To knaves, and all approachers : 'Tis most just,

That thou turn rascal ; had'st thou wealth again,

Rascals should hav' it. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself

Apem. 'Thou hast cast away thyself, being like
thyself ;

A madman so long, now a fool : What, think'st

That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,

Will put thy shirt on warm ! Will these wounds'd trees,

That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels,

And skip when thou point'st out ! Will the cold brook,

I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.

[Exit.]

SCENE III — The Woods.

Enter Timon.

Tim O blessed, blessing sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb
Infect the air! I wou'd brothers of one womb,—
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarcely is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes;

The greater scorns the lesser: Not nature,
To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fire
But by contempt of nature. [Time,
Raise me this beggar, and denude that lord:
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour
It is the pasture lands the brother's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say, This man's a flatterer! if one be,
So are they all: for every grize of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique;
There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
But direct villany. Therefore, be abhor'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblance, yea, himself, Timon declines:
Destruction tunc mankind!—Earth, yield me roots! [Dying.

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods,
I am no idle volorist. Roots, you clear heavens!
Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul,
fair;

Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward,
Hal! you gods! why this? What this, you gods!

Why this? [sides;
Will lug your priests and servants from your Ploek about men's pillows from below their heads:
This yellow slave

Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd;
Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,
And give them title, knee, and approbation,
With senators on the bench: this is it,
That makes the wappen'd widow weel again;
She, whom the spital-house, and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To the April day again. Come, damned earth,

Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds
Among the rout of virtuous, I will make thee
Do thy right nature. — [March afar off.]—Hal! a drum!—Thou'rt quick.

But yet I'll bury thee: Thou'lt go, strong thief,
When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:—
Nay, stay thou out for earnest.

[Keeping some gold.]

Enter Alcibiades, with drums and life, in warlike manner; Phrynia and Timandra.

Alcib.
Speak. What art thou there?
Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart.

For showing me again the eyes of man!
Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to
thee,
That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.
For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog.
That I might love thee some thing.

Alcib. I know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Tim. I know thee too; and more, than that I know thee.

I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules:
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel: [Thine
Then what should war be? This fell whore of Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherub look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off!
Tim. I will not kiss thee; thou the rot returns
To thine own lips again.

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change? [drive:
Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to
But then renew I could not, like the moon:
There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee? None, but to Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. -What is it, Timon?
Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: If
Thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for Thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound
For thou'rt a man! [Thee.

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.
Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.
Alcib. I see them now: then was I a blessed time.
Tim. As time is now, held with a brace of harlots. [world

Timon. Is this the Athenian ruin, whom the Voice'd so regardfully?
Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timon. Yes.
Tim. Be a whore still: they love thee not, that use thee;

Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths: bring down rose-cheeked
To the tub-fast, and the diet. [Youth

Timon. Hang thee, monster!
Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra: for he
Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.— [wals
I have but little gold of late, brave Timon.
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious hand: I've heard, and griev'd,
How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,

But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.—
Tim. I prythee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone. [Thine.

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
Tim. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.
Alcib. Why, fare thee well
Here's some gold for thee. Keep't, I cannot eat it.

Tim. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—
Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.
Tim. The gods confound them all if thy conquest; and

These after, when thou hast conquer'd!
Alcib. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That,
By killing villains, thou wast born to conquer
My country.

Put up thy gold: Go on—here's gold,—go on—
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove

Is your perfection. This is Timon's last;
Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries,
Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces

(Throwing water in their faces)
Your reckless villany. Live loath'd, and long,
Must smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears.
You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies.
Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks!
Of man, and beast, the infinite malady
Crust you quite o'er!—What, dost thou go?
Soft, take thy physic first—thou too,—and thou;—

(Throws the dregs at them, and drives them out.)
Say, I will lend thee money, borrow none—
What, all in motion! Henceforth be no feast,
Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.
Horn, house; stink, Athens! henceforth hated be
Of Timon, man and all humanity. (Exit.)

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords?
2 Lord. Know you the quality of lord Timon's fury!

3 Lord. Push! did you see my cap!
4 Lord. I have lost my crown
3 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and brought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat.
—Did you see my jewel?

4 Lord. Did you see my cap!
2 Lord. Here 'tis.
4 Lord. Here lies my gown
1 Lord. Let's make no stay
3 Lord. Lord Timon's mad.
3 Lord. I feel't upon my bones.
4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. (Exeunt.)

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That grimest in those wolves! Dive in the earth,
And fence out Athens! Matrons turn inclement;
Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools,
Flock the grave wrinkled seats from the bench,
And minister in their steals! to general filth
Convert of the instant, green virginity!
Do't in your parent's eyes! bankrupts, hold fast;
Rather than render back, out with your knives,
And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants,
steal!

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law! maid, to thy master's bed;
Thy matrons are of the brothel! son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from the old limping aere,
Wish it beat out his brains! I pry and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decine to your confounding contraries,
And yet confusion live!—Plagues, incident to men,
Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold oriation,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youth;
That faint the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot! sloth, blame,

Sow all the Athenian houses; and their crop
Be general leprosy! breath infect breath;
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bring from thee,
But nakedness, thou detestable town!
Take thou that too, with multiplying hame!
Timon will to the woods; where he shall find
The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind.
The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all),
The Athenians both within and out that wall!
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
Amen. (Exit.)

SCENE II.—Athens. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter Flavius, with Two or Three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward, where's our master?
Are we undone? cast off! nothing remaining?
Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to
you!

Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poor as you.
1 Serv. Such a loose brake!
So while a master falls! All gone! and not
One friend to take us fortune by the arm,
And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave;
So his familiars to his buried fortunes
Sink all away; leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick'd: and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty.
Walks, like contempt, alone. More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house.
3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That see I by our faces: we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Look'd is our bark;
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and say.

As 'twere a knell unto our master's fortune,
We have seen better days. Let each take some.
[Giving them money.]
Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[Exeunt Servants.]
O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt!
Who'd be so mock'd with glory! or to live
But in a dream of friendship!

To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
But only painted, like his vanish'd friends!
Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heat!
Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood!
When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!
Who then dars to be half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.
My dearest lord,—blest'd, to be most accur'd!
Rich, only to be wretched—thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord!
He's flung in rage from this ungrateful seat
Of monstrous friends: nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
I'll follow, and enquire him out:

And, for I know your reverend ages love
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all
My honour to you, on his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receiv't in valiant cure;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies; unless it be more,
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or brother,
He forfeits his own blood, that spits another.
Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen.

Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot
me;

It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue, and be denied such common grace:
My wounds ache at you

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?

'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect;
We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me!

Banish your dotage: banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If, after two days' shine, Athens contain Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,
He shall be executed presently.

[Exeunt Senators.]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live

Only in home, that none may look on you!
I'm worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon bare interest: I myself,
Rich only in large hurts:—All those, for this!
Is this the balsam, that the uring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? In! lamish'd!
It comes not ill; I hate not to be lamish'd;
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.
'Tis honour, with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs, as gods.

[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House.

Musick. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter several Lords, at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.

2 Lord. I also wish it you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts truing, when we encountered: I hope it is not so long with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my im-portunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrow'd of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?

3 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter Timon, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both:—
And how fare you?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter: such summer-birds are men.—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay:
seat your ears with the musick awhile; if they will fare so harshly on the trumpet's sound: we shall to't presently.

1 Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,

Tim. Ah, my good friend! what cheer!

[The banquet brought in.]

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. 'Think not on't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—
'Tis let it not cumber your better remembrance.—Come, bring in all together.

1 Lord. All covered dishes!

2 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

3 Lord. Would not that, if money, and the season, can yield it.

1 Lord. How do you? What's the news?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is lamish'd: Hear you of it?

1 & 2 Lord. Alcibiades lamish'd!

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 Lord. How! how!

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?
I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will't hold, will't hold!

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and so—

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with what spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: Sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

*You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves gratified: but reserve still to give, lest your desires be depiet. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another: for, were your goodwills borrow'd of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved, more than the man that gives it.
Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of vulgarins: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are.—The rest of your fees, O gods,—the senators of Athens, together with the common lay of people,—what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these, my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing they are welcome.
Uncover, dig, and lay.*

[The dishes uncovered, are full of warm water.
Some speak. What does his lordship mean?
Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better fund never behold.
You knot of mouth-friends! amuse, and lake-wurst water

Lac. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not sick;

And, if it be so far beyond his health,
Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. We cannot take this for an answer, sir.

Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord! my lord!

Enter Timon, in a rage; Flaminius following.

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage?

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my school?
The place, which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Lac. Serv. Put in now, 'tis now.

Tim. My lord, here is my bill.

Lac. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.

Both Ser. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills. (the girls.)

Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me to.

Lac. Serv. Alas! my lord,—

Tim. Cut my heart in sunder.

Tim. Mine, fifty talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Lac. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that—

What yours!—and yours!

1 Ser. My lord,—

2 Ser. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you!

Hor. 'Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money; these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves:

Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flam. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so:—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fitly! Go, bid all my friends again,

Læsus, Lærcius, and Sempronius; all:

I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul;

There is not so much left, to furnish out

A moderate table.

Tim. Be 't not in thy care: go,

I charge thee: invite them all: let in the tide

Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. The Senate House.

The Senate sitting. Enter Alcibiades, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it: the bloody; 'tis necessary he should die: (fault's)

Nothing emboldens sin as much as mercy.

2 Sen. Must true: the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am a humble suitor to your virtues;

For pity is the virtue of the law,

And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time, and fortune, to be heavy

Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,
Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth
To those that, without heed, do plunge into it.
He is a man, setting his fate aside,

Of comely virtues

Not did he soil the fact with cowardice:

(An honour in him, which buys out his fault.)

But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent,

As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:

Your wounds have took such pains, as if they

Inboard'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling

Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,

Is valour misbegot, and came into the world

When sects and factions were newly born:

He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe; and make his

wrongs

His outsoles; wear them like his raiment, care-

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart.

To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evil, and enforce us kill,

What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me.

If I speak like a captain,—

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,

And not endure all threatenings? sleep upon it,

And let the foes quietly out their throats,

Without repugnancy? but if there be

Such valour in the bearing, what make we

Abrash? why then, women are more valiant,

That stay at home, if hearing carry it;

And th' wiser, more captain than the lion; the flocks,

London with lions, wiser than the judge,

If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:

Who cannot condemn rashness, in cold blood!

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;

But in defence, by mercy 'tis most just.

To be in anger, is impiety;

But who is man, that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain? his service does

At Lacedæmon, and Byzantium,

Wear a sufficient bribe for his life.

1 Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, he has done fair service, and slain in fight many of your enemies:

How full of valour did he bear himself

In the last conflict, and made plentiful wounds!

2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em,

Is a sworn rioter: 'tis a sin that often

Drives him, and takes his valour prisoner:

If there were no fines, that were enough alone

To overcome him: in that heady fury

He has been known to commit outrages,

And cherish ferocious: 'tis infer'd to us,

His ways are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hail fate! he might have died in war.

My lords, if not for any parts in him,

(Though his right arm might purchase his own

time,

And he in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,

Take my deserts to him, and join them both:

He has much disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at him.

That might have known my place: I see an sense for't.

But his occasions might have woo'd me first; For, in my conscience, I was the first man

That e'er received gift from him:

And does he think so backwardly of me now, That I'll requite it last? No; so it may prove

An argument of laughter to the rest.

And I amongst the lords be thought a fool.

I had rather than the worth of thirty the sum, He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake:

I had such a courage to do him good. But now return.

And with their faint reply this answer join:

Who bates mine honour, shall not know my coin.

(Exit.)

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he cross'd himself by't; and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear fool! takes virtuous copies to be wicked; like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire.

Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope: now all are fled. Save the gods only: Now his friends are dead,

Doors that were ne'er acquainted with their wars

Many a百entious year, must he employ'd

Now to guard sure their master.

And this is all a liberal course allows;

Who cannot keep his wealth, must keep his house.

(Exit.)

SCENE IV.—The same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants to Timon's creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Lucius!

What do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and, I think,

One business doth command us all; for mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter Philotas.

Luc. Serv. And, sir,

Philotas too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother:

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for mine.

Luc. Serv. So much!

Phi. Is not my lord aen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on't; he was wont to dine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter

with him:

You must consider, that a prodigal course is like the sun's; but not, like his, recoverable.

I fear.

'Tis deepest winter in lord Timon's purse;

That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet find little.

Phi. I'm of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.

Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,

For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows,

Timon in this should pay more than he owes:

And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels,

And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I'm weary of this charge, the gods can witness:

I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth, And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns: What's your's?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep; and it should seem by the sum,

Your master's confidence was above mine;

Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! ar, a word: Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship; pray, signify so much

Flam. I need not tell him that: he knows, you are too diligent.

(Exit Flaminius.)

Enter Flavius, in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled He goes away in a cloud, call him, call him. [Exit]

Tit. Do you hear, ar?

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, ar.

Flav.

Ay,

If money were as certain as your waiting,

'Twere sure enough. Why then preffer'd you not Your sums and bills, when your false masters out

Of my lord's meat? Then they could smile, and sway

Upon his debts, and take down th' interest Into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves but wrong,

To stir me up; let me pass quietly;

Believe't, my lord and I have made an end;

I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. If 'twill not,

'Tis not so base as you: for you serve knaves.

(Exit.)

1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter?

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak louder than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter Servilius.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know Some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, To repair some other hour, I should much Derive from it: for, take it on my soul, My lord leans would'truely to dissolute.

His comfortable temper has forsook him; He is much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

And we alive, that liv'd! Fly, damned base-
ness,
To him that worships thee.

[Throwing the money away.]
Lacul. Ha! now I see, thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit Lacullus.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may scold thee!

Let molten coin be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend, and not himself!
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights? O you gods,
I feel my master's passion! This slave
Unto his honour, has my lord's meat in him;
Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment,
When he is turn'd to poison?
O, may diseases only work upon't!
And, when he's sick to death, let not that part of nature

Which my lord paid for, be of any power
To expel sickness, but prolong his hour! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. A publick Place.

Enter Lucius, with Three Strangers.

Lac. Who, the lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1 Str. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours; now lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Lac. Fye, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Str. But believe you this, my lord, that, not long ago, one of his men was with the lord Lacullus, to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Lac. How?

2 Str. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Lac. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man! there was very little honour show'd in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him, and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter Servilius.

Ser. See, by good hap, yourer's my lord; I have sweet to see his honour. — My honoured
lord. [To Lacullus.]

Lac. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: — Commend me to thy honourablevirtuous son: — my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent —

Lac. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he's ever sending: How shall I thank him, thinkst thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Lac. I know, his lordship is but merry with me; he cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my
lord.

If his occasion were not virtuous

I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Lac. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Lac. What a wicked beast was I, to dishonour myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour! — Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do't; the more beast, I say: — I was sending to use lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, had I done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope, his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: — And tell him this from me: I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words
to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Lac. I will look you out a good turn, Servilius — [Exit Servilius.]

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk, indeed;
And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed.

[Exit Lucius.]

1 Str. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Str. Ay, too well.

1 Str. Why this is the world's soul; and just of the same piece is every flatterer's spirit. Who can call him his friend, that dips in the same dish? for, in my knowing, Timon has been this lord's father,

And kept his credit with his purse:
Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money
Has paid his men their wages: He ne'er drinks,
But Timon's silver treas'd upon his lip;
And yet, (O, see the monstrousness of man
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!)
He does deny him, in respect of his,
What charitable men afford to beggars.

3 Str. Religion groans at it.

1 Str. For mine own part,

I never tasted Timon in my life,
Nor came any of his bounties over me,
To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest,
For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue,
And honourable carriage,
Had his necessity made use of me,
I would have put my wealth into donation,
And the best half should have return'd to him,
So much I love his heart: But, I perceive,
Men must learn now with pity to dispense:
For policy sits always on conscience. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Sempronius's House.

Enter Sempronius, and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in't? Humph!
'Bove all others!

He might have tried lord Lacullus, or Lacullus;
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from prison: All these three Owe their estates unto him.

Ser. O, my lord,

They have all been touch'd, and found base metal; for

They have all denied him!

Sem. How! have they denied him?
Has Ventidius and Lacullus denied him?
And does he send to me? Three? hump! —
It shows but little love or judgment in him Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians,
Thrive, give him over; Must I take the cure upon me?

The breath is gone whereof this praise is made :
Feast-won, fast-lost ; one cloud of winter showers,
These flies are couch'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further :
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart ;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given. (Lack,
Why dost thou weep ? Canst thou the conscience
To think I shall lack friends ? Secure thy heart ;
If I would brounch the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts !
Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine
That I account them blessings ; for by these Shall I try friends : You shall perceive, how you Mistake my fortunes ; I'm wealthy in my friends.
Within there, ho !—Flaminus ! Servilius !

Enter Flaminus, Servilius, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord—
Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You, to lord Lucius.

To lord Lucullus you : I hunted with his Honour to-day :—You, to Senprouus ;
Commend me to their loves ; and, I am proud, say,
That my occasions have found time to use them
Toward a supply of money : let the request
Be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.
Flav. Lord Lucius, and lord Lucullus ! humph !
(Aside.)

Tim. Go you, sir, (to another Serv.) to the sen-tors,

(Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing,) but 'em send of the instant
A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold,
(For that I knew it the most general way,)
To them to use your signet, and your name ;
But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true ? can it be ?
Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot Do what they would ; are sorry—you are honourable,—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not —but

Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity—

And so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps, and cold-moving nods,
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them !
I pray thee, man, look cheerily : These old fellows
Have their multitude in them hereditary :

Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it seldom flows ;
'Tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind ;
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy—Go to Ventidius,—(to a Serv.) 'Pr'ythee, (to Flavius) be not sad,

Thou'rt true, and honest : ingenuously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee :—(to Serv.) Ventidius lately

Buried his father ; by whose death, he's stepp'd into a great estate : when he was poor,
Imprais'd, and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents : Greet him from
me :

Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd.

With these five talents :—that had,—(to Flav.)
give it these fellows.

To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak, or think,
That Timon's fortune 'mong his friends can sink.

Flav. I would, I could not think it : That thought is bounty's foe ;

Being free itself, it thinks all others so. (Exeunt.)

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Lucullus's House.

Flaminus waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you ; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. (Aside.) One of lord Timon's men ! a gift, I warrant. Why, this lute right ! I dreamt of a silver lute and ewer to night. Flaminus, honest Flaminus ; you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—(Exit Servant.)
—And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master ?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir : And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pr'y'st Flaminus ?

Flam. Faith nothing but an empty box, sir, which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply ; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him ; nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he ! alas, good lord ! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him on't ; and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less : and yet he would embrance no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his ; I have told him on't, but I could never get him from it.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here's the wine.

Lucul. Flaminus, I have noted these always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason : and canst use the time well, if the time use these well : good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.
—(To the Servant, who goes out.)—Draw nearer, honest Flaminus. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman : but thou art wise ; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money ; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three soldiers for thee ; good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ :

Enter Apemantus and a Fool.

Ceph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus; let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Ind. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No; 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

Ind. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Ceph. Where's the fool now?

Apem. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues and usurers' men! bawls between gold and want!

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Apeas.

All Serv. Why?

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Grammercy, good fool: How does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. 'Would we could see you at Corinth.

Apem. Good! gramercy

Enter Page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page. Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain? What do you in this wise company? How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. 'Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Fry thee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters: I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone. [Exit Page]

Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All Serv. Ay; 'would they served us!

Apem. So would I.—as good a trick as ever hangman served thee.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster, and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spurt; sometime, it appears like a lard; sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two noses more than his artificial one: He is very often like a kitch; and generally, in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lower, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exit Apemantus and Fool.]

Flav. 'Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you

aside. [Exit Serv.]

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this time,

Had you not fully laid my state before me;

'That I might so have rated my expense,

As I had leave of means!

Flav. You would not hear me, sir,

At many lectures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single advantage you took,

When my indisposition put you back;

And that unpleasure made your minister,

Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord!

At many times I brought in my accounts, Laid them before you: you would throw them off, And say, you found them in mine honesty.

When, for some trifling present, you have bid me Return so much, I have shook my head, and wept; Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you

To hold your hand more close: I did endure

Not seldom, nor so slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,

And your great flow of debts. My dear-lov'd lord,

Though you hear now, (too late!) yet now's a time,

The greatest of your having lacks a half

To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. I'm all engag'd, some forfeited and gone;

And what remains will hardly stop the mouth

Of present debts: the future comes apace:

What shall defend the interim? and at length

How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedaemon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word;

Were it all yours, to give it in a breath,

How quickly were it gone!

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,

Call me before the exactest auditors,

And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me.

When all our offices have been employ'd

With riotous feeders: when our vaults have wept

With drunken spits of wine; when every name

Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with mirth

I have retir'd me to a woful cuck, [stretches]

And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prithee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this

lord!

How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants,

Thus might exulted! Who is not Timon's?

What heart, hand, sword, force, means, has is lord Timon's!

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon!

Ah! when the means are gone, that buy this

praise,

Serving of becks, and jutting out of beams !
 I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums
 That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of drops ; Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs.

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court !
 Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen,
 I'd be good to thee.

Apem. No, I'll nothing : for
 If I should be brib'd too, there would be some left
 To rail upon thee ; and then thou would'st sin the faster.

Thou giv'st so long, Timon. I fear me, thou
 Wilt give away thyself in paper shortly :
 What need these feasts, pomp, and vain glories ?

Tim. Nay,
 An you begin to rail on society once,
 I am sworn, not to give regard to you.
 Farewell ; and come with better music. [Exit.]

Apem. So ;—
 Thou'lt not hear me now, — thou shalt not then ;
 I'll look [be]
 Thy heavens from thee. O, that men's ears should
 To counsel deaf, but not to flattery ! [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. — The same. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro ; and to Isidore

He owes nine thousand ; besides my firmer sum,
 Which makes it five and twenty. — Still in motion
 Of raging waste ! It cannot hold ; it will not.
 If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
 And give it Timon, why, the dog comes gold :
 If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more
 Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,
 Ask nothing, give it him, it feeds me straight—
 And able horses : No porter at his gate ;
 But rather one that smiles, and still invites
 All that pass by. It cannot hold ; no reason
 Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho !
 Caphis, I say.

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Here, sir ; What is your pleasure ?
 Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord
 Timon ;

Importune him for my monies : he not ceas'd
 With slight denial ; nor then silenc'd, when—
Commend me to your steward—and the cap
 Plays in the right hand there—but tell him, sirrah,
 My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
 Out of mine own ; his days and times are past,
 And my reliances on his fracted dates
 Have smit my credit : I love, and honour him ;
 But must not break my back, to heal his finger :
 Immediate are my needs ; and my relief
 Must not be tose'd and turn'd to me in words,
 But find supply immediate. Get you gone :
 Put on a most importunate aspect,
 A visage of demand ; for, I do fear,
 When every feather sticks in his own wing,
 Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
 Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.
 Sen. I go, sir!—take the bonds along with you,
 And have the dates in contempt.

Caph. I will, sir.
 Sen. Go.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — The same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Flavius, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop ! so senseless of expense,
 That he will neither know how to maintain it,
 Nor cease his flow of riot : Takes no account
 How things go from him ; nor resumes no care
 Of what is to continue ; Never mind
 Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
 What shall be done ? He will not hear, till feel :
 I must be round with him, now he comes from Fye, fye, fye, fye ! [haunting.]

Enter Caphis, and the Servants of Isidore and Varro.

Caph. Good even, Varro : What,
 You come for money ?
 Var. Serv. Is't not your business too ?
 Caph. It is ;—and yours too, Isidore !
 Isid. Serv. It is so.
 Caph. 'Would we were all discharg'd !
 Var. Serv. I fear it.
 Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,
 My Alcibiades—With me ! What's your will ?
 Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.
 Tim. Does't whence are you ?
 Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.
 Tim. Go to my steward. [off]
 Caph. Please it your lordship be hath put me
 To the succession of new days this month :
 My master is awak'd by great occasion.
 To call upon his own : and humbly prays you,
 That with your other noble parts you'll suit,
 In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,
 I prythee, but repair to me next morning.
 Caph. Nay, good my lord,—
 Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.
 Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good lord.—
 Isid. Serv. From Isidore ;
 He humbly prays your speedy payment.—
 Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,—
 Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord, six
 And past.—

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord ;
 And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath :—
 I do beseech you, [Exeunt Alcibiades and Lords.]
 I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray
 you :
 How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd
 With clamorous demands of date-broke debts,
 And the detention of long-since-due debts,
 Against my honour ?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,
 The time is unagreeable to this business :
 Your importunity ceases, till after dinner ;
 That I may make his lordship understand
 Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends :
 See them well entertained. [Exit Timon.]
 Flav. I pray, draw near.
 [Exit Flavius.]

Enter Cupid.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon:—and to all
That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses
Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely
To congratulate thy plentiful bounties: The ear,
Taste, touch, smell, all pleas'd from thy table rise;
They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let them have kind admittance.

Musick, make their welcome. [Exit Cupid.]

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how amply you're belov'd.

Musick. Re-enter Cupid, with a masque of Ladies as Amazons, with rules in their hands, dancing, and playing.

Apem. Hey day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way!

They dance! they are mad women.
Like madness is the glory of this life,
As this pomp shows to a little oil, and root.
We make ourselves fools, to dispute ourselves;
And spend our fortunes, to drink those men,
Upon whom we are wroth it up again, [not With poisonous spite, and envy. Who lives, that's depraved, or depraves! who dies, that bears
Not one spurn to their graves of their friends' gift!
I should fear, those that dance before me now
Would one day stamp upon me: It has been done:
Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of Timon; and, to show their loves, each smiles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women; a lady strain or two to the harpboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies:

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not half so beautiful and kind;
You have added worth unto 't, and lively lustre,
And entertain'd me with mine own device;
I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.

Apem. Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet
Attends you: Please you to disprove yourselves.

All Ladies. Most thankfully, my lord.
[Exeunt Capul, and Ladies.]

Tim. Flavia—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crumpling him in his humour; [Aside.]
Else I should tell him.—Well,—I faith, I should.
When all's sent, he'd be cross'd then, as he could.
'Tis pity, bounty had not eyes behind;
That man might ne'er be watch'd for his mind.
[Exit, and returns with the casket.]

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my friends, I have one word
To say to you:—Look you, my good lord, I must Entreat you, honour me no much, as to Advance this jewel;

Accept, and wear it, kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the court
Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,

Vouchsafe me a word: it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear.

I prythee, let us be provided [there:]

To show them entertainment.

Flav. I scarce know how.

[Aside.]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honour, the lord

Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you

Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Enter a third Servant.

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreates your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent you honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be re-not without fair reward. [to wit:]

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to!

He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer.—

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,

To show him what a beggar his heart is,

Being of no power to make his wishes good.

His promises fly so beyond his state,

That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes

For every word; he is so kind, that he now

Pays interest for't; his lands put to their books.

Well, 'would I were guilty put out of office,

Before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed,

Than such as do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. [to wit:]

Tim. You do yourselves

Much wrong, you hate too much of your own

Here, my lord, a trifle of my love. [to wit:]

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember me, my lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser

I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it!

2 Lord. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that. [no man]

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know,

Can justly praise, but what he does affect:

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;

I'll tell you true I'll call on you

All Lords. None so welcome.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations

So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give Thanks; I could deal kindness to my friends.

And ne'er be weary—Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich.

It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living

Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast

Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defiled land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so

Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd—

Tim. All to you.—Light, more lights.

1 Lord. The best of happiness,

Honour, and fortune, keep with you, lord [to wit:]

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt Alcibiades, Lords, &c.]

Apem. What a cull'st here!

He is gone happy, and has left me rich :
Then, as in grateful virtue, I am bound
To your free heart—I do return those talents.
Doubled, with thanks, and service, from whose help

I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means.
Honest Ventidius : you mistake my love,
I gave it freely ever ; and there's none
Can truly say, he gives, if he receives :
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare

To imitate them ; Faults that are rich, are fair.

Ven. A noble spirit.

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony
Was but devis'd, at first, to set a gloss
On faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recounting rudeness, sorry ere 'tis shown ;
But where there is true friendship, there needs
none.

Pray, sit : more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.]

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it ! hang'd it, have you not ?

Tim. O, Apemantus !—you are welcome.

Apem. No,

You shall not make me welcome :

I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fye, thou art a churl ; you have got a humour there

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame :—

They say, my lords, that tu furor brevis est,

But yond' man's ever angry.

Go, let him have a table by himself ;

For he does neither affect company,

Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine own peril, Timon ;

I come to observe ; I give thee warning out.

Tim. I take no heed of thee ; thou art an Athenian ; therefore welcome : I myself would have no power : pry'thee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat ; 'twould choke me,

for I should

Ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods ! what a number

Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not !

It grieves me to see so many dip their meat

In one man's blood ; and all the madness is,

He cheers them up too.

I wonder men dare trust themselves with men :

Methinks, they should invite them without knives :

Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.

There's much example for't ; the fellow, that

Sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges

The breath of him in a divided draught,

Is the readiest man to kill him : it has been

if I [prov'd.]

Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals : [notes:]

Last they should spy my windpipe's dangerous

Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart ; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way !

4 brave fellow !—he keeps his tides well. Timon.

[ill.]

These healths will make thee, and thy state, look

Here's that, which is too weak to be a sinner,

Honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire :
This, and my food, are equals ; there's no odds.
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS'S GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no self ;
I pray for no men, but myself :
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond ;
Or a harlot, for her weeping ;
Or a dog, that seems a sleeping ;
Or a harper with my freedom ;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amra. So fall to't !
Rich men eat, and I eat root.

[Exits and drinks.]

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus !

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alci. My heart is ever at your service, my

lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alci. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there's no meat like them ; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. 'Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then ; that then thou might'st kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you : How had you been my friends else ! why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart !

I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf ; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them ! they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for them : and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits : and what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends ! O, what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes ! O joy, 'em made : way ere it can be born ! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks ; to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weepest to make them drink,
Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in my eyes,
And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho, ho ! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apem. Much ! [Thicket sounded.]
Tim. What means that tramp !—How now !

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies ! What are their wills ?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay for thy good morrow.
When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves
Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jess. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou knowest, I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How liketh thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well, that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better, that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation: What's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Will dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O, they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st it: Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?

Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd; he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: He, that loves to be flattered, is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What would'st do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.—Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. Traffick confound thee, if the gods will not!

Mer. If traffick do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffick's thy god, and thy god confound thee!

Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv.

'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse, all of companionship.

Tim. Pray entertain them; give them guide to us.—[Exeunt some Attendants.]

You must needs dine with me:—Go not you hence.

Till I have thank'd you; and, when dinner's

Show me this piece—I'm joyful of your sight.

Enter Alcibiades, with his company.

Most welcome, sir! [They salute.]

Apem. So, so; there!—

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—

That there should be small love 'mougt these sweet knaves,

And all this court's! The strain of man's bred into baboon and monkey. [Exit]

Alci. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I

Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir;

Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time in different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but Apemantus.]

Enter Two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou, that still omit'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast?

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding; make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the 1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in,

And taste lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes

'The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of

gold,

is but his steward: no meed, but he repays

Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,

But breeds the giver a return exceeding

All use of quittance.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,

That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet served in; Flavius and others attending; then enter Timon, Alcibiades, Lucius, Lucullus, Sempronius, and other Athenian Senators, with Ventidius, and Attendants. Then comes, dropping after all, Apemantus, discontentedly.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, 't hath pleas'd the gods remember

My father's age, and call him to long peace.

One do I personate of lord Timon's frame,
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her;
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Post. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope.
Thas throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.

Post. Nay, sir, but hear me on:
All those which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value,) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Post. Ay, marry, what of these?
Tim. When Fortune, in her shift and change
Of mood,

Spurns down her late belov'd, all his dependants,
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Post. 'Tis common:
A thousand moral paintings I can show, [Tune
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fire-more pregnantly than words. Yet you do well,
To shew lord Timon, that mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, attended; the Servant of Ventidius talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?
Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;

He means most short, his creditors most strait:
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing to him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well;
I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he must need me. I do know him
A gentleman, that well deserves a help, [him.

Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free
Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his reason;

And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me:—
'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour!
[Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.
Tim. Freely, good father.
Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.
Tim. I have so: What of him? [thru.
Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before
Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius!

Enter Lucilius.

Lac. Here, at your lordship's service.
Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy creature.

By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift;
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?
Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her, at my dearest cost,

In qualities of the best. This man of these Attempts her love: I prythee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:

His honesty rewards him in itself,

It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:

Our own precedent passions do instruct us

What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?

Lac. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,

I call the gods to witness, I will choose

Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,

And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,

If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future, all. [lower.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me

To build his fortune I will strain a little,

For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter:

What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,

And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,

Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Lac. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never

That state or fortune fall into my keeping,

Which is not ow'd to you!

[Exeunt Lucilius and old Athenian.

Post. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me
Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Post. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;

For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,

He is but outside: These pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work;

And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance

'Till you hear further from me.

Post. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen: Give me your
hand:

We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel

Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jes. What, my lord I dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.

If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,

It would uncleave me quite.

Jes. My lord, 'tis rated

As those which sell would give: But you well
know,

Things of like value, differing in the owners,

Are prized by their masters: believe't, dear lord,

You mend the jewel by wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd.

Mec. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
tongue.

Which all men speak with his.

Tim. Look, who comes here: Will you be chid?

Enter Apemantus.

Jes. We will bear with your lordship.

Mec. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Athens. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Port, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Port. Good day, sir.

Para. I am glad you are well.

Port. I have not seen you long: How goes the world?

Para. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Port. Ay, that's well known: But what particular rarity? what strange, Which manifold record out matches? See, Mask'd of beauty! all these spirits thy power Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

Para. I know them both: 'T'other's a Jeweller.

Mer. 'Tis a worthy lord!

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.
 Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were.

To an unutable and continuant goodness: His passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here.

Mer. O, pray, let's see't: For the lord Timon, [that—]

Jew. If he will touch the estimate: But, for *Port. When we for recompense have grac'd the

 It stuns the glory in that Jew's verse [wks,
 Which aptly sings the good.*

Mer.

'Tis a good form.

[Looking at the jewel.]

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look you.
 Para. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some
 To the great lord. [dedication]

Port. A thing slip'd idly from me.

Our poetry is as a gum, which oozes
 From whence 'tis nourish'd: The fire it the flint
 Shows not, till it be struck: our gentle flame
 Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies
 Each bound it chafes. What have you there?

Para. A picture, sir. — And when comes your book forth?

Port. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.
 Let's see your piece.

Para.

'Tis a good piece.

Port. So 'tis: this comes off well and excellent.

Para.

Indifferent.

Port. Admirable: How this grace
 Speaks his own standing! what a mental power
 This eye shoots forth! how big imagination
 Moves in this lip! to the dumbness of the gesture
 One might interpret.

Para. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
 Here is a touch: is't good?

Port.

I'll say of it,

It tutors nature: artificial strife

Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, and pass over.

Para. How this lord's follow'd!

Port. The senators of Athens: — Happy men!

Para.

Look, more!

Port. You see this confluence, this great flood
 I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man,
 Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug
 With amplest entertainment: My free drift
 Halts not particularly, but moves itself
 In a wide sea of wax: no level'd naives
 Infects one comma in the course I hold:
 But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
 Leaving no tract behind.

Para.

How shall I understand you?

Port.

I'll unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,
 (As well of glib and slippery creatures, as Of grave and austere quality,) tender down
 Their services to lord Timon: his large fortune,
 Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
 Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
 All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer.

To Apemantus, that few things loves better
 Than to slobber himself: even he drops down
 The knee before him, and returns in peace,
 Most rich in Timon's nod.

Para.

I saw them speak together.

Port. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill, Feign'd Fortune to be thrus'd: 'The base of the mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
 That labour on the bosom of this sphere
 To prepare their states: amongst them all,
 Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,

SCENE IX. — Another Part of the Field.Enter Hector.

Hect. Most petrified core, so fair without,
 Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
 Now is my day's work done: I'll take good breath:
Rest, sword: thou hast thy fill of blood and death!
[Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.]

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;
 How ugly night covers breathing at his heels:
 Even with the veil and dark'ning of the sun,
 To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd: forego this vanage.
Greek. [seeks.]

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike: this is the man!
[Hector falls.]

So, Ilium, fall thou next; now, Troy, sink down;
 Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
 On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.
My. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'er spreads the
 And, stickler like, the armies separates. [feds]
 My half-suppl'd sword, that frankly would have Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.—
[Sheaths his sword.]

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;
 Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X. — The same.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agem. Hark! hark! what shout is that?
Nest. Peace, drums.
[Within.] Achilles! Achilles!

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!
Dio. The bruit is—Hector's slain, and by Achilles

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be:
 Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Agem. March patiently along:—Let one be sent
 To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—
 If in his death the gods have us befriended,
 Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.
[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE XI. — Another Part of the Field.Enter Eneas and Trojans.

Ene. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field:
 Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. Hector is slain.
All. Hector!—The gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail.

In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful
 Frowns on you heavens, effect your rage with speed!

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!
 I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
 And linger not our sure destructions on!

Ene. My lord, you do discomfite all the host.

Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so:
 I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;

But dare all imminence, that gods and men
 Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!

Who shall tell Priam so, or Hector's fall?
 Let him, that will a screech-owl's eye be call'd,
 Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:

There is a world will Priam turn to stone;
 Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,
 Cold statues of the youth; and in a word,
 Scare Troy out of itself! But, march, away:

Hector is dead: there is no more to say.
 Stay yet:—You vile abominable tents,

Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,
 Let Titan rise as early as he dawns,
 I'll through and through you!—And thou, great—

—and coward I!
 No space of earth shall sunder our two hates;
 I'll haunt thee like a wick'd conscience still,

That mouldeth gobins swift as frenzy thoughts.—
 Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:
 Hope of revenge shall lure our inward woe.

[Exeunt Eneas and Trojans]

As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Pandarus.

Pan. But hear you, hear you!
Tro. Hence, broker lackey! ignomy and shame

Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name.
[Exit Troilus.]

Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones!
 —O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despis'd! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a work, and how ill requited! Why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed! what virtue for it! what instance for it!—Let me see:—

 Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing:

Till he hath lost his honey, and his sting:
 And being once subdued in armed tail,

Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail—
 Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.

 As many as be here of pander's hall,

Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall:
 Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,

Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
 Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade,

Some two months hence my will shall here be
 made:

It should be now, but that my fear is this:—
 Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss:

Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for cause;
 And at that time bequeath you—my diseases

[Exit]

And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the pashed corpses of the kings
Epistrophus and Cediis: Polixenes is slain;
Amphimachus, and Thous, deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Priamides
Sore hurt and bruis'd; the dreadful Sagittary
Appeals our numbers; haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-paced Ajax arm for shame.—
There is a thousand Hector's in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
And there lacks work; anon, he's there afoot,
And there they fly, or die, like scaled sculls
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath:
Here, there, and every where, he leaves, and takes:

Dexterity so obeying appetite,
That what he will, he does; and does so much,
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulys. O courage, courage, princes! great
Achilles
Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance;
Patroclus' wounds have ros'd his drowy blood,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons.
That noiseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd,
Come to him.
Crying on Hector, Ajax hath lost a friend,
And snout at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it,
Roaring for Troilus: who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastick execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himself,
With such a careless force, and forceless care,
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus! [Exit.
Dio. Ay, there, there.
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.
Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector.
[Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?
Ajax. What would'st thou?
Dio. I would correct him.
Ajax. Were I the general, thou should'st have my office. [Troilus.]
Ere that correction:—Troilus, I say! what,

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face,
thou traitor,
And pay the life thou ow'st me for my horse!
Dio. Ha! art thou there?
Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed Dio. He is my prize. I will not look upon.

Tro. Come both, you coggling Greeks; have at you both. [Exeunt fighting]

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yes, Troilus! O well fought, my young est brother!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now do I see thee:—Ha!—Have at thee, Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.
Be happy, that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriended thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit]

Hect. Fare thee well:—
I would have been much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother?

Re-enter Troilus.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas: Shall it be?
No, by the fume of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him: I'll be taken too,
Or bring him off.—Fate, hear me what I say!
I reek not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.]

Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goolly mark:—
No! wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
I'll crush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it:—Wilt thou not, beast, abide!
Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The same.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons:
Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath;
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Embrace him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your arms.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:—
It is decreed—Hector the great must die. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—The same.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting; then Thersites.

Ther. The cuckold, and the cuckold-maker are at it: Now, bull! now, dog! Leo, Paris,
'twill now my double-browed sparrow! You,
Paris, 'twill! The bull has the game:—'ware horse, ho! [Exeunt Paris and Menelaus.]

Enter Margarelon.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.
Ther. What art thou?
Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.
Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valor, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the sun of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment: Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exeunt.]

Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergall'd with recurrence of tears;
Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra, with Priam.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall, all together.

Pri. 'Come, Hector, come, go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrap't,
To tell thee—that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

Hect. Ecceas is a field,
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. But thou shalt not go.
Hect. I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.
Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit Andromache.]
Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl,
Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector.
Look, how thou dost! look, how thy eye turns pale!

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Hark, how Troy rurs! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andronache shrills her dolours forth!
Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like witless anticks, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

Tro. Away!—Away! [leave:]
Cas. Farewell. —Yes, soft. —Hector, I take my Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive.

[Exit.]
Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim:
Go in and cheer the town, we'll forth and fight;
Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.
Pri. Farewell; the gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severally Priam and Hector.]
Alarums.

Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Pandarus.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter from yon' poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whorson picknick, a whorson rascally picknick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you out of these days; And I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were cursed,
I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she
there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart; [Tearing the letter.]

The effect doth operate another way.
Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.—
My love with words and errors still she feeds;
But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE IV. — Between Troy and the Grecian
Camp.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Therites.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another: I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan see that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, on a sleeveless errand. O the other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals,—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor; and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a blackberry:
—They set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur,
Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles;
and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarian, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here comes sleeve, and t'other.

Enter Diomedes, Troilus following.

Tro. Fly not; for, shouldst thou take the river
Styx,

I would swim after.

Di. Thou dost miscall retire:
I do not fly; but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:
Have at thee!

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!

[Exeunt Troilus and Diomedes, fighting.]

Enter Hector.

Hect. What art thou, Greek, art thou for Hestor's match!

Art thou of blood, and honour?

Ther. No, no;—I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave: a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee:—live.

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me!
But a plague break thy neck, for frightening me!
What's become of the wenching rogues? I think, they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a word, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them.

[Exit.]

SCENE V. — The same.

Enter Diomedes and a Servant.

Di. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse;

Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:

Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;

Tell her, I have chasid' the amorous Trojan,

And am her knight by proof.

Serv.

I go, my lord.

[Exit Servant.]

Enter Agamemnon.

Agam. Renew, renew! the fierce Polydamas

Hath bent down Menon: bastard Margarelon

Hath Doreus prisoner;

Ulys. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.
Ther. Will be swanger himself out on's own eyes!

Tro. This she! no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
If heavily have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide rows, if vows be sacrament,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This was not she. O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against itself!
Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt
Without perdition, and loss assume all reason
Without revolt; this is, and is not, Cressid!
Within my soul there doth commence a fight
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate
Divides more wider than the sky and earth;
And yet the spacious breadth of this division
Admits no orifice for a point, as subtle
As Achilles's broken woof, to enter.
Instance, O instance! strike as Pluto's gates:
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:
The bonds of heaven are shipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd!

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,
The fractious of her faith, ors of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and grossy reliquies

Of her o'er-esteen faith, are bound to Diomed.
Ulys. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd
With that which here his passion doth express!

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged
well.

In characters as red as Mars his heart
Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy
With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.
Hark, Greek: As much as I do Cressid love,
So much by weight hate I her Diomed:
That slave is mine, that he'll bear on his helm;
Were it a casque compos'd by Vulcan's skill,
My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Construing'd in mass by the almighty sun.
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tuckie it for his company.
Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false,
false,

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.

Ulys. O, sustain yourself;
Your passion draws ears higher.

Enter Enone.

Eno. I have been seeking you this hour, my
lord:

Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
Aja's, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. I live with you, prince:—My courteous lord, adieu:—

Farewell, revolted fair!—and, Diomed,
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!
Ulys. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept destruction thanks.
Exeunt Troilus, Enone, and Ulysses.

Ther. 'Would, I could meet that rogue Diomed!
I would quack like a raven: I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else looks fresh on: A burning devil take them.

(Exit Ther.)

SCENE III.—Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd.

To stop his ears against admonishment!

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.
Hec. You train me to offend you; get you in:
By all the everlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will sure prove ominous to the day.

Hec. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?
And. Here, sister: arm'd, and bloody in intent.

Consort with me in loud and dear petition;
Persuade him on to sleep; for I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of

Cas. O, it is true. [Laughter.]

Hec. Ho! had my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother, [Sweat.]

Hec. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows:

They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted liveries in the sacrifice.

And. O! he persuades: Do not count it holy

To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,

For we would give much, to use violent thefts.

And rob in the behalf of charity. [Trow:]

Cas. It is the purpose, that makes strong the

But vows to every purpose must not hold:

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hec. Hold you still, I say;

Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:

Life every man holds dear: but the dear man

Holds honour far more precious dear than life.—

Enter Troilus.

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight
to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.
[Exit Cassandra.]

Hec. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth,

I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go: and doubt thou not, brave boy,

I'll stand to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,

Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hec. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it. [Full:]

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians

Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,

You hid them rise and live.

Hec. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hec. How now! I how now?

Tro. For the love of all the gods,

Let's leave the hermit pity with our mother;

And when we have our armour buckled on,

The reason'd vengeance ride upon our swords;

Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hec. Fye, savage, fye!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hec. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars

Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;

Cres. I'll tell you what:
Des. Pho! pho! comma, said a pin: Yes are for-[me do!]
Cres. In faith, I cannot: What would you have
Des. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open.
Des. What did you swear you would bestow on me?
Cres. I prythee, do not hold me to mine oath;
 But me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.
Des. Good night.
Tro. Hold, patience!
Ulyss. How now, Trojan?
Cres. Diomed.—
Des. No, no, good night: I'll be your fool no
Tro. Thy better must. [more]
Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.
Tro. O plague and madness! [pray you]
Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart, I
 Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself
 To wrathful terms; this place is dangerous;
 The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.
Tro. Behold, I pray you!
Ulyss. Now, good my lord, go off:
 You flow to great destruction: come, my lord.
Tro. I prythee, stay.
Ulyss. You have not patience: come.
Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell, and all hell's torments,
 I will not speak a word.
Des. And so good night.
Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.
Tro. Both that grieve thee?
 O wither'd truth!
Ulyss. Why, how now, lord?
Tro. By Jove,
 I will be patient.
Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!
Des. Pho! pho! alieu! you palter.
Cres. In faith, I do not; come hither once
 again.
Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will
 You will break out.
Tro. She strokes his cheek!
Ulyss. Come, come.
Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:
 There is between my will and all offences
 A guard of patience—stay a little while.
Des. How the devil luxury, with his fat ramp,
 And potatoe finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!
Tro. But will you then?
Cres. In faith, I will, in: never trust me else.
Des. Give me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.]
Ulyss. You have sworn patience.
Tro. Fear me not, my lord;
 I will not be myself, nor have cognition
 Of what I feel; I am all patience.
 Re-enter Cressida.
Tro. Now the pledge; now, now, now!
Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.
Tro. O beauty! where's thy faith!
Ulyss. My lord,
Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.
Cres. You look upon that sleeve: Behold it
 well—
 He lov'd me—O false wench!—Giv' me again.
Des. Whose was?
Cres. No matter, now I have't again.
 I will not meet with you to-morrow night:
 I prythee, Diomed, visit me no more.
Tro. Now she sharpens;—Well said, whet-
 Dio. I shall have it. [stone]
Cres. What, this?

Des. Ay, that.
Cres. O, all you gods!—O pretty pretty pledge!
 Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
 Of these and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,
 And gives memorial dainties to it.
 As I kiss thee—Nay, do not snatch it from me;
 He, that takes that, must take my heart withal.
Des. I had your heart before, this follows it.
Tro. I did swear patience.
Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; 'faith you shall not;
 I'll give you something else.
Des. I will have this; Whose was it?
Cres. 'Tis so matter.
Des. Come, tell me whose it was.
Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will
 But, now you have it, take it.
Des. Whose was it?
Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women, yonder,
 And by herself, I will not tell you whose.
Des. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;
 And grieve his spirit, that dares not challenge it.
Tro. Wert thou the devil, and worst it on thy
 It should be churlish.
Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—And yet it is not:
 I will not keep my word.
Des. Why then, farewell;
 Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.
Cres. You shall not go:—Oue cannot speak a
 But it straight starts you. [word]
Des. I do not like this fooling.
Tro. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, pleases me best.
Des. What, shall I come? the hour!
Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!
 Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.
Des. Farewell till then.
Cres. Good night. I prythee, come.
 [Exit Diomedes.]
 Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;
 But with my heart the other eye doth see.
 Ah! poor our sex! this fault in us I find,
 The error of our eye directs our mind:
 What error leads, must err; O then conclude.
 Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.
 [Exit Cressida.]
Tro. A proof of strength she could not publish more,
 Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd whore.
Ulyss. All's done, my lord.
Tro. It is.
Ulyss. Why stay we then?
Tro. To make a recordation to my soul
 Of every syllable that here was spoke.
 But, if I tell how these two did co-act,
 Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?
 Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
 An experience so optimately strong,
 That doth invert th' aspect of eyes and ears:
 As if those organs had deceptive functions,
 Created only to calumniate.
 Was Cressid here?
Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.
Tro. She was not, sure.
Ulyss. Most sure she was.
Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of magic.
Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but
 Tro. Let it not be believ'd, for womanhood!
 Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
 To stubborn critics—apt, without at home,
 For depravation,—to square the general sex
 By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou fall dink of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, Adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prythee, be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now the rotten diseases of the south, the guts gripping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rutten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthumes, sciaticas, lime-kills i' the palms, incurable bone-ach, and the revell'd foe-sample of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou—what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt; you whore-son indistinguishable car, no.

Ther. No! why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sieve silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a mere eye, thou tassell of a prig-dial's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pester'd with such water-dies; diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Fiercely!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite from my great purpose in to-morrow's battle. Here is a letter from queen Hecuba: A token from her daughter, my fair love; Both taring me, and gaging me to keep As much that I have sworn. I will not break it: Fall, Greeks! fail, fame; honour, or go, or stay; My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.— Come, come, Therites, help to trim my tent; This night in banquetting must all be spent.— Away, Patroclus.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus. Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon.—an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: And the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds; a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit laried with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox: to an ox were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care; but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Therites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazar, so I were not Menelaus.—Hey-day! spirits and fires!

Enter Hector, Troilus, Ajax, Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Menelaus, and Diomed, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 'tis; There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulys. Here comes himself to guide you

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks' general.

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night.

And welcome, both to those that go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Menelaus. Achil. Old Nestor tarry; and you too, Diomed, Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Des. I cannot, lord; I have important business,

The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulys. Follow his torch, he goes

To Calchas' tent: I'll keep you company.

[Aside to Troilus.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good night.

[Exit Diomed; Ulys. and Tro. following.

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt Achil. Hector, Ajax, and Nest.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he jeers, than I will a puppet when he hums: he will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabler the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him: they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but jollery! all incontinent variets! [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Before Calchas' Tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Des. What, are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Des. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at a distance; after them Therites.

Ulys. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid, come forth to him!

Des. How now, my charge

Cres. Now my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you.

[Whisper.

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulys. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her clif; she's noted.

Des. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yea.

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulys. List!

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Raguery!

Des. Nay, then—

Through ranks of Greekish youth : and I have seen thee,

As hark as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Deepening many forfaits and subdements,
When thou hast hung thy sword's end i' the
Not letting it decline on the declin'd : [sir.
That I have said to some my standers by,

Lo, Jupiter is yonder, decking life !
And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling : 'This have I seen ;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grand-ire,
And once fought with him : he was a soldier good ;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee : Let an old man embrace thee ;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Exc. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle.
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with
time :—

Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.
Nest. I would, my arms could match thee in contention,

As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha !
By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome ! I have seen the time—

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In lion, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue :
My prophecy is but half his journey yet :
For yonder walks, that perily from your town,
You towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you :
There they stand yet ; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood : The end crows all ;
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome :
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses ;
thou !—

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee :
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles ?
Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee : let me look on Achil. Behold thy fill. [thou.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.
Achil. Thou art too brief ; I will the second time.

As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er :—

But there's more in me, than thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye ?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body [there !

Shall I destroy him ! whether there, there, or
That I may give the local wound a name ;
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flows : Answer me, heavens !

Hect. It would discredit the blessed gods, proud
To answer such a question : Stand again : [mau,

Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to premeditate in nice conjecture,
Where thou wilt hit me dead !

Achil. I tell thee, yea.
Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth, guard these wells :

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there ;
But, by the force that stithied Mars his helm
I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er.—
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,
His insolence draws fully from my lips ;
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

Ajag. Do not chafe these, cousin :—
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident, or purpose, bring you to't :
You may have every day enough of Hector.
If you have stomach, the general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be old with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field ;
We have had pelting wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector ?
To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death ;
To night, all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.
Ajag. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent :—

There in the full convive we : afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.—
Beat loud the tabourines, let the trumpets blow
That this great soldier may his welcome know.
[Exeunt all but Troilus and Ulysses.

Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep ?
Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus :
There Diomed doth feast with him to-night ;
Who neither looks upon the heavens, nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressida.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so
After we part from Agamemnon's tent, [much,
To bring me thither ?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle, tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy ? Had she no lover there,
That waile her absence ?

Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars,
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord !
She was below'd, she lov'd ; she is, and doth :
But, still, sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. I'll beat his blood with Greekish wine to-
night,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.
Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy !
Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news !
Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.]

All. The Trojans trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed; Æneas, Troilus, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Æsc. Hail, all the state of Greece! what shall be done

To him that victory commands! Or do you purpose,

A victor shall be known? Will you, the knights Shall to the edges of all extremity
Pursue each other; or shall they be divided
By any voice or order of the field?

Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Æsc. He cares not, he'll obey conditions.

Archil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight oppos'd.

Æsc. If not Achilles, sir,

What is your name? If not Achilles, nothing.

Archil. Therefore Achilles: But, what's'er, know

this;—

In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all.
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy.

This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:
In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This bloodied knight, half Trojan and half Greek.

Archil. A maiden bated then!—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter Diomed.

Agam. Here is sir Diomed:—Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and lord Æneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath: the combatants being kin,
Half stints their strife before their strokes begin.

[Ajax and Hector enter the lists.]

Ulysses. They are oppos'd already. [Hoary!]

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so

Ulysses. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;
Not yet mature, yet matchless: firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon

calm'd:

His heart and hand both open, and both free;
For what he has, he gives; what thinks, he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor diminishes an imper that with breath:

Heady as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love:

They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says Æneas: one that knows the youth
Even to his inchoes, and, with private soul,
Did in great lion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. Hector and Ajax fight.]

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tr. Hector, thou sleep'st!

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there, Ajax!

Tr. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.]

Æsc. Princes, enough, so please you.

Agam. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Tr. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more:—

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's aid;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:

Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say—This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this lay
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my father's; by Jove omnipotent, Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish member

Wherein my sword had not impressure mild
Of our rank feud: But the just gods requite,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd: Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou halt lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!

Agam. I thank thee, Hector:
Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable [yes]
(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O Cries, This is he), could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Æsc. There is expectation here from both the
What further you will do [sides,]

Hect. We'll answer it:

The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell!

Agam. If I might in entreaties find success,
(As seek'd I have the chance, I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish, and great Achilles

Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:

And signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part;

Desire them home.—Give us thy hand, my cousin;

I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Agam. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here. [name;]

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me, name by

But for Achilles, my own searching eyes

Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one

That would be rid of such an enemy;

But that's no welcome: Understand more clear

What's past, and what's to come, as stru'd with

And formless ruin of oblivion; [looks]

But in this extant moment, faith and troth,

Stand purely from all hollow bus-drawing,

Be it thee, with most divine integrity.

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. My well fam'd lord of Troy, no less to

you. [To Troilus.]

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:—

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Whom must we answer?

Men. The noble Menelaus.

Hect. O you, my lord! by Mars his gantlet,

thanks!

Merk not, that I affect the untraded oath;

Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:

She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly Hect. O, pardon; I offend. [thence.]

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,

Labouring for destiny make cruel way

Tro. Come, kins; and let us part.
Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!
Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
 And bring Eneas and the Grecian with you.
Cres. My lord, will you be true?
Tro. Who I? alas, it is my vice, my fault;
 While others fish with craft for great opinion,
 I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
 Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
 With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
 Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit is—plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter Eneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.

Welcome, sir Diomed! here is the lady,
 Which for Antenor we deliver you:
 At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand;
 And, by the way, possess thee what she is.
 Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
 If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
 Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
 As Priam is in Ilium.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,
 So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
 Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
 You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.
Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously.

To shame the zeal of my petition to thee,
 In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
 She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
 As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
 I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge:
 For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
 Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
 I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not mov'd, prince Troilus:
 Let me be privileg'd by my place and message
 To be a speaker free: when I am hence,
 I'll answer to my lust; And know you, lord,
 I'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
 She shall be priz'd: but that you say—be't so,
 I'll speak it in my spirit and honour.—no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed,
 This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.—
 Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
 To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exeunt Troilus, Cressida, and Diomed.]

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.
Ene. How have we spent this morning?
 The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
 That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault: Come, come, to field
 with him.

Del. Let us make ride straight.
Ene. Yes, w! is a brigadoon's fresh alacrity,
 Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
 The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
 On his fair worth, and single chairy. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The Grecian Camp. Lists set out.

Enter Ajax, armed; Agamemnon, Achilles, Patro-clus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and Anticipating time with starting courage. [fair.]
 Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
 Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled us
 May pierce the heart of the great combatant,
 And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.
 Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe:
 Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias cheek
 Out-swell the culick of puff'd Aquilon!
 Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout
 blood.

Thou bluv'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.]

Ulys. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not you Diomed, with Calchas'

daughter?

Ulys. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait:

He rises on the toe: that spirit of his in aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomed, with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulys. Yet is the kindness but particular;

'Twere better, she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair

lady:

Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now.

For thus popp'd Paris in his harlotry;

And parted thus you and your argument

Ulys. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns!

For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—thus, mine:

Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Patr. Paris, and I, kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir:—Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live,

The kiss you take is better than you give;

Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady! every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,

That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You filip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulys. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulys. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss.

When Helen is a maid again, and his

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulys. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word:—I'll bring you to your father.

[Diomed leads out Cressida.]

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulys. Fye, fye upon her!

There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,

Nay, her foot speaks; her waiston spiritus look out

At every joint and motive of her body.

O, these encounters, so glib of tongue,

That give a counting welcome ere it comes,

And wide unclose the tables of their thoughts

To every ticklish reader! set them down

Is as the very centre of the earth.
Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep ;—
Pen. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my pruned cheeks ;
Crack my clear voice with sobe, and break my
With sounding Troilus. I'll not go from Troy.
(Exeunt.)

SCENE III.—The same. Before Pandarus' House.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Æneas, Deiphobus, Antenor and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning ; and the hour prefix'd
Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon :—Good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk in to her house :
I'll bring her to the Grecians presently ;
And to his hand when I deliver her.
Think it an altar ; and thy brother Troilus
A priest, there offering to it his own heart.
(Exit.)

Par. I know what 'tis to love ;
And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help it—
Please you, walk in, my lords.
(Exeunt.)

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in Pandarus' House.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pen. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation ?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it : How can I moderate
If I could temperize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief :
My love admits no qualifying dross :
No more my grief, in such a precious loss.
(It)

Enter Troilus.

Pen. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah, sweet ducks !

Cres. O Troilus ! Troilus ! (Embracing him.)

Pen. What a pair of spectacles is here ! Let me embrace too : O heart,—as the goodly saying is,— —a heart, a heavy heart,

Why sigh'st thou without breaking !

where he answers again,
*Broomer thou canst not once thy smart,
By friendship, nor by speaking.*

There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have seed of such a verse ; we see it, we see it.—How now, lance !

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,
That the best gods—as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devout which Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from Cres. Have the gods envy ? (ms)

Pen. Ay, ay, ay, ay : 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy ?

Cres. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too ?

Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible ?

Tro. And suddenly : where injury of chance Fate hath leave-taking, justice roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all reprieve, forcibly prevents

Our lock'd embraces, strangles our dear vows
Even in the birth of our own labouring breath :
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one,
Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Craves his rich thievery up, he knows not how :
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to
them.

He fumbles up into a loose adieu ;
And scants us with a single fash'd kiss,
Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Æne. (Within.) My lord ! is the lady ready ?
Tro. Hark ! you are call'd : Some say, the Genius so

Cries, Come ! to him that instantly must die.—
Bid them have patience : she shall come anon.

Pen. Where are my tears ?—rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root !
(Exit Pandarus.)

Cres. I must then to the Greeks ?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woe-fall Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks !

When shall we see again ?

Tro. Hear me, my love : Be thou but true of heart,—

Cres. I true ! how now ? what wicked deem is Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly.
(the)

For it is parting from us :

I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee :
For I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart ;
But, be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My request protection ; be thou true,
And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers as infinite as luminous ! but, I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see
you ?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens !—be true, again !

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love :

The Grecian youths are full of quality ;
They're lovers, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing.

And swelling o'er with arts and exercise ;
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy

(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin)
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens ! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain then !

In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit : I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavoit, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games ; fair virtues all,

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant ;

But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil,
That tempts most dangerously ; but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think, I will ?

Tro. No.

But something may be done, that we will not ;
And sometimes we are deists to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their chancefull potency

Æne. (Within.) Nay, good my lord,—

SCENE II. — The same Court before the House of Pandarus.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle He shall unbite the gates. (down;)

Tro. Go to bed: Sleep kill those pretty eyes, And give us soft attachment to thy senses, As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good-morrow then

Tro. Prythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you weary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day, Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ruidal crows, And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer, I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Besow the witch! with venomous wights she stays

As tediously as hell; but flies the grasps of love, With wings more momentary-swift than thought. You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Prythee, tarry;—

You men will never tarry.— O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off, And then you would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. (Within.) What, are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:

I shall have such a life,—

Pan. How now, how now! how go maiden-heads!—Here, you maid! where's my cousin, Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do, and then you float me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beswore your heart: you'll ne'er be good, Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchig! hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep! a bugbear take him!

(Knocking.)

Cres. Did I not tell you?—'would he were knock'd off the head!

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

You smile, and nuck me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha! ha!

Cres. Come, you're deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.— (Knocking.)

How earnestly they knock! pray you, come in; I would not for half 'Troy have you seen here.

(Excellent Troilus and Cressida.)

Pan. (Going to the door.) Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter?

Enter Enes.

Enes. Good-morrow, lord, good-morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Enes? By my troth,

I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Enes. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Enes. Come, he is here, my lord, do not deny him;

It doth import him much, to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know,

I'll be sworn:—For my own part, I came in late: What should he do here?

Enes. Who?—nay, then:—

Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are 'ware:

You'll be so true to him, to be false to him: Do not you know of him, yet go fetch him hither; Go.

As Pandarus is going out, enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter?

Enes. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash: There is at hand

Paris your brother, and Desphobus, The Grecian Thumel, and our Antenor

Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith,

Ere the first sacrifice within this hour,

We must give up to Diomedes' hand

The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Enes. By Priam, and the general state of Troy; They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them; and, my lord Enes,

We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Enes. Good, my lord; the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity

(Excellent Troilus and Enes.)

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad: A plague upon Antenor! I would, they had broke's neck!

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! what is the matter? Who was here?

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord gone?

Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. 'Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. Prythee, get thee in. 'Would thou had'st ne'er been born! I knew, thou would'st be his death:—O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees: I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone: thou art chang'd for Antenor; thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus;

'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father:

I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me,

As the sweet Troilus,—O you gods! divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood,

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force and death,

Do to this lady what extremes you can;

But the strong base and bulking of my love

Achil. To him, Patroclus: Tell him.—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valiant Hector to come unarm'd to my tent: and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the mercannious, and most illustrious, six-or-seventimes-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you, to invite Hector to his tent!—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other; howsoever be shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o'tune thus. What mischief will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not: But I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make castles on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd; And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus
Ther. 'Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. [Exit.

Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health: But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life, With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward.—In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy! now, by Auchias' life, Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear, No man alive can love, in such a sort, The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Di. We sympathize:—Jove, let Æneas live, If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine emulous honour, let him die, With every joint a wound: and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Di. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despitelous gentle greeting,

The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of—What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you: 'Twas to bring this Greek

To Calchas' house: and there to render him, For the enfranchis'd Antenor, the fair Cressid: Let's have your company; or, if you please, Haste there before us: I constantly do think, (Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge.)

My brother Troilus lodges there to night: Rouse him, and give him note of our approach.

With the whole quality wherefore; I fear, We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you; Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece, Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help; The bitter disposition of the time

Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you

Æne. Good morrow, all. [Exit.
Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; faith, tell me true,

Even in the seal of sound good-fellowship,—Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself, or Menelaus?

Di. Both alike:

He merits well to have her, that doth seek her (Not making any scruple of her sojourn.)

With such a hell of pain, and world of charge; And you as well to keep her, that defend her

(Not palating the taste of her dishonour.) With such a costly loss of wealth and friends:

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;

You, like a lecher, out of whorish fons Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors;

Both merits poind, each weighs not less nor more; But he as he, the heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Di. She's bitter to her country: Hear me, Paris.—

For every false drop in her bawdy veins A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple

Of her contaminated carrion weight, A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak,

She hath not given so many good words breath As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do, Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy;

But we in silence hold this virtue well,—We'll not commend what we intend to sell. Here lies our way [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Street.

Enter, at one side, Æneas, and Servant with a torch; at the other, Paris, Deiphobus, Antenor, Diomedes, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there!

Des. 'Tis the lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Des. Had I so good occasion to be long as you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Di. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas; take his hand: 'Tis the process of your speech, wherein you told—how Diomed, a whole week by days, did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir, arising all question of the gentle truce:

ut when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance's heart can think, or courage execute.

Des. The one and other Diomed embraces

They clasp the lubber Ajax on the shoulder;
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I do believe it: for they pass'd by me,
As muzzers do by beggars: neither gave to me
Good word, nor look: What are my deeds forgot?
Ulys. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts aims for oblivion.

A great-sized monster of ingratitude: [your'd]
Those scraps are good deeds past: which are de-
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: To have done, as to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty nail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
For honour travels in a strait so narrow
Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons.
That one by one pursue: If you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost: Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,
Lies there for pavement to the algeat rear.
O'er-run and trampled on: 'Then what they do in present.

Though less than yours in past, most o'er-top
For time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the
hand;

And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps-in the corner: Welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue Remuneration for the thing it was; [seek
For beauty, wit,

High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world
kin.— [gawds,

That all, with one consent, praise new-born
Though they are made and moulded of things
And give to dust, that is a little gilt, [past;
More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.

The present eye praises the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might; and yet it may again.
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And cease thy reputation in thy tent;

Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. [selves,
Achil. Of this my privacy

I have strong reasons. But 'gainst your privacy
Ulys. The reasons are more potent and heroic:

'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha! known? Ulys. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Prius' gold:
Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps;
Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the
gods,

Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.
There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state:
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath, or pen, can give expression to:
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as yours, my lord;

And better would it fit Achilles much.
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena:
But it must growe young Pyrrhus now at home.
When time shall in our islands sound her trumpet;
And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing.—
Great Hector's sister did Achilles see:
But our brave Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak:
The foul sides o'er the ice that you should break.

[Exit.
Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd
A woman impatient and mannish grown [you:
Is not more lov'd than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this:
They think, my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus:
Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton
Cupid

Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?
Patr. Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honour by him

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly go'd.

Patr. O, then beware:
Those wounds heal ill, that men do give them-
Omission to do what is necessary. [selves:
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Therites hither, sweet Patroclus:
I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan leader to the combat.
To see us here unarm'd. I have a woman's longing,

An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold him visage,
Even to my full of view. A labour sav'd!

Enter Therites.

Ther. A wonder!
Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself?

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector: and is so prophetically proud of an heroical cudgelling, that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock—a stride and a stand: ruminates, like an hose, that hath no witherstick but her brain to set down her reckoning: lutes his lip with a politic regard, as who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is;
but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's done for ever; for if Hector break out his neck
'the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory.
He knows not me: I said, Good-morrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon. What think you of this man, that takes me for the general?
He is grown a very land fish, languidless, a monster. A plague of optimism! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him
Therites.

Ther. When, I? why, he'll answer nobody: he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars;
he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the payment of Ajax.

Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit.

Out of those many requesters in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What would'st thou of us, Trojan?
make demand. (tenor,

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor;
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.

Off have you, (often have you thanks therefore,) Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest in their affairs,

That their negotiations all must slack,
Waiting his manage: and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,

in change of him: let him be sent, great prince,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done, in most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither; Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Vouchsafe you fairly for this interchange:

Wish, bring you Hector will to-morrow be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Do. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

(Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.)

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands 't the entrance of his tent:—

less it our general to pass strangely by him, as if he were forgot; and, princes all,
by negligent and loose regard upon him:
will come last: 'Tis like, he'll question me,
'hy such uncomplaisive eyes are bent, why turn'd
on him;

so, I have derision med'cinable,
use between your strangeness and his pride,
hich his own will shall have desire to drink;
may do good: pride hath no other glass show itself, but pride; for supple knees
ed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on form of strangeness as we pass along:— do each lord; and either greet him not, else disdainfully, which shall shake him more an if he look'd on. I will lend the way.

Ulyss. What, comes the general to speak with
me?

Troy. I know my mind, I'll fight no more against you. What says Achilles? would he aught
with us?

Ulyss. Would you, my lord, aught with the chief?

Ulyss. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better.

(Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.)

Ulyss. Good day, good day.

Ulyss. How do you? how do you?

Ulyss. What does the cockold scorn me?

Ulyss. How now, Patroclus?

Ulyss. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ulyss. Good morrow.

Ulyss. Ay, and good next day too.

Ulyss. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

Ulyss. I they pass by strangely: they were us'd to

To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly, as they us'd to creep
To holy altars.

Ach. What, am I poor of late?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with
fortune,

Must fall out with men too: What the declin'd is,
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,

As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings, but to the summer;

And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour; but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, favour,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit:

Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that leud'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:

Fortune and I are friends; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,

Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
I'll interrupt his reading.—

How now, Ulysses?

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!

Ulyss. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here
Writes me, That man—how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without, or in,—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they report that heat again
To the first giver.

Ach. This is not strange, Ulysses.

The beauty that is born here in the face
The bearer knows us, but commends itself
To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself
(That most pure spirit of sense) behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd,
Salutes each other with each other's form.
For speculation turns not to itself.

'Till it hath travell'd, and is married there
Where it may see itself: this is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position.
It is familiar; but at the author's drift:

Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves—
That no man is the lord of any thing, (Though in and of him there be much consisting;)
'Till he communicate his parts to others:

Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
'Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverberates

The voice again; or like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this,
And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most abject in regard, and dear in use!
What things again meet dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow,—

An act that very chance doth throw upon him,— Ajax resown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!

How some men creep in skittish fortune's trail,
While others play the slits in her eyes!
How one man eads into another's pride,
While pride is fastid in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, e'en already fection in reversion shall have a praise in present : we will not name desert, before his birth ; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith : Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as, what envy can say worst shall be a mock for his truth : and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord ?

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pen. What, blushing still ? have you not done talking yet ?
Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pen. I thank you for that ; if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me : Be true to my lord : if he pinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages ; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pen. Nay, I'll give my word for her too ; our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won : they are born, I can tell you ; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart :—

Prince Troilus. I have lov'd you night and day, For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win ?

Cres. Hard to seem won ; but I was won, my lord.

With the first glance that ever—Pardon me ;—if I confess much, you will play the tyrant.

I love you now ; but not, till now, so much but I might mislead it.—in faith, I lie ;

My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown too headstrong for their mother : See, we fools !

Why have I blubb'd ? who shall be true to us, When we are so unsecret to ourselves ?

But though I lov'd you well, I wou'd you not ; And yet, good faith, I wou'd myself a man ;

Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue ;

For, in this rupture, I shall surely speak The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence, unning in dumbness, from my weakness draws My very soul of counsel : Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shut, albeit sweet music issues

Pen. Pretty, I'faith. [thence]

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me :

'Twas not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss : I am ashamed ;—O heavens ! what have I done !—

For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid ?

Pen. Leave ! if you take leave till to-morrow morning—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady ?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun

yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try :

I have a kind of self readiness with you ; But an unkind self, that itself will leave,

To be another's fool. I would be gone :—

Where is my wit ? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Forbearance, my lord, I show more craft than love :

And fell so rationally to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts : But you are wise ;

Or else you love not ; For to be woe, and love, Exceeds man's might ; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O, that I thought it could be in a woman,

(As, if it can, I will presume in you.) To feed for aye her lamp and flame of love ; To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind That doth renew swifter than blood decays ! Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me,— That my integrity and truth to you Might be affronted with the match and weight Of such a window'd parity in love ; How were I then uplifted ! but, alas, I am as true as truth's simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight, When right with right wars who shall be most right !

True swains in love shall, in the world to come, Approve their truths by Troilus : when their rhymes, Full of protest, of oath, and big compare, Want similes, truth tird with iteration,—

As true as steel, as plintage to the moon, As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,

As ivy to mantling, as earth to the centre,— Yet, after all comparisons of truth,

As truth's authentick author to be cited, As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse,

And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be !

If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth, When time is old and hath forgot itself,

When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy, And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,

And mighty states characters are grated To dusty nothing ; yet let memory

From false to false, among false unicks in love Uphold my falsehood ! when they've said—as false,

As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth, As fox to lamb, as wolf to tender's calf,

Pard to the hind, or steplame to her son ; Yes, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,

As false as Cressid.

Pen. Go to, a bargain made : seal it, seal it ; I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand : here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful guests-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all—

Pandars ; let all constant men be Troituses, all false women Cressidas, and all breakers-between Pandars ! say, amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pen. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed, which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death : away.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here, Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,

The advantage of the time prompts me aloud To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind,

That, through the sight I bear in things to love I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,

Incur'd a traitor's name ; expou'd myself, From certain and possess'd conveniences,

To doubtful fortunes ; sequent'ring from me all That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,

Helen. In love, I'faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Per. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Per. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds!—Why, they are vipers: Is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's afraid to-day?

Per. Hector, Doiphobus, Helenna, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-night, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, lord Pandarus!

Per. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Per. To a hair.

Per. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Per. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit.]

[A retreat sounded.]

Per. They are come from field: let us to Priam's hall, [you

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles, With these your white suchian [ix fingers touch'd, Shall more obey than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings—dismarm great Hector.

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant,

Paris:

Yes, what he shall receive of us in duty.

Gives us more palm in beauty than we have;

Yes, overshines ourself.

Per. Sweetest, above thought I love thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Pandarus' Orchard.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant, meeting.

Per. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him hither.

Enter Troilus.

Per. O, here he comes.—How now, how now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off.

[Exit Servant.]

Tro. Ha, Pandarus! I stalk about her door, like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks, aying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon, and give me sweet transporance to those fields, here I may wallow in the bly beds upon'd for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus, can Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings, and fly with me to Cressid!

Per. Walk here 't the orchard, I'll bring her straight.

[Exit Pandarus.]

Tro. I'm gaily: expectation whirls me round.

An imaginary relish is so sweet at it enchants my sense: What will it be,

when that the watry palate tastes indeed

'e's thrice-reputed nectar? death, I fear me;

winning destruction; or some joy too fine,

subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness,

the capacity of my fader powers:

as it much; and I do fear besides,

it shall lose distinction in my joys;

both a battle, when they charge on heaps enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarus.

Per. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does as blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were drap'd with a sprit: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain:—she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow.

[Exit Pandarus.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:

My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;

And all my powers do their bestowing lose,

Like vassalage at unawares encoun'ring

The eye of majesty.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Per. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baw!—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her, that she have sworn to me.—

What, are you gone again! you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the mills.—Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress.

How now, a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Per. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll beraise you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again?

Here's—in witness whereof the parties interchangeably—Come in, come in; I'll go get a fire.

[Exit Pandarus.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me thus!

Cres. Wished, my lord!—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious drag espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More drag than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubims; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: To fear the worst, oft cures the worst.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither!

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistresses to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined: that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: Praise us as we are bated, allow us as we prove; or head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no per-

And here's a lord,—come knights from east to west.
And call their dower, Ajax shall cope the best.
Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:
Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word! Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You do depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You do depend upon a noble gentleman; I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. 'Faith, sir, superfluently.

Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. Grace! you are in the state of grace.

Pan. You're! not so, friend; [Musick within.] honour and lordship are my titles:—What music is this!

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is musick in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love musick.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another; I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning: At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir: Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul,—

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen; Could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a complimentary assault upon him for his business seeths.

Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase, indeed!

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them! especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—Fair prince, here is good broken musick.

Par. You have broke it, cousin: and, by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance:—Neil, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen:—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But (marry) thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody; If you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, i'faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn: that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words: no, no—And, my lord, he desires you, that, if the king call for him at supper you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to-night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wale; come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say—Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy!—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Par. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twin.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, prythee now. By my truth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O, Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, i'faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love

Pan. In good truth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh, love's bow

Shoots back and doe:

The shaft crowsounds,

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die:

Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! awhile, but ha! ha! he!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! he!

Hey ho!

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied,
We come to speak with him—Ulysses, enter.

[Exit Ulysses.]

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.
Ajax is he so much? Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say —he is!

Agam. No, noble Ajax: you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your voices the fairer. He that is proud sets up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. And yet he loves himself: is it not strange? [Aside.]

Re-enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,
Unset his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only.

He makes important: Possess'd he is with great-
And speaks not to himself, but with a pride
That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
Holds in his blood such swain and hot discourse,
That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages.
And batters down himself: What should I say?
He is so plagu'd proud, that the death-tokens of it
Cry—No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—
Dear lords, go you and greet him in his tent:
'Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led,
At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!
We'll consecrate the eyes that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles; Shall the proud
lord.

That bastes his arrogance with his own sear;
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts,—save such as do revolve
And ruminate himself,—shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice-worthy and right-valiant lord
Must not so stale his pain, nobly acquir'd;
Nor, by my will, usurpature his merit,
Is empty titled as Achilles is,
Is going to Achilles:
[Let were to enlarge his fat-already pride;
and add more coals to Cancer, when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.
his lord go to him! Jupiter forbid;
and say in thunder—Achilles, go to him.

Nest. O, this is well; he rules the vein of him.
[Aside.]

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause! [Aside.]

Ajax. If I go to him, with my arm'd hat I'll press him
rer the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An he be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride:

Let me go to him.

[quarrel.]

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow.

[How he describes]

Himself!

[Aside.]

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss.

The raven

Charles blackness.

[Aside.]

Ajax. I will let his humours bleed.

Agam. He'll be physician, that should be the patient.

[Aside.]

Ajax. An all men

Were o' my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion.

[Aside.]

Ajax. He should not bear it so,

He should eat swords first: Shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half.

Ulyss. He'd have ten shares.

[Aside.]

Ajax. I'll knead him, I will make him supple:—

Nest. He's not yet thorough warm: force him with praises:

Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.

[Aside.]

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

[To Agamemnon.]

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—But 'tis before his face;

I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us!

I would, he were a Trojan!

Nest. What a vice

Were it in Ajax now —

Ulyss. If he were proud?

Dio. Or covetous of praise?

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne!

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected?

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck:

Fan'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice-fan'd, beyond all erudition:

But he that despatch'd thy arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give him half: and, for thy vigour,

Bull-bearing Mene his addition yield

To sneaky Ajax. I'll not praise thy wisdom,

Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts: Here's Nestor,—

Instructed by the antiquary times,

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise:—

But pardon, father Nestor: were your days

As green as Ajax', and your brain so temper'd,

You should not have the immence of him,

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul'd by him, lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hart
Achilles

Keeps thick. Please it our great general

To call together all his state of war:

Fresh kings are come to Troy: To-morrow,

We must with all our main of power stand fast;

walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art love the king of gods; and Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus—if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have!—which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their mussy irons, and cutting the web! After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bode-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there! Therites? good Therites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gift counterfeited, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation; but it is no matter; Thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly, and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if else, that lays thee out, says—thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen. Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay; The heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Therites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where!—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself into my table so many meals? Come; what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles;—Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Therites; Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus; Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mustest tell, that knowest.

Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool; I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man—Proceed, Therites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Therites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Therites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover.—It suffices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here!

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Therites! [Exit.]

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is, a cuckold, and a whom; A good quarrel, to draw emulous factions, and bleed to death upon. Now the dry sponge on the subject! and war and lechery confound all! [Exit.]

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill-dispos'd, my lord.
Agam. Let it be known to him, that we are. He shent our messengers, and we lay by there. Our appointments, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him.

[Exit.]
Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent; He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick; sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, his pride: But why, why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Takes Agamemnon aside.]

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from Nest. Who? Therites! [him.]

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument; Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their faction is more our wish than their faction: But it was a strong composure, a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity, that wisdom knits not, fully may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say—he is much sorry, if any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state, To call upon him: he hopes it is no other. But, for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus:—

We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, win't thou swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath; and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him: yet all his virtues,—Not virtuously on his own part beheld,—

Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss;

Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish,

Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him,

We come to speak with him: And you shall not

If you do say—we thank him over-proud [Exit.]

And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself.

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on; Disguise the holy strength of their command,

And underwrite in an observing kind

His humorous predominance; yea, watch

His pettish humors, his ebbs, his flows, as if

The passage and whole carriage of this action

Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add,

That, if he overhold his price so much,

We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine

Not portable, be under this report—

Bring action hither, this cannot go to war:

A stirring dwarf we do allowance give

Before a sleeping giant:—Tell him so.

Patr. I shall, and bring his answer presently. [Exit.]

That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Tri. What noise! What shriek is this!

Tri. 'Tis our mad sisters! I do know her voices.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hec. 'Tis Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes.

And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hec. Peace, sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled olders,

Sit infancy, that nothing canst but cry.

Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes

A moiety of that mass of men to come.

Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!

Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;

Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.

Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woe:

Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.

[Exit.]

Hec. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister work

Some touches of remorse? or is your blood

So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,

Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,

Can qualify the same?

Tri. Why, brother Hector,

We may not think the justness of each act

Such and no other than event doth fume it;

Nor once defect the courage of our minds,

Because Cassandra's mad; her brain-sick raptures

Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel.

Whom hath our several honours all engag'd

To make it gracious? For my private part,

I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons;

And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us

Such things as might offend the weakest spleen

To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity

As well my undertakings as your counsels;

But I attest the gods, your full consent

Gave wings to my propension, and cut off

All fears attending on so dire a project.

For what, alas, can these my single arms?

What propension is in one man's valour,

To stand the push and earnest of those

This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,

Were I alone to pass the difficulties,

And had as ample power as I have will,

'Tis should be'er retract what he hath done,

For faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak

As one besotted on your sweet delights:

Do have the honey still, but these the gall;

Or be as valiant, as is praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself

My pleasures; such a beauty brings with it;

But I would have the soil of her fair rape

'Tis to offend in honourably keeping her.

That treasure were it to the ransom'd queen,

Agree to your great worths, and shame to me,

To deliver her possession up,

In terms of base compulsion. Can it be,

That so degenerate a strain as this

Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?

There's not the meanest spirit on our party,

Whom a heart to dare, or sword to draw,

When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,

Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfair'd,

Where Helen is the subject: then, I say,

Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well

The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hec. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said

well;

And on the cause and question now in hand

Have gloss'd,—but superficially; not much

Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought

Unfit to hear moral philosophy;

The reasons you allege do more conduce

To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,

Than to make up a free determination

'Twixt right and wrong: for pleasure and revenge

Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice

Of any true decision. Nature craves

All dues be render'd to their owners; Now

What nearer debt in all humanity,

Than wife is to the husband? If this law

Of nature be corrupted through affection;

And that great minds, of partial indulgence

To their benumbed wills, resist the same;

There is a law in each well-order'd nation,

To curb those raging appetites that are

Most disobedient and refractory.

If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king,—

As it is known she is,—these moral laws

Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud

To have her back return'd: Thus to persist

In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,

But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion

Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,

My sprightly brethren, I propound to you

In resolution to keep Helen still:

For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence

Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tri. Why, there you touch'd the life of our

deaths:

Were it not glory that we more affected

'Than the performance of our heaving spleens,

I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood

Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,

She is a theme of honour and renown;

A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;

Whose present courage may beat down our foes,

And fame, in time to come, canonize us:

For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose

So rich advantage of a promise'd glory.

As smiles upon the forehead of this action,

For the wide world's revenue.

Hec. I am yours,

You valiant offspring of great Priamus.—

I have a roisting challenge sent amongst

The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,

Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:

I was advertis'd, their great general slept,

Whilst emulation in the army crept;

This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.

Enter Thersites.

Ther. How now, Thersites? What, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? He beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! 'would it were otherwise;

that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me:

'Shoot, I'll learn to conjure and ruse devils, but

I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations.

Then there's Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: 'a were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,—whose wit was noisily ere your grandaurs had nails on their toes,—poke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what!

Ther. Yes, good south; To, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I!

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents; I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. (Exit.)

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our host:

That Hector, by the first hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms, That hath a stomach; and such a one, that dare Maintain—I know not what: 'tis trash: Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery; otherwise,

He knew his man.

Ajax. O, meaning you:—I'll go learn more of it. (Exeunt.)

SCENE II.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent, Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks;
Deliver Helen; and all damage rise—

As honour, loss of time, travel, expence,

Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consumed.

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,—

Shall be struck off:—Hector, what say you to't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,

As far as toucheth my particular, yet,

Dread Priam,

There is no lady of more softer bowels,

More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,

More ready to cry out—Who knows what follows?

Than Hector is: 'The wound of peace is surety,

Surety secure; but moudest doubt is call'd

The beacon of the wise, the least that searches

To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tithe wail, moan, many thousand diames,

Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean of ours:

If we have lost so many tenths of ours,

To guard a thing not ours; not worth to us,

Had it our name, the value of one ten;

What merit's in that reason, which denies

The yielding of her up!

Tro. Fye, fye, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king

So great as our dread father, in a scale

Of common ounces; will you with counters sum

The past proportion of his infants!

And buckle-in a waist most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive

As fears and reasons! fye, for godly shame!

Hec. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them. Should not our father

Bear the great away of his affairs with reasons,

Because your speech hath none, that tells him

so? (priest,)

Tro. You are for dreams and alumbers, brother

You for your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm;

You know, a sword employ'd is perilous;

And reason flies the object of all harm:

Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds

A Grecian and his sword, if he do set

The very wings of reason to his heels;

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,

Or like a star dis-orb'd!—Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates, and sleep: Manhood and

Should have hare hearts, would they but fast their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason; reason and respect

Make livers pale, and lusthood deject.

Hec. Brother, she is not worth what she doth

The holding. (cost)

Tro. What is sought, but as 'tis valued!

Hec. But value dwells not in particular will:

It holds his estimate and dignity

As well wherein 'tis precious of itself

As in the prizer: 'tis mad idolatry,

To make the service greater than the god;

And the will duties, that is attributive

To what infectiously itself affects,

Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election

Is led on in the conduct of my will;

My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

Of will and judgment: How may I avoid,

Although my will distaste what it elected,

The wife I chuse? there can be no evasion

To blench from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,

When we have sold't them: nor the remainder

vands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,

Because we now are full. It was thought meet,

Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:

Your breath with full consent belied his sails;

The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,

And did him service: he touch'd the ports de-

sir'd; (tive)

And, for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held cap-

He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness

Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning;

Why keep we her! the Grecians keep our aunt:

Is she worth keeping! why, she is a pearl,

Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants!

If you'll avouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,

(As you must needs, for you all cry'd—Ga, ga, ga,)

If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize,

(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your

hands,

And cry'd—inestimable!) why do you now

The issues of your proper wisdom rife;

And do a deed that fortune never did,

Begin the estimation which you prize!

Richer than sea and land! O thef. (and base)

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes; what are they? (Hector)

Ulysses What glory our Achilles shares from
Were he not proud, we all should share with him:
But he already is too insolent;
And we were better parch in Africk sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes.
Should he 'scape Hector's furi? If he were foil'd,
Why, then we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery;
And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: Among ourselves,
Give him allowance for the better man,
For that will physick the great myrmidon,
Who brails in loud applause; and make him fall
His crest, that prodder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices: If he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still.
That we have better men. Bet, hit or miss,
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes.—
Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,
Now I begin to relish thy advice;
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.
Two curs shall tame each other; Pride alone
Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter Ajax and Therites.

Ajax. Therites,—

Ther. Agamemnon,—how if he had boils? fall, all over, generally!

Ajax. Therites,—

Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not the general run thou? I were not that a botchy cure!

Ajax. Dye,—

Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

Ajax. 'Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel thou. [Strikes him.]

Ther. 'The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mivregel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak thou, thou unsalted leaven, speak:
I will heat thee into handmeum.

Ther. I shall sound rail thee into wit and holliness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner cure an erration, than thou learn a prayer without book.
Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain
o thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. 'Tou'st stool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think, I have no sense, thou
'strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation.—

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would, thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strik'st as slow as an anchor.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation.—

Ther. Thou grumbliest and rail'st every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou bark'st at him.

Ajax. Mistress Therites!

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fat, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur! [Beating him.]

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. 'Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sudden-witted lord!
thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an aminego may tutor thee: Thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here put to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels,
thou!

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur!

Ther. [Beating him.]
Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel;
do, do.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? whereabouts do you
thus?

How now, Therites? what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do; What's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well? why I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him: for, whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what anticisms of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain, more than he has beat my bones:
I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pea master is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow.
This lord, Achilles,—Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

[Ajax offers to strike him, Achilles interposes.]

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look on
there.

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you: for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Therites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the ten-our of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary; Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impression.

Ther. Even so?—a great deal of your wit lies in your sinews, or else there he liars. Hector

And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Blasphemous as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus:

Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?
Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of
Are careousness courtiers. [Troy]

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonaire, unarm'd,
As hending angels; that's their time in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls, [accord.

Good arms, strong joints, true swords: and Jove's
Nothing on full of heart. But peace, Æneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!

The worthiness of praise sustains his worth.
If that the proud himself bring the praise forth:
But wist the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends. [Æneas]

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself
Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair. I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears not privately that, comes from Troy. [him:]

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear:
To set his sense on the attentive beat,
And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind;
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents:—

And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly, shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.]
We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy
A prince call'd Hector, (Priam is his father,)

Who in the dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown; he bade me take a trumpet,

And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords!
If there be one, among the fair'st of Greece,

That holds his honour higher than his ease;
'Tis that seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;

That knows his valour, and knows not his fear;
'That loves his mistress more than in confession,

(With transient vows to her own lips he loves)
And dare avow her beauty and her worth,

In other arms than hers—to him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,

Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a lady, wiser, surer, truer,

Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,

Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:

If any come, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,

The Grecian dances sun-burn'd, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, lord Æneas;
If none of them have met in such a kind,

We left them all at home: But we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,

That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,

'That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandure sack'd: he is old now;

But, if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire

'To answer for his love, Tell him from me,—

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver.
And in my vanbrace put this wither'd brawn;
And meeting him, will tell him, that my body
Was fairer than his grandame, and as chaste

As may be in the world; his youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Æne. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of Ulyss. Amen. [youth!]

Agam. Fair lord Æneas, let me touch your
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir! [hand:]

Achilles shall have word of this intent;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:

Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but Ulysses and Nestor.]

Ulyss. Nestor,—
Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What 'tis?

Ulyss. This 'tis:
Blunt wedges rive hard knots: The seeded pride

That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles, must or now be crupp'd,

Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil.
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,

However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is pernicious even as sub-
Whose goodness little characters sum up:

And, in the publication, make no strain.
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren

As banks of Libya.—though, Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough,—will, with great speed of judgment,

Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes,
It is most meet; When may you also oppose.

That can from Hector bring these honours off,
If not Achilles? I thought't be a spiritual combat,

Yet in the trial much opinion dwells:
For here the Trojans taste our dear'd at repate

With their first'st palate: And trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly paid

In this wild action: for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling

Of good or bad unto the general;
And in such indexes, although small prices

To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baly figure of the giant mass

Of things to come at large. It is suppose'd,
He, that meets Hector, issues from our choice:

And choice, being mutual act of all our wails,
Makes merit her election: and doth boil,

As 'twere from forth us all, a man disdain'd
Out of our virtues: Who murthering, [part,

What heart receives from hence a conquering
To steal a strong opinion to themselves?

Which entertain'd, limits are his instruments,
In no less working, than are swords and bows

Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech;—
Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector.

Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell; if not,

The measure of the better shall exceed,
By showing the worse first. Do not consent,

That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honour and our shame, in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and sphere'd
Amidst the ether; whose med'cinable eye
Corrers the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts like the commandment of a king.
Sass check'd, to good and bad: But, when the planets,

In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents! what mutiny!
What raging of the sea! shaking of earth!
Commotion in the winds! frights, changes, hor-
Divert and croak, rend and deracinate [roars,
The unity and married calm of states Quite from their fixture! O, when degree is shak'd,

Which is the ladder of all high designs,
The enterprise is sick! How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from divisible shores,
The primitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentick place!
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing
meets

In mere oppugnancy: The bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe;
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rule now should strike his father dead:
Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong.

(Between whose endless jar justice resides.)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chance, with degree is suffocate,
Follows the choking.

And this neglect of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him beneath: so every step,
Exemplary by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:

And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in her own weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
The fever whereof all our power is sick.

Agem. The nature of the sickness found, Ulys-
What is the remedy! (re-)

Ulys. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns

The sinew and the forehead of our host,—
Having his ear full of his airy fame,
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies macking our designs: With him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed, the lily of day
Breaks morrill jests;

And with ridiculous and awkward action
(Which, slanders, he imitation calls.)
He pages out us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy tupsen deputation he puts on;

And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sopped
'Tis his stretch'd footing and the staffage,—
Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,

'Tis like a oblique a mending; with terms un-squad'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd
Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff,
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolliat,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause
Cries,—Excellent!—'Tis Agamemnon just.—
Now play me Nestor;—here, and stroke thy beard,
As he, being 'drest to some oration.

That's done:—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels: as like as Vulcan and his wife:
Yet good Achilles still cries, Excellent;
'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm.

And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to court, and spit,
And with a palay-fumbling on his gorget,
Shake in and out the river;—And at the sport,
Sir Valour dies: cries,—enough, Patroclus;—
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen. And in this fashion,

All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact,
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
In such a rein, in full as proud a place

As brued Achilles: keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle: and sets Therastis
(A slave, whose gall coine slanders like a mint,)
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulys. They tax our policy, and call it coward-
Count wisdom as no member of the war; [top;
Foretell precedence, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the will and mental parts—
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
Whom fitness calls them on; and know, by measure

Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity;
They call this—bed-work, nappery, closet war.
So that the ram, that batters down the wall,
For the great swink and rudeness of his pose,
They place before his hand that made the engine;
Or the, that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons [Trumpet sounds
Agem. What trumpet! look, Menelaus.

Enter Enos.

Men. From Troy.

Agem. What would you 'fore our tent?
Eno. Is this

Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray?

Agem. Even this.

Eno. May one, that is a herald, and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agem. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one
Call Agamemnon head and general. [voice

Eno. Fair leave, and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agem. How?

Eno. Ay:
I ask, that I might waken reverence,

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past biding and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with Pan. Where? [you.]

Boy. At your own house: there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come: [Exit Boy.] I doubt, he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring uncle.—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a bawd.

[Exit Pandarus.]

Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love's full sacrifice offers in another's enterprise: [Sce.]

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be; Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing: Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing: That she be lov'd knows nought, that knows not this.—

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is: That she was never yet, that ever knew Love got so sweet, as when desire did sue: Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,— Achievement is command: ungain'd, beseech: Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon's Tent.

Trumpets. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes, What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks? The ample proposition, that hope makes in all designs begun on earth below, Fails in the promise's largeness: checks and dis-grows in the veins of actions highest rear'd; As knots, by the confux of meeting sap, Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain 'Fortive and errant from his course of growth. Nor, princes, is it matter new to us, That we come short of our suppose so far, That, after seven years' siege, yet 'Troy walls Sith every action that hath gone before, stand; Whereof we have record, trial did draw Bias and thwart, not answering the aim, And that unbolied figure of the thought That gav't surmised shape. Why then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works; And think them shames, which are, indeed, [nought else]

But the protractive trials of great Jove, To find permissive constancy in men!

The fineness of which metal is not found in fortune's love; for then, the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unlearned, The hard and soft, seem all afflu'd and kin: But, in the wind and tempest of her frown, Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan, Puffing at all, winnows the light away; And what hath name, or matter, by itself Lies, rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat, Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply 'Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth How many shallow bubble boats dare sail Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler bulk?

But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage The gentle Thetis, and anon, behold The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains Bounding between the two main elements, [cut, Like Persian's horse: Where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now Co-rival'd greatness, either to harbour fled, Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so Doth valour's show, and valour's worth, divide, In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and brightness, The herd hath more annoyance by the breeze, Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, And flies fled under shade, Why, then, the thing of courage,

As round with rage, with rage doth sympathize, And, with an accent tun'd in self-same key, Returns to chiding fortune.

Ulysses. Agamemnon.— Thou great commander, nerve and bane of Greece, Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the tempers and the minds of all Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.

Besides the applause and approbation 'The which,—must mighty for thy place and away,— [To Agamemnon.]

And thou must reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,— [To Nestor.]

I give to both your speeches,—which were such, As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece Should hold up high in brass; and such again, As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver, Should with a loud of air (strong as the axle-tree On which heaven rides,) knit all the Greekish ears [both.]

To his experienc'd tongue,—yet let it please Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be't of less aspect.

That matter needless, of importless barles, Divide thy lips: thus we are content, When rank Thersites opens his mastiff jaws, We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulysses. Try, yet upon his basis, had been down, And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master, But for these instances.

The speciality of rule hath been neglected: And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions. When that the general is not like the hive, To whom the foragers shall all repair, What honey is expected? Degree being vitiated, The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask The heavens themselves, the planets and this Observe degree, priority, and place, [centre] Insisture, course, proportion, season, form, Office, and custom, in all line of order:

love an idle head, you will eat chickens if the shell.

Pen. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin!—Indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pen. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pen. But, there was such laughing!—Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones?

Pen. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes;—Did her eyes run o'er too?

Pen. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pen. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pen. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pen. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pen. That's true; make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white; That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband? The forked one, quoth he, pluck it out, and give it him. But, there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pen. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pen. I'll be sworn, 'tis true: he will weep you, as 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May. [A retreat sounded.]

Pen. Hark, they are coming from the field: shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilum? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pen. Here, here, here's an excellent place; ere we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

Æneas passes over the Stage.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Pen. That's Æneas: is not that a brave man? 's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you; it mark Troilus: you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

Antenor passes over.

Pen. That's Antenor; he has a shrewd wit, I tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whoever, and a proper man of person:—When sees Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon: if see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pen. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

Hector passes over.

Pen. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that;

There's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector!—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pen. Is't not? It does a man's heart good!—Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there! there's no jesting; there's laying on; take't off who will, as they say; there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Paris passes over.

Pen. Swords! any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: By god's lid, it does one's heart good!—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: look ye yonder, niece: is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said, he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt; why this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

Helenus passes over.

Pen. That's Helenus,—I marvel, where Troilus is.—That's Helenus:—I think he went not forth to day;—That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pen. Helenus? no;—yes, he'll fight indifferently well:—I marvel, where Troilus is!—Hark; do you not hear the people cry, Troilus!—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Troilus passes over.

Pen. Where! yonder! that's Deiphobus: 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry.

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pen. Mark him; note him:—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece; look you, how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's; And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty? Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a maid, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris!—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Forces pass over the Stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pen. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die if the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles: a better man than Troilus.

Pen. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pen. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man; and then to be baked with no date in the pye,—for then the man's date is out.

is, as a virtue, fix'd, to-day was mov'd:
He chid Andronache, and struck his armourer;
And, like as there were husbandry in war,
Before the sun rose, he was harness'd light,
And to the field goes he; where every flower
Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw
In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this; There is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;

They call him, Ajax.

Cres. Good; and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,
And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions; he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant;
a man into whose nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour is crushed into folly, his polly sauced with discretion; there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attain'd, but he carries some stain of it: he is unselishly without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gony Bruteus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say, he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may he in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid: What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came?
Was Hector arried, and gone, ere ye came to Ilum? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so; Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were you talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too;
he'll lay about him to-day. I can tell them that;
and there is Troilus will not come far behind him: let them take heed of Troilus; I can tell them that too.

Cres. What is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O, Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector?
Do you know a man, if you see him?

Cres. Ay; if I ever saw him before, and knew
him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say: for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were.—

Cres. So he is.

Pan.—Condition, I had gone bare-foot to Ilum.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself.—'Would
'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; 'time must friend, or end: Well, Troilus, well,—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's not come to 't: you shall tell me another tale, when the other's come to 't.
Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities;—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'T would not become him, his own's
better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour, (for so 'tis, I must confess,)—Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his: he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming, a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief, Helen's golden tresses had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into the compass'd window,— and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will be, within three pound, lift as much, as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him;—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin,—

Cres. Juno, have mercy!—How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all France.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an' 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then;—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Troy. Before Priam's Palace.Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarus.

Tro. Call here my varlet, I'll unarm again:
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; 'Troyus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear be'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to Pierce to their skill, and to their fierceness val-
But I am weaker than a woman's tear,

Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance;
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skill-less as untaught infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further.
He, that will have a cake out of the wheat, must tarry the striding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the beating.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the boiling; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening: but here's yet in the word, hereafter—the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goodness e'er she be,
Doth lessen blench at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's lesser table do I sit;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts—
So, traitor! when she comes!—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rise in twain;
Ist Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have (as when the sun doth light a storm),
Bury'd this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:

But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden madness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, (well, go to,) there were no more comparison between the women!—But, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, prance her,—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not depraise your sister Cassandra's wit; but—

Tro. O, Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, There my hopes lie drown'd,

Reply not in how many fashions deep
They lie adrench'd! I tell thee, I am mad in Cressid's love: Thou answer'st, She is fair;

Thou'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice;

Handless in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,

Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure
The cynnet's down is harsh, and spirit of senses flurd as the palm of ploughman! This thou tellest me,

As true thou tellest me, when I say—I love her;
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,

Thou lay'st in every rash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus! How now, Pandarus?
Pan. I have had my labour for my travel; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you: gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what,
with me?

Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But, what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father; let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me; I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit Pandarus. As alarm.]

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this argument;
It is too starv'd a subject for my sword!

But Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me!
I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar;

And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,
As she is skilborn-chaste against all suit.

Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?

Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl:
Between our lium, and where she resides,

Let it be call'd the wild and wandering food;
Ourself, the merchant; and this sailing Pandar,

Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

[Alarm. Entry Eneas.]

Ene. How now, prince Troilus! wherefore not afraid?

Tro. Because not there; this woman's answer
For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Eneas, from the field to-day?

Ene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Eneas?

Ene. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn.
Paris is gord with Menelaus' horn.

Ene. Hark! what good sport is out of town
to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if would I might, were
But to the sport abroad;—Are you bound thither?

Ene. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together.

SCENE II.—The same. A Street.Enter Cressida and Alexander.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale,
To see the battle. Hector, whose patience

So shall she leave her blessedness to one,
(When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness.)

Who from the sacred ashes of her honour,
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth,
terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him;
Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,
His honour, and the greatness of his name: (ah,
Shall be, and make new nations: He shall flourish
And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plains about him:—Our children's children

Shall see this, and bless heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speakest wonders.

Cron. She shall be, to the happiness of England.
An aged princess; many days shall see her,
And yet no day without a deed to crown it.

'Would I had known no more! but she must die,
She must, the winds must have her: yet a virgin,
A most undisputed lily shall she pass

To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen. O lord archbishop,

Thou hast made me now a man; never, before
This happy child, did I get any thing:

'Thine oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me,
That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire

To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—

I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor,
And your good brethren, I am much beholden;
I have receiv'd much honour by your presence,
And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way
lords;

Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye.
She will be sick else. This day, no man think
He has business at his house; for all shall stay,
This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt

EPILOGUE.

'Tis ten to one, this play can never please
All that are here: Some come to take their ease,

And sleep an act or two: but those, we fear,
We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,

They'll say, 'tis naught: others, to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry—that's well!
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,

All the expected good we are like to hear

For this play at this time, is only in

The merciful construction of good women;

For such a one we shew'd them; if they smile,

And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while,

All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their ladies bid them clap.

SCENE—Troy, and the Grecian Camp before it.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy, there lies the scene From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: Sixty and nine, that wore
Their crowns regal, from the Athenian bay Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made,

To ransom Troy: within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; And that's the quarrel.

To Tenedos they come.

And the deep drawing barks do there discharge
Their warlike freightage: Now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbriused Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Prism's six-gated city,
Dardus, and Tymbria, Ilius, Chetia, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with many staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,

Spur up the sons of Troy.

Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard:—And hither am I come
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen, or actor's voice: but airted
In like conditions as our argument.—

To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vane and firstlings of these bruis'd,
'Gunning in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.

Iake, or find fault: do as your pleasures are;
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the obscure of war.

Mar. I am not Sampson, nor sir Guy, nor Colbrand, to mow them down before me; but, if I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chine again; and that I would not for a cow, God save her.

[Within.] Do you hear, master porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy—Keep the door close, surrah.

Mar. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great foot come to court, the women so beseech us! Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my christian conscience, this our christening will beget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Mar. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a huzzar by his face, for o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in his nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance. That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I missed the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, chab! when I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the browstaff with me, I defied them still; when suddenly a file of boys behind them, looking about them such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let them win the word: The devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples; that no audience, but the Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the Lamb of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days: besides the running banquet of two headless, that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too; from all parts they are coming.

As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters? These lazy knaves!—Ye have made a fine hand, fellows!

There's a trim rable let in: Are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a piece, we have done: An army cannot rule them.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads I'll lap round fines for neglect: You are lazy knaves; And here ye lie hatching of bombards, when Ye should do service. Hark, the trumpets sound: They are come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll sud

A Marshalsea, shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Mar. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll make your head sick.

Port. You't the camblet, get up o' the rail; I'll pick you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then Two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, Crammer, Duke of Norfolk, with his marshal's staff, Duke of Suffolk, Two Noblemen bearing, great standing bowls for the christening of the child; then Four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle, &c. Trais borne by a Lady; then follows the Marchioness of Dorset, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter King and Train.

Cran. [Kneeling.] And to your royal grace, and the good queen,—

My noble partners and myself thus pray All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever lend up to make parents happy, May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop. What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. [The King kisses the child.] Stand up, lord,—

With this kiss take my first blessing: God protect Into whose hands I give thy life. [Thee!]

Cran. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gumpies, ye have been too prodigal:

I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Cran.

Let me speak, sir, For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find them truth. This royal infant, (heaven still move about her!) Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings.

Which time shall bring to ripeness: She shall be (But few now living can behold that goodness,) A pattern to all princes living with her,

And all that shall succeed: She shall be never More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue, Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces, That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good, [her] Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her: She shall be lov'd and fear'd: Her own shall bless her:

Her foes shall like a field of beaten corn, And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows with her:

In her days, every man shall eat in safety Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours: God shall be truly known; and those about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, And by those claim their greatness, not by blood. Nor shall this peace sleep with her: But as when The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new-create another heir, As great in admiration as herself;

There to remain, till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?
Alc. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely trouble-Let some o' the guard be ready there. [some:]

Enter Guard.

Cran. For me!
Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gar. Receive him,
And see him safe i' the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords:
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripe of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Cran. This is the king's ring.
Sar. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Sar. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven; I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling,
'Twould fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Cran. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him!
'Would I were fairly out on't.

Cran. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, (whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at.)
Ye blew the fire that burns ye: Now have at ye.

Enter King, frowning on them; takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound
To heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that, in all obedience, makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,
His royal self in judgment comes to hear
The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations.

Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not
To hear such flatteries now, and in my presence;
They are too thin and base to hide offences.
To me you cannot reach: you play the spaniel,
And think with wagging of your tongue to win
me;

But, whate'er thou tak'st me for, I am sure,
Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody—
Good man, (so Cranmer,) sit down. Now let me see the prodigious.

He, that dares most, but wags his finger at thee:
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Than but once think his place becomes thee not.

Sar. May it please your grace,—
K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me.

I had thought, I had had men of some understanding

And wisdom of my council: but I find none.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This good man, (few of you deserve that title),
This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber door? and one as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye (since power, as he was a counsellor to try him,
Not as a groom: There's some of ye, I woe,
More out of malice than integrity,

Would try him to the utmost, had ye seen;
Which ye shall never have, while I live.

Chas. Thus far
My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace
To let my tongue excuse all. What was pur-pos'd

Concerning his imprisonment, was rather (if there be faith in men,) meant for his trial.
And fair purgation to the world, than malice—
I am sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, my lords, respect him.
Take him and use him well, he's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him. If a prince
May be beholden to a subject, I

Am, for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more ado, but all embrace him;
Be friends, for shame, my lords.—My lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me;
That is, a fair young man that yet wants baptism,
You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory

In such an honour: How may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spouse; you shall have

Two noble partners with you; the old duchess of Norfolk,

And lady marquess Dorset: will these please you?
Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,
Embrace, and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart,
And brother-love, I do it.

Cran. And let heaven
Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.
K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true heart.

The common voice, I see, is verified
Of thee, which says thus, *Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.*

Come, lords, we trifle time away: I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III — The Palace Yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man

Port. You'll leave your house anon, ye rascals:
Do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the lanier.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, ye rascals: Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones; these fire but switches to them—I'll scratch your heads: You must be seeing churlenaps! Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals!

Man. Pray sir, be patient; 'tis as much impossible

(Unless we sweep them from the door with cannon.)

To scatter them, as 'tis to make them sleep
On May-day morning; which will never be.
We may as well push against Paul's, as stir them.

Port. How got they in, and be hanged!

Man. Alas, I know not; How gets the tide in!
As much as one sound cudgel of your foot
(You are the poor remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Among boys, groome, and lackeys! But their pleasures
Must be pleas'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter, at a window above, the King and Butts.

Butts. I'll show your grace the rarest sight,—
K. Hen. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think your highness saw this many a K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it? [day.]

Butts. There, my lord:
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, amongst pursuivants,
Pages and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! 'tis he indeed:
Is this the honour they do one another?

'Tis well there's one above them yet. I had thought,

They had jested so much honesty among them,
(At least good manners,) as not thus to suffer

A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures.

And at the door too, like a post with packets,
By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:

Let them alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon.— [Exeunt.]

THE COUNCIL-CHAMBER.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk,

Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table, on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell at the lower end, as secretary.

Chas. Speak to the business, master secretary:
Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours,
The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Ger. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.
Nor. Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Ger. Yes.
D. Keep. My lord archbishop:

And has done half an hour, to know your plea-

Chas. Let him come in. [sours.]

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.

[Cranmer approaches the council-table.]

Chas. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry

I'm set here at this present, and behold

That chair stand empty: But we all are men,

In our own natures frail—and, capable

Of our flesh, few are angels: out of which frailty,

And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach

Have misdeem'd yourself, and not a little, [ow,]

Toward the king first, then to his laws, in filling

The whole realm, by your teaching and your Chaplains.

For so we are inform'd, with new opinions,

Errors and dangerous: which are heresies,

And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Ger. Which reformation must be sudden too,

By noble lords: for those that tame wild horses,

Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neigh-bores,

The upper Germany, can dearly witness,

Yet freshly pitied in our memories. [gross]

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the pro-

Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,

And with no little study, that my teaching,

And the strong course of my authority,

Might go one way, and safely; and the end

Was ever to do well: nor is there living

(I speak it with a single heart, my lords.)

A man that more detests, more stirs against;

Both in his private conscience and his place,

Defenders of a public peace, than I do.

'Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart

With less allegiance in it! Men, that make

Envy, and crooked malice, nourishment,

Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships,

That, in this case of justice, my accusers,

Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,

And freely urge against me.

S. G. Nay, my lord,

This cannot be: you are a counsellor,

And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Ger. My lord, because we have business of more moment. [pleasure]

We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness'

And our consent, for better trial of you,

From hence you be committed to the Tower,

Where, being but a private man again,

You shall know many dare accuse you boldly.

More than, I fear, you are provided for. [you,]

Crom. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I thank

You are always my good friend; if your will pass,

I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,

You are so merciful: I see your end,

'Tis my undoing: Love and meekness, lord,

Become a churchman better than ambition;

Win straying souls with modesty again

Cost none away. That I shall clear myself,

(Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,)

I make as little doubt, as you do conscience

In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,

But reverence to your callings makes me modest.

Ger. My lord, my lord, you are a secretary:

That's the plain truth; your painted glass discovers. [them.]

To men that understand you, words and weak-

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,

By your good favour, too sharp: men so noble,

However faulty, yet should find respect

For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty,

To load a falling man.

Ger. Good master secretary,

I cry your honour mercy: you may, worst

Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Ger. Do not I know you for a favourer

Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound!

Ger. Not sound, I say.

Crom. 'Would you were half so honest!

Man's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Ger. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Do.

Remember your bold life too.

Chas. This is too much;

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Ger. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chas. Then thus for you, my lord.—It stands agreed.

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith

You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;

Cran. I am fearful:—Wherefore frowns he thus?
 'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well.
K. Hen. How now, my lord? You do desire to Wherefore I sent for you. [know]

Cran. It is my duty,
 To attend your highness' pleasure.
K. Hen. My good and gracious lord of Canterbury,
 Come, you and I must walk a turn together;
 I have news to tell you: Come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
 And am right sorry to repeat what follows:
 I have, and most unwillingly, of late
 Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord, Grievous complaints of you; which, being con-
 sider'd,

Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall
 This morning come before us: where, I know,
 You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
 But that, till further trial in those charges
 Which will require your answer, you must take
 Your patience to you, and be well contented.
 To make your house our Tower: You a brother
 It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness [of us,
 Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness;
 And am right glad to catch this good occasion
 Must thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
 And corn shall fly amunder: for, I know,
 There's none stands under more calumnious
 Than I myself, poor man. [tongues]

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury;
 Thy truth, and thy integrity, is root'd
